Greensburg.—Charles Watkins of Muncie, past governor of Indiana Rotary, addressed the Rotary club. He asked for the support of the Y. M. C. A., for which a membership drive will be made here during December. Frank L. Donnell, past president of the Greensburg Rotary club, was chairman at the meeting.

Cannelton.—The second annual farmers' short course in Perry county, under the supervision of Dr. G. M. Frier, of the Purdue experiment station, will be held December 14 and 15. The committee in charge of the short course consists of Thomas J. Groves, chairman; Thomas J. Truempy, Preston Minor and William J. Gerber.

Lafayette.—Michael and John May and Alex Cohan are defending a suit which was brought some time ago by W. G. McAdoo, then director-general of the railroads, to recover $3,500, the value of steel rails alleged to have been carried away and stolen by the defendants. The case is being tried in the Tippecanoe Superior court.

Brookville.—The county council has made an appropriation of $4,000 for the widow and children of Oscar Berg, who was killed by a traction engine while crushing stone for the county. This amount was awarded by the industrial board under the workman's compensation act.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations will send one and possibly two delegates to the first annual convention of marketing associations to be held in Washington December 14, 15 and 16, P. H. Crane, secretary, has announced.

Shelbyville.—The lodge of Red Men initiated a class of 75 candidates. The Shelbyville degree team conferred the adoption degree, Winamac Tribe of Indianapolis conferred the Hunters' and Warriors' degree and Mineola Tribe, of Franklin, the Chief's degree.

Greensburg.—A consolidated high school and grade building will be built by Jackson township at a cost of approximately $70,000. The building will provide a community hall for the township.

Martinsville.—The Morgan County Anti-Tuberculosis association has elected the following officers: Mrs. J. R. Robinson, president; M. N. O'Bannon, vice president, and A. G. Rose, secretary.

Shelbyville.—The lodge of Modern Woodmen observed the twenty-seventh anniversary of its organization. John D. Voltz, president, and other state officers attended.

Gary.—Col. Thomas G. Hamilton, superintendent of the Gary street railway, was elected commander of the Gary Memorial Post of the American Legion, succeeding Roy T. Drowty.

Evansville.—The Community Chest campaign, to raise $139,000 for charitable work has been started and will continue until the money is subscribed.

Brazil.—Lance Scott, age fifty-four, a farmer committed suicide by taking paris green.

Evansville.—The congregation of the Trinity Lutheran church here has purchased a site for $9,000 and a new parochial school will be built next spring.

Vincennes.—Following the discovery of fire in the Indian Creek coal mine near Bicknell the part of the mine containing the fire was sealed. The fire did not affect work in the other parts of the mine, officers of the company said. A bad shot is said to have caused the fire.

Connersville.—A charge of involuntary manslaughter was filed in Circuit court against Edward W[illegible] of Harrison township [illegible]

Indianapolis.—Increase in rates for rural patrons of the Indiana Bell Telephone company in all cities where increased rates already have been asked is requested in an amended petition filed by the company with the public service commission, it is announced. The new rates would make the cost of a rural residence telephone $1.75 a month; rural business 'phone $2 with a charge of 25 cents for each two miles beyond the city limits of the exchange.

Elwood.—The Seventh District Woman's Relief Corps convention, closing its sessions, elected Mrs. Lila Davis, Elwood, president; Mrs. Frances Richwine, Anderson, treasurer; Mrs. Sadi Carey, Anderson, delegate to the national convention; Mrs. Cora Goar, Tipton, alternate; Mrs. Eldora McCarty, Alexandria, inspector; Mrs. Allie Vandevender, Tipton, assistant inspector. Anderson was chosen as the place of meeting next year.

Jeffersonville.—Mrs. Carrie Messener, of Louisville, has filed suit in the Clark Circuit court against Mrs. Nancy Egland, of Jeffersonville, to set aside an order of the court for adoption by Mrs. Egland of her granddaughter, Dorothy Messener, daughter of the petitioner. It is charged Mrs. Egland adopted the child and that the petitioner received no notice and did not give her consent to the adoption.

Warsaw.—All married men should bathe more than once a month, according to Judge R. R. Carr of the Fulton Circuit court. The jurist made clear his position in the matter in awarding a divorce to Mrs. Milton Alspach, who made the allegation that her husband, a machinist, seldom took a bath, and that the year around he did not average more than one bath a month.

New Albany.—Three New Albany men, J. F. Sheridan, Andrew T. Connell and Floyd Grimes, are among 55 officials of the Southern Railway company who are to be given distinguished service buttons for work performed during the shopmen's strike. Each will receive from two to five shares of common stock in the company or a bonus of $350.

Greencastle.—Fifty ministers of the Greencastle district of the Northwest Indiana conference held a conference here. Addresses were made by Dr. Henry L. Davis, superintendent of the district; Dr. George R. Grose, president of DePauw university, and Dr. U. G. Leazenby, superintendent of the Crawfordsville district.

Franklin.—Roger Loughery has been elected commander of the Edinburg post of the American Legion. Other officers are: Oscar Wertz, vice commander; Robert Gephart, adjutant; Leo McNurney, finance officer; the Rev. W. T. Jones, chaplain, and Thomas Butler, sergeant-at-arms.

Jeffersonville.—Francis Marion Griffith of Vevay was selected as special judge to try twelve consolidated cases in the Circuit court. The cases are remonstrances against an ordinance adopted by a former city council four years ago, annexing three towns and other territory.

Marion.—The Spencer Table company bought the plant of the National Sweeper works, which have been idle for several years. The plant will be operated in making dining room chairs and about 200 men will be employed. It will become a unit of the Spencer factory.

Winamac.—Articles of incorporation for the Winamac Hospital corporation were filed in the office of the secretary of state at Indianapolis. The association proposes to equip and conduct a modern hospital in this city, for the use of citizens of Pulaski and adjacent counties.

Shelbyville.—Mrs. Viola Wise was awarded damages of $3,197.50 against Lester W. Lewellen. Her husband, while working on his automobile, was struck by a car driven by Lewellen and injuries which he received, it was claimed, resulted in his death.

Contractor Has Gained 30 Lbs. on Tanlac

"Tanlac fixed me up so I gained thirty pounds. I have never seen or heard of such a wonderful medicine in all the sixty-six years of my life," declared William Magee, well-known retired contractor, 3840 Lafayette Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

"About two years ago I had a severe bladder trouble that left me in an awfully run-down condition. My appetite went back on me and my stomach got so weak I could not eat and digest enough to give me any strength. I also had the worst sort of pains across the small of my back, and could not sleep.

"I began picking up soon after I started taking Tanlac, and now I have a fine appetite, sleep like a log and that tired, worn-out feeling has all left me. I could not do otherwise than recommend Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. —Advertisement.

The Tonic.

Mrs. Smith (thoughtfully)—I'm afraid I shall have to stop giving Tommy that tonic the doctor left for him.

Mr. Smith (anxiously)—Why, isn't he any better?

Mrs. Smith—Oh, yes. But he has slid down the banisters six times this morning, broken the hall lamp, two vases, a pitcher and a looking glass, and I don't feel as if I could stand much more.

The occasional use of Roman Eye Balsam at night will prevent and relieve tired eyes, watery eyes, and eye strain. Advertisement.

"He used to give thousands to his party's campaign chest. Now he thinks he's done his duty if he hands over $50.

"He ran for office and got 200 votes out of a total of 25,000 counted. A man in his position is apt to think a contribution to his party is a poor investment."

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

An Eye to Business.

One morning little four-year-old Elwood was in the berry patch with his father.

"Elwood," said his father, "I'll bet you a penny that I can pick a quart of berries quicker than you can."

In a few minutes Elwood was quite encouraged to find that he had finished his quart first.

"Well, Elwood, do you want to bet a penny on another quart?"

"No," replied the businesslike son, "let's bet a nickel this time."

MANY PROBLEMS IN TARIFF

Knotty Points Concerning Rates of Duty That Have to Be Dealt With Judiciously.

Cakes, folding pocket scissors, marble statuary, oriental rugs, pineapples in brine, and bibulous paper, alias "blotters," are a few of the articles with which the Court of Customs Appeals will have to struggle this winter, according to the calendar of cases it has issued. The tariff gives rise to many highly technical questions that are calculated to make the most judicial mind dizzy, and which have a real significance in dollars and cents to some one. An example is the pending question whether wheat screenings are dutiable at 10 per cent as a nonenumerated manufactured article or are free as wheat. What will happen when shipments of 23,000 pounds of goats' beards, reported as passing through the Panama canal, reaches the customs there is no telling. Only those who go down to the sea in ships and make land at the customs house have an adequate idea of the oddities of international trade and the problems they present.—The Nation's Business.

HAD PICKED IT UP QUICKLY

Film Magnate Astonished by Australians' Knowledge of the English Language.

The predominance of the foreign element in New York is the subject of many jokes. At a motion picture luncheon to the press the other day, as Tommy Gray, one of the city's wits, arose to speak, he looked about.

"As this luncheon is to the press" he began, "and not to the motion picture trade, I will make my remarks in English."

Somewhat along this same line is a joke that is being told on one of the most prominent of the film magnates, who is shrewd but illiterate. Two Australians, stranded in New York, in search of jobs, managed to get an audience with him.

"So," he said, "you're from Australia? When did you come over?"

"Only a month ago," they answered.

"My," he exclaimed, "but you learned our language quick."

Wrong Pocket.

Clothed in the customary sack suit, he was fortunate enough to obtain a seat in the subway the other morning. As he put his hand into an inside coat pocket to get his glasses he missed them, but drew out instead a large pipe.

"Beautiful pipe, isn't it?" said the gentleman sitting next to him.

"Yes," he answered, "but it isn't mine. I never saw it before and can't [illegible] how it got into my pocket."

"It doesn't," the other [illegible]. "You took it from my pocket."—New York Times.

High School Notes

GENERAL:

Do not forget that this is the week that has been set aside as American Education Week. The purpose of this is to secure a closer co-operation between patrons and teachers. In order to accomplish this purpose we urge the patrons to visit the school and become acquainted with the school management.

CLASS NOTES

FRESHMEN:

We are trying to improve the "Blue Monday" situation and feel that we succeeded quite well this week.

We tried to hold a class meeting last Wednesday evening after school, but, because we were all more interested in Thanksgiving vacation plans than in our class, it wasn't so very successful.

Effects of "too much turkey" could be seen at school today.

Our study of "The Christmas Carol" is quite appropriate now during the approach of the Christmas season. W. L. B.

JUNIOR:

A good crowd was in attendance at the lesture last Friday night. The total receipts amounted to $45.00. We again wish to thank the community for their support.

Our class colors of purple and violet are now being proudly and prominently displayed on each of us. R. J.

SENIOR:

Something Free in S. J. H. S

Most subjects taken in the High School require a lot of time and toil, but in spite of this we do get graded on one subject which we do not take: This is Deportment.

Mrs. Virginia Lawson and Mrs. Nan Lysher entertained Thursday at dinner, Charles Lawson and family, Harvey Lindley and family and Mrs. George Kees and children.

Francis Hickman and family spent Thanksgiving with her parents, A. E. Bayliss and wife at Ney, Ohio. Mrs. Hickman and baby remained until Sunday.

Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Osburn and two daughters returned to their home at Albany, Saturday after visiting her mother, Mrs. Anna Dilley since Wednesday.

Howard Shilling and wife, Miss Lucile Wyler and Mrs. Adam Shilling spent Thanksgiving with the latter's sister and husband, Sim Dorsey and wife at LaGrange.

The following teachers spent their weekend vacation at their homes, Mr. Grosjean at Indianapolis, Miss Ledore Moore at Cromwell and Miss Mabelle Schmalsried at North Manchester.

Christian Church Notes

A union Bible School of the DeKalb county churches of Christ will be held next Sunday morning at the tabernacle at Auburn. A large attendance from St. Joe is desired, and ways will be provided to convey the members of the local Bible School, who are to meet at the church promptly at eight o'clock a. m.

Two very intererting meetings were held here Wednesday and Thursday evenings of last week by the Brandt-Trolinger party, who were also present Sunday morning during the Sunday School hour at which time Rev. Brandt gave an excellent illustrated talk on "The Clensing Power of Christ." After he had finished he and Mr. Trolinger left for Coburn's Corners, where they held a similar service. Rev. Dale Benjamin gave an interesting talk on "The Need of Peace in the world.

American Farm Bureau

J. S. EDWARDS, PRESIDENT
JAMES NICOL, CHAIRMAN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
C. E. DURST, SECRETARY
A. R. RULE, GENERAL MANAGER

These are the officers of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable Growers, Inc., the new grower-owned and controlled distributing organization which opens in New York City next January.

FARMERS ASKING FOR INCREASE ON LOANS

Limit of $10,000 Now Existing Is Too Low to Meet Obligations at First of Year.

Letters and resolutions from farm organizations, petitions bearing the names of every farmer in a county, and scores of personal letters from farmers in all sections of the country are pouring into the office of the American Farm Bureau Federation asking that the $10,000 limit existing on loans made farmers through the Federal Farm Loan banks be raised to $25,000.

Farmers who have large farms, they say, and who must have larger amounts to meet their mortgages, are unable to get them through the Federal Farm Loan banks. In each case the letters ask for an immediate amendment to the federal farm loan act in order to meet obligations the first of the year at which time many farm mortgages fall due.

An accurate view of the attitude of the county may be obtained by the following extract of communications which are typical of the sentiment:

"Agriculture is the nation's basic industry. Were it not for the present deplorable condition of agriculture it would seem even more than superfluous to state so patent a fact. Yet in the very face of the report of January 21, 1922, of the Department of Agriculture to the effect that the average value per acre of ten crops, constituting nine-tenths of this nation's crop production, dropped from $35.76 to $14.48, or 60 per cent, during 1919-21, a decline unparalleled within the scope of records of that department, dating back to 1866, we see agriculture prevented not only a just consideration as to credit, but denied as well a voice in the councils of credit. This, too, in the face of the fact that we farmers furnish from 56 to 65 per cent of the nation's credit. Such conditions are contrary to the laws of justice and equity, and adverse to the truer business interests of the land."—Frank Nelson, Madison county, Ohio.

If Farming Is to Live.

"The maximum of $10,000 for federal farm loans must be increased absolutely if farming is to live. Around here farmers are being closed out by the interests because of lack of funds. With $20,000 invested in my own farm, I cannot hold out much longer. I have two mortgages and they come due in different years and I am charged 3 per cent by local bankers to renew. North of here I hear it is 5 per cent. Just imagine me paying 3 per cent on [illegible] or $420 for a paper the size of this sheet, and to a shark. Get a raise. We must have it."—W. J. Cody, Brown county, South Dakota.

Wrongful Discrimination.

"We are among the [illegible]

when wishing to take up a 10 per cent interest-bearing mortgage or having to pay one under threat that is due of, say, $12,000; this is absolutely unfair discrimination against owners of larger acreage or property of larger valuation."—Lange Bros., Eddy county, New Mexico.

Help the Renter Buy.

"We are writing in regard to the suggested amendment to the federal farm loan act. We feel that the limit of $10,000 should, at least, be raised to $25,000 for at present the act does not do what it was proposed to do when it was enacted, namely, to help the renter purchase a farm for himself. It is of very little value to the person buying 160 acres or more as $10,000 will not cover the indebtedness he must assume and second mortgages are very hard to place. We feel that a loan of $100 per acre on a larger farm would be just as safe and just as sound as a loan of that amount per acre on 80 acres or less."—Noel L. Hackett, President, Monroe County Farm Bureau, Iowa.

"I notice there is a move to increase the farm land bank loan from $10,000 to $25,000. This change would be much better for all farm borrowers as all sized farms could have a chance at these loans. I would make a loan with the land bank but as their limit is $10,000 it does not do me any good. It looks like a large bond would sell as well as a small one would."—A. D. Hammons, Jasper county, Missouri.

Would Help a Borrower.

"I have a loan of $10,000 from the Federal Land bank on 320 acres. As this is not enough to clear up my indebtedness and the federal loan having first mortgage, it makes it hard to place another mortgage. An increase in the limit of farm loan as advocated by the farm bureau would be a great help to me and a number of other farmers of my acquaintance."—Levi Stephens, Canyon county, Idaho.

"At their regular October meeting, the Pocahontas county farm bureau endorsed the action of the American Farm Bureau Federation in asking congress to raise the limit of federal land loans from $10,000 to $25,000, or to have that limit removed entirely. This motion was carried unanimously. It is the general feeling in this country that some change should be made in the present federal farm loan policy, and we feel that the suggested change would be a great improvement. If the maximum loan for federal loan land banks would be increased so as to meet the average Iowa land owner's needs, it would be a great benefit to the borrower, not only from the standpoint of an increased loan from that source but as a means of stabilizing interest rates on farm loans. The board of directors of the Pocahontas county farm bureau approve of the steps which you, as president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, have taken in this matter and urge that you [illegible] to bear on congress for the [illegible]"—A. BETTER ROADS

BUILDING MORE GOOD ROADS

Completed Federal-Aid Highways Now Total 18,299 Miles—Many New Projects Started.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Nearly 6,000 miles nearer the goal of a completed system of highways for the United States is the latest report of the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. The final goal, the construction of a system of approximately 180,000 miles of federal-aid highway consisting of a network of trunk line and secondary roads reaching into practically every county is still a long way off, but we are 5,892 miles nearer than at the beginning of the year, according to the bureau.

Completed federal-aid roads now total 18,299 miles with 14,912 miles under construction, and approximately 60 per cent complete. Including projects not yet under construction federal-aid roads in all stages now total 40,338 miles.

There is no indication of any slackening of the greatly increased rate of progress which began with the season of 1921 as the states continue to pour in plans for new projects and place them under construction as rapidly as possible. Nearly twelve and one-half million dollars was obligated to new projects in June and July, and in the week ending August 5 reports were received of the letting of 68 new projects and announcements of 57 to be let.

The Photograph Shows the Great Need of Concrete Sidewalks Along State Highways—Children on Way to School Are Always in Danger From Passing Vehicles.

At the present time the force of the bureau is taxed to the limit with the examination of new plans and projects, inspection of roads under construction and the planning of the federal-aid highway system which is being gotten into final shape.

MEASURE PRESSURE ON ROAD

Apparatus Designed by Bureau of Tests of Illinois State Highway Division.

The pressure exerted on a pavement by the impact of a motor truck wheel as it passes over bumps, cracks and depressions can now be accurately determined by an apparatus designed by the bureau of tests of the Illinois state highway division. In this device the wheel load is carried on an oil cylinder three inches in diameter, the oil line being connected with a three-eighths-inch cylinder, the piston working against a coil spring. This piston is connected by levers to a stylus moving over rolling paper. The paper rolls are operated by a connection with the truck transmission, enabling the operator to determine the relation of the speed of the truck to the movement of the paper.

CHANGES IN BEEF PRODUCTION IN UNITED STATES SINCE 1850

A Bunch of Purebred Shorthorn Cows and Calves.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beef production in the United States has undergone marked changes since 1850, and chief among them is the difference in age to which animals destined for slaughter are kept on the farms. This is one of the many phases of the industry discussed in the 1921 Yearbook article, Our Beef Supply, prepared by live stock specialists and economists in the Department of Agriculture. This change is discussed in connection with variations in the demands of consumers and the per capita consumption of beef.

With a larger proportion of beef cows kept, and with cattle slaughtered at an earlier age, it is now possible to raise more beef each year than when there were more cattle in the country than at present. However, the system of using younger cattle for beef involves the use of more harvested feed per 100 pounds of beef produced, since a larger proportion of the gains in weight are made in the feed lot than was formerly the case when steers were carried four or five seasons on grass.

Situation Not Serious.

While the total number of cattle in the country has decreased in recent years, the situation is not as serious as might appear, since the number of cattle is greater now than in any year from 1896 to 1917. The census figures for 1900 and 1920 show that there has been an increase in the percentages of beef calves, heifers, cows and bulls, and a decrease in the percentage of steers, especially aged steers. The number of cattle in the country increased 10,200,000 from 1914 to 1919. During the last three years there has been a decrease of 2,000,000 head, but the greater proportion of cows at present makes it possible to grow more beef, especially if more of the calves, instead of being slaughtered, are fed out as yearlings.

That the country can readily respond to a quickened demand for beef was demonstrated during the war when production was so stimulated that during 1917 and 1918 combined more than 1,000,000,000 pounds of beef were exported, which was 7 per cent of our production and 22 per cent of the exports of the world during that period. Since about 1905 South America and Australia have been the chief sources of surplus beef.

Americans are eating less beef per capita than formerly, but the figures show that when demand and prices provide sufficient stimulus the supply can be increased at a surprisingly rapid rate. The consumption of beef and veal in the United States decreased from 87 pounds per person in 1907 to 60 pounds in 1915, a net variation of 27 pounds. Between the periods of 1907 to 1910 and 1911 to 1921 there has been a decrease in consumption amounting to approximately 20 per cent.

The article contains interesting information on the variations in demand for different kinds of beef in various cities and in the different sections of the country. High-class hotels in the larger cities want prime, fat and finished beef, while the average housewife wants beef involving less waste. In warm weather the principal demand is for steak and chops, while the winter trade demands more roasts and boiling beef. The orthodox Jewish trade uses only the forequarters, while Gentiles, as a rule, prefer hindquarter beef.

Beef Consumed in East.

A survey made in 1920 showed that at that time nearly 32 per cent of the beef was consumed in the North Atlantic states, which comprises New England, New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The next largest amount, or 24 per cent, was consumed in the East-North-Central division. In other words, more than 55 per cent of the total consumption of beef and veal occurred in the territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio river and Maryland. The smallest consumption occurred in the South Atlantic division, comprising the states of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Per capita consumption varied from 83 pounds in the western division to 39 in the South Central. The North Atlantic division, which was first in total consumption, was second in per capita consumption.

This survey of the beef-cattle situation, which includes, in addition to the discussion of consumption and present trend, information on various factors of production and marketing, leads to the conclusion that the period of liquidation is over, and that when industrial conditions and retail prices permit a normal consumption of beef, cattle producers should be prosperous again.

Advantage of Standardization Is No Longer a Theory.

Shippers' and Producers' Organizations Which Have Adopted Federal Grades for Fruits and Vegetables Are Pleased.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"The advantage of standardization is no longer a theory but an accomplished fact. Our selling price was from 15 to 50 cents per bushel higher than the other houses in this district, and the greatest advantages of a standard grade and pack will, of course, be secured in coming seasons, provided we maintain our standards."

This is but one of the many letters being received by the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, from producers' and shippers' organizations which have adopted federal grades for fruits and vegetables. The letter is from a co-operative peach shippers' organization in Ohio.

"We packed out our entire crop on the United States grades," wrote the president of the organization. "Our members are well pleased and, best of all, [illegible]

MUCH OF CORN CROP IS LOST

Weather Conditions, Ravages of Plant Diseases and Pests Destroy Fully One-Third.

According to figures compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture for a thirteen-year period, out of every hundred bushels of corn that farmers set out to grow, only 64 bushels are realized. The difference between a potential crop and the quantity harvested is due to weather conditions, the effect of seed and the ravages of plant diseases and insect and animal pests.

If it had not been for these destructive factors, the average crop for the thirteen-year period would have been 4,374,000,000 bushels, instead of 2,805,000,000 bushels, provided the same acreage were planted.

The department points out that if these elements did not exist and the corn growers were to realize 100 per cent in results, the acreage would undoubtedly be decreased and the total production would remain about the same.

THE BOLTON GIRL'S PROPOSITION

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

WHEN she said she would like to "accept a position" with our paper, it was all over between us. After that we knew that she was at least highly improbable if not entirely impossible. But then we might have expected as much from a girl who called herself Maybelle. There is, however, this much to be said in Maybelle's favor: she was persistent. She did not let go till it thundered! We could have stood it well enough if she had limited her campaign for a job on the paper to an occasional call at the office. But she had a fiendish instinct which told her who were the friends we liked most to oblige: the banker, for instance, who carried our overdrafts, the leading advertiser, the chairman of the printing committee of the town council—and she found ways to make them ask if we couldn't do something for Miss Bolton. She could teach school; indeed, she had a place in the academy. But she loathed school-teaching. She had always felt that, if she could once get a start, she could make a name for herself.

She had written something that she called "A Critique on Hamlet," which she submitted to us, and was deeply pained when we told her that we didn't care for editorial matter; that what our paper needed was the names of the people in our own country town and county, printed as many times a day or a week or a month as they could be put into type. We tried to tell her that more important to us than the influence of the Celtic element on our national life and literature was the fact that John Jones of Lebo—that is to say, red John, as distinguished from black John—or Jones the tinner, or Jones of the Possum Holler settlement was in town with a load of hay. "Other papers," we explained carefully, while she looked as sympathetic and intelligent as a collie, "other papers might be interested in the radio-activity of uranium X; they might care to print articles on the psychological phenomena of mobs"—to which she snapped eager agreement with her eyes—"others, with entire propriety, might be interested in inorganic evolution"—and she cheeped "yes, yes" with feverish intensity—"but in our little local paper we cared only for the person who could tell our readers with the most delicacy and precision how many spoons Mrs. Worthington had to borrow for her party, who had the largest number of finger-bowls in town, what Mrs. Conklin paid for the broilers she served at her party last February, and the name of the country woman who raised them, and why it was that all the women failed to make Jennie's recipe for sunshine cake work when they tried it." Such are the things that interest our people, and he, she or it who can turn in two or three columns a day of items setting forth these things in a good-natured way, so that the persons mentioned will only grin and wonder who told it, is good for ten dollars of our money every Saturday night.

Maybelle thought it was such interesting work, and her eyes floated in tears of happiness at the thought of such joy. If she could only have a chance! It would be just lovely—simply grand, and she knew she could do it! Something in her innermost soul thrilled with a tintinabulation that made her quiver with anticipation. Whereupon she went out and came back in three days with five sheets of foolscap on which she had written an article beginning: "When Memory draws aside the curtains of her magic chamber, revealing the pictures meditation paints, and we see through the windows of our dreams the sweet vale of yesterday, lying outside and beyond; when stern Ambition, with relentless hand, turns us away from all this to ride in the somber chariot of Duty—then it is that entrancing Pleasure beckons us back to sit by Memory's fire and sip our tea with Maiden meditation." What it was all about no one ever found out; but the Young Prince at the local desk who read it clear through said that sometimes he thought that it was a report of a fire and at other times it seemed like a dress-goods catalogue. It would have made four columns. As he put the roll back in the drawer the Young Prince rose and paced grandly out. At the front door he stopped and said; You'll never make anything out of her—she's a handholder! When a girl begins to get corns on her hands, I notice she has mush on the brain!"

But Maybelle returned, and we went all over the same ground again. We explained that what we wanted was short items—two or three lines each—little references to home doings; something telling who has company, who is sick, who is putting shingles on the barn or an "L" on the house. [illegible] said "Oh, yes" [illegible] it seemed as though she would work or put her front foot on the [illegible]. One felt like [illegible] in his hands and [illegible].

the list of officers nor the names of the choir because they were all people who lived here and everyone knew them. Then we explained in short, simple sentences that the sermons were of no value, and that the names were what we desired. She dropped her eyes and said meekly, "Oh!" and told us how sorry she was. Also she said that if it wasn't for a meeting of the T. T. T. girls that afternoon she would go back and get the names. When she went out, the Young Prince, sitting by the window with his pencil behind his ear and his feet on the table, said: "I bet she can make the grandest fudge!" "And such lovely angel food," put in Miss Larrabee, who was busy writing up the Epworth league convention.

Miss Bolton's name was always among the lists we printed of the guests at the Entre Nous Card club, the Imperial Dancing club, the "Giddy Young Things" club, the Art club and and Shakespeare club. But when she came to the office she was full of anxiety at the frivolity of society. She said that she longed for intellectual companionship; that she felt sometimes as if she must fly to a place where she could find a soul that would feel in unison with the infinite that thrilled in her being. Far be it from her to wish to coin the pulsations of her soul, but papa and mamma did need her help so. She accented papa and mamma on the last syllable and leaned forward and looked upward like a shirtwaist Madonna. But writing locals someway didn't appeal to her. She wondered if we could use a serial story. And then she went on: "Oh, I have some of the sweetest things in my head! I know I could write them. They just tingle through my blood like wine. I know I could write them—such sublime things—but when I sit down to put them on paper something always comes up that prevents my going on with them. There are dozens whirling through my brain begging to be written. There is one about the earl who has imprisoned the young princess in a dungeon, and her lover, a knight of the cross, comes home from a crusade and is put in the cell next to her. A bird that she has been feeding through her prison window takes a lock of her golden hair to the window where her lover is looking out across the beautiful world, not knowing that she, too, has fallen into the earl's clutches. And, oh, yes! there is another about Cornelia who lived in a moated tower, and all the dukes and lords and kings in the land had laid suit to her hand, and she could find none who came up to her highest ideal, so she set them a task—and, oh, a lot more about what they did; I haven't thought that out—but anyway she married the Red Duke, Wolfang, who spurned her task and took her by night with his retainers away from the tower, saying her love was his Holy Grail and to get her was the object of his pilgrimage. Oh, it's just grand."

No, we don't use serials and when we do we buy them in stereotyped plates by the pound. This made Miss Bolton droop, with another disappointed "Oh." The grain of the world seems so coarse when one looks at it closely.

We did not see Miss Bolton at the office for a long time after the duke abducted the lady in the moated grange, but we received a poem signed M. B. "To Dan Cupid," and another on "My Heart of Fire." Also there came an anonymous communication in strangely familiar fat vertical handwriting to the effect that "some people in this town think that if a young lady has a gentleman friend call on her more than twice a week it is their business to assume a courtship. They should know that there are souls on this earth whose tendrils reach into the infinite beyond the gross materiality of this mundane sphere to a destiny beyond the stars." At the bottom of the page were the words: "Please punish and oblige a subscriber."

The next that we heard of Miss Bolton was that she was [illegible] and blue [illegible] white things, and [illegible] shower from the T. T. T. [illegible] shower from the "Giddy Young Things" [illegible] a handkerchief shower from the [illegible] [illegible] ment that Maybelle had used five hundred yards of baby-ribbon—pink and blue and white and yellow—in her trousseau, and that she was bestowing the same passionate fervor on her hemstitching and tucking that she had wasted on literature; that she was helping papa and mamma by shouldering the biggest wedding on them since the Tomlinsons went into bankruptcy after their fireworks ceremonial. Miss Larrabee said that Papa Bolton's livery-stable was burning up so fast that she wanted to call out the fire department, and that Mamma Bolton made her think of the patent-medicine testimonials we printed from "poor tired women."

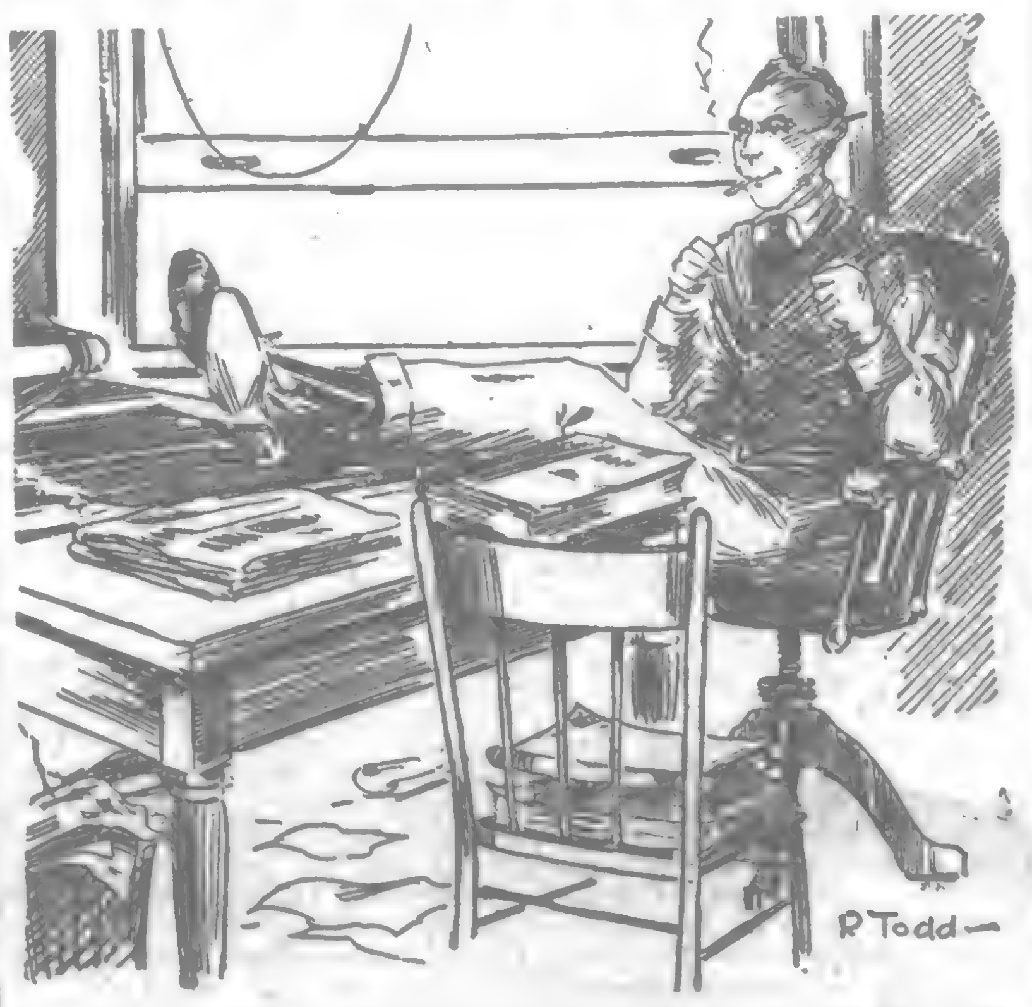
The day of the wedding the blow came. A very starched-up little boy with strawberry juice frescoed around his mouth brought in a note from Maybelle and a tightly rolled manuscript tied with baby-blue ribbon. In the note she said that she thought it would be so romantic to "write up her own wedding—recalling the dear, dead days when she was a neophyte in letters." We handed the manuscript to Miss Larrabee, from whom, as she read, came snorts: "'Drawing-room!' Huh! 'Music-room.' Heavens to Betsy! 'Peculiar style of beauty!' Oh, joy! 'Looked like a wood-nymph in the morn.' Wouldn't that saturate you! 'The Apollo-like beauty of the groom.'" Miss Larrabee groaned as she rose, and putting her raincoat on the floor by her chair she exclaimed: "Do you people know what I am going to do? I have got to lie right down here and have a fit!"



"Sitting by the Window With His Pencil Behind His Ear and His Feet on the Table, Said: "I Bet She Can Make the Grandest Fudge!""

Absent-Minded Lawyer.

A prominent and successful lawyer in Virginia afforded his friends much amusement by his absentmindedness. On reaching the court house one morning he failed to find his eyeglasses in their accustomed pocket. He searched hurriedly and then as best he could without them wrote to his wife: "Please send my eyeglasses by bearer. I think I left them on the table in living room."

He called a messenger, handed the note to him and gave him directions how to deliver it. Turning away, still feeling in his pockets, he found the glasses, which he had overlooked in his haste. He hastily recalled the boy and, adjusting his glasses, took the note and added, "Have just found my glasses in another pocket." Then he handed the note back to the messenger and said, "Lose no time; see Mrs. Anderson herself and wait for package; bring to me here and ask for Mr. Anderson at the door."

Canceled Check as Receipt.

This is a banker's answer as to whether a canceled check is evidence of payment.

A check is not a payment. It is merely an order to make a payment. An indorsed and canceled check is valid legal evidence that payment has been made, provided there is no overcoming evidence to the contrary.

If it is made clear that the receiver of the check has not, in fact, received payment, then the endorsed check, marked paid, is not, in fact, acceptable evidence that payment has been made.

When a bank pays a check it goes on the assumption that the man who receives the money as well as the man who draws the check is responsible, and therefore, if the check proves to be not good, the man who received the money is held responsible. He, in turn, must look to the maker of the check.

Belated Knowledge.

The preacher was Scotch, and of the old school, who believed in a physical hell, and he was preaching one of the good, old-fashioned, fire-and-brimstone sermons. With awe-inspiring gestures and [illegible] pulpit pounding, he brought a particularly fiery discourse to a triumphant close with something like the following:

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 10

THE STORY OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Lev. 19:18.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Showing Kindness to a Stranger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of the Good Samaritan.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Being a Good Neighbor.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Who Is My Neighbor?

I. How to Inherit Eternal Life (vv. 25-28).

1. The Lawyer's Question (v. 29). "Lawyer" here means one versed in religious law—the Scriptures. This does not mean lawyer in our modern sense of that term. It would more nearly correspond to a theological professor. The lawyer's object was to trap Jesus—to induce Him to take such a stand as would weaken His influence as a teacher. He expected Jesus to set forth some new ceremonies which would conflict with or disparage the law.

2. Jesus' Question (v. 26). Though Jesus knew the motive of the lawyer He did not evade his question. He sent him to the law—the field which was familiar to him. He thus was robbed of his own weapon.

3. The Lawyer's Reply (v. 27). He made an intelligent answer declaring that the entire content of the law was embraced in love to God and man. This expresses the whole of human duty.

4. Jesus Reply (v. 28.) This straightforward answer went to the heart of the lawyer. Perfect love to God and man is truly the way of life. No man has yet had or can have such love. His sinful condition precludes its possibility. Man's failure to measure up to this requirement is his condemnation. The lawyer keenly felt this thrust. He was defeated on his own grounds and convicted of guilt.

II. Who Is My Neighbor (vv. 29-37).

1. The Lawyer's Question (v. 29). This question reveals the insincerity of the lawyer. Christ's answer had reached his conscience and now he seeks to escape the difficulty by asking a captious question. Lawyer-like he sought to get off by raising a question as to the meaning of words.

2. Jesus' Answer (vv. 30-37). Christ's reply more than answered the lawyer's question. In the parable of the Good Samaritan He makes clear who is a neighbor, and also what it means to be a neighbor, or what loving a neighbor means. Christ's answer had a double meaning. He not only made clear who is my neighbor, but made it clear that the lawyer was not playing the neighbor. He thus was convicted of not having been a neighbor.

(1) Who is my neighbor? This destitute and wounded man left on the highway by the robbers is the man who needs a neighbor. My neighbor, therefore, is the one who needs my help, whether he lives next door or on the outside of the world. Those who have the Spirit of Christ can see their neighbors on every hand. (2) What being a neighbor means. Our supreme concern should not be "Who is my neighbor?" but "Whose neighbor am I?" To be a neighbor is (a) to see those about us who need help (v. 33). Love is keen to discern need. We should be on the lookout for those in need of our help. (b) Have compassion on the needy (v. 33). Christ's compassion was aroused as He came into contact with those who were suffering and in need. All those who have His nature will be likewise moved. (c) Give to those in need (v. 34). Many are willing to give money to help the poor and needy, but are unwilling to personally minister to them. Many times the personal touch is more important than the material aid. We should give ourselves as well as our money. (d) Bind up wounds (v. 34). (e) Set the helpless ones on our beasts while we walk (v. 34). This is proof that love is genuine. Christians will deny themselves in order to have something to give to those who have need. This kind of sympathy is greatly needed today. (f) Bring to the inn and take care of the unfortunate (v. 34). Genuine love does not leave its service incomplete. Much Christian service is spasmodic, begins and then leaves a man to take care of himself. (g) Give money (v. 35). It costs a good deal to be a neighbor. Love is the most expensive thing in the world. It cost God His only Son. It cost Christ His life. [illegible] likewise!

Good Taste in Milady's Dress

From many quarters one hears the fate of fashions bemoaned, writes a correspondent in the New York Tribune. From all sides comes the cry, "Where are the new styles? Our dressmakers are offering us nothing new. The only points in dress that one can talk about and worry about as differing from those of last year lie in the length of skirts, in the shape of necklines or whether sleeves will be full or tightfitting." But these criticisms that one hears of present-day fashions may be converted into praise of the good judgment of our designers, who, through the last few years, have come to realize that the day when sensational upheavals in dress could be achieved has passed.

Good taste in dress has developed to such an extent that the bizarre and the really novel receive but an indifferent reception. The percentage of smartly dressed women is ever on the increase, and the number of those who desire to be conspicuous constantly decreasing.

Those who make clothes have not pursued the line of least resistance. Close study of their modes shows that under apparent simplicity lies a clever complication of cut.

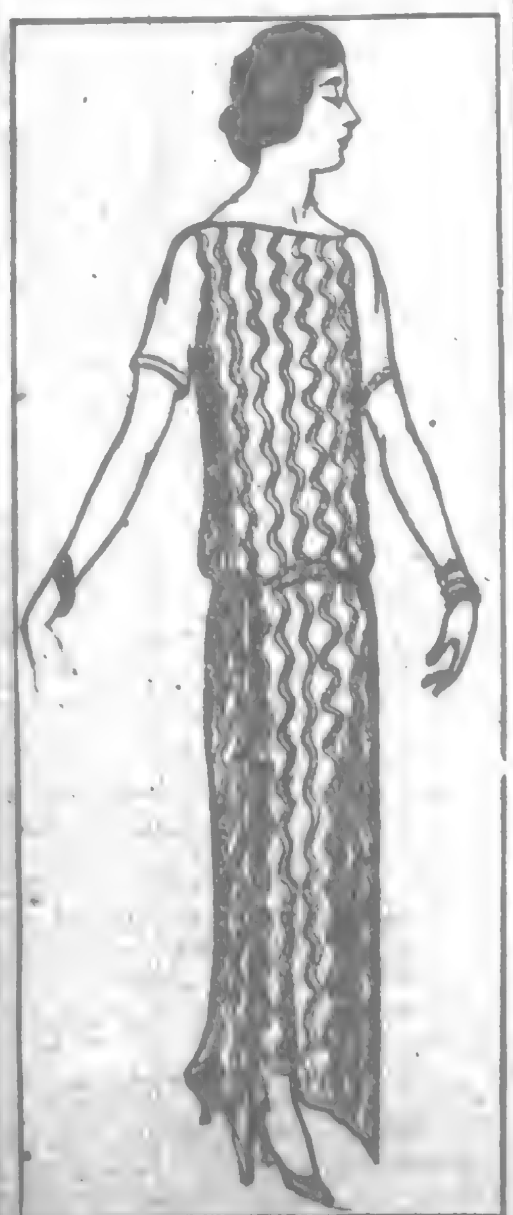
Straight Skirt Swathes Hips.

There are innumerable clever ways of cutting garments which reveal the hand of the master maker. The way in which the circular godet is introduced is an example of this. During the last few years there has been a persistent endeavor to introduce full skirts. Realizing that a fashion is a thing of slow development, dressmakers have pressed this point in subtle and unobtrusive ways. They are still endeavoring to bring the full skirt forward, and it is safe to predict that the success of the full skirt is assured, but its success will not be an immediate one. It will be two or three years before we will see it replace the much-liked model of slimmer outline.

One of the cleverest ideas which has been widely taken up this season is that of making the simple one-piece dress the basis of the three-piece suit by means of a skirt which is really nothing more than a straight piece of cloth wrapped around the body below the hips and fastened with a large button or buckle. The cloth skirt is usually open down the left side to reveal the underdress in the form of a panel. This costume is completed by a short jacket which either matches the skirt or is of a combination of the cloth and fur. In some instances the jacket is made entirely of fur.

Dress of Several Different Fabrics.

A French model of this type is developed in a honeycomb worsted in two tones, rust red and golden tan, and trimmed with beaver fur. The material is interestingly worked with stitched bands, which trim both the jacket and the skirt. It has a straight-line, snugly fitting jacket.



Afternoon Dress of Castor-Colored Crepe Covered With Trimming of Narrow Faille Ribbon.

Gowns made of several different materials in blending shades of one color are a feature of the new fashions. A model of this sort made by Drecoll is a Japanese type of dinner gown developed in purple, mauve and silver. The draped skirt is of purple velvet in a very deep tone; the bodice is of mauve [illegible]. The broad girdle and [illegible] are of a reddish purple and [illegible].

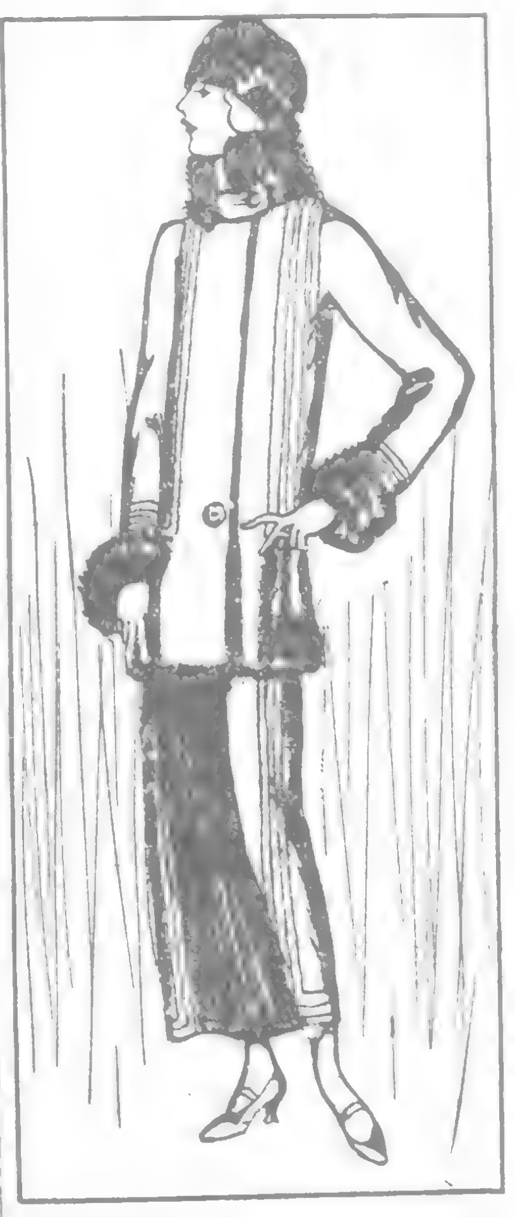
placed at the normal waistline and ending in a huge rosette of dark blue silk to match the underdress, which is revealed through the front opening in the skirt.

Velvet and Matelasse.

Gray is still a favorite shade for evening coats. The season was rather advanced last winter when gray evening coats first made their appearance, so it is but natural that this shade should be carried over to this winter.

A typical gray evening coat from Bernard, of Paris, is known as Prince Errant. It is developed in gray velvet trimmed with bands of taupe fur. The sleeves and sides of the mantle are entirely of fur and there is a huge fur collar. In addition to this lavish ornamentation there are silk and metal embroideries in the form of narrow bands extending the length of the coat on either side of the front and back and passing in a double row around the sleeves.

Velvet is a very important fabric for both afternoon and evening coats and dresses. Another evening coat of velvet is of a dark navy blue velvet lined with red crepe de chine, with collar and cuffs of squirrel.



The Very Popular Suit of Tan Cloth Which Is Charming When Trimmed With Beaver Fur.

Interesting costumes are in combination of velvet and matelasse. One recently imported consists of a sheath dress of rose-colored matelasse and a full-length cape of brown velvet lavishly trimmed with fur and lined with the rose material from which the dress is made.

Ribbon Trims Simple Frock.

The working of the material from which the frock is made into a trimming is not a new idea, but one that is exploited more than ever this season, and in a more interesting way than ever before.

Ribbons, too, exactly matching the gown in color, also are much used for trimmings. Or, it might better be said, much ribbon is used, for it is nothing to use fifty or sixty yards of ribbon on one simple frock, such as a Renee model, which is of a deep castor shade of crepe Mongol trimmed with narrow faille ribbon of exactly matching shade. This model requires 125 yards of the ribbon to make the design.

Colored silk or metal ribbons are massed together to form flower motifs which are used especially for trimming girdles. Narrow furs also are worked in interesting ways as trimmings.

Ornate Footwear.

For the last few years there has been a series of conflicts between the strapped slipper and the shoe with a buckle. As soon as one style succeeded in becoming the accepted vogue the other gradually fought its way to the front ranks of fashion until the first became completely suppressed. After another few months the pendulum would swing back again.

This has been kept up season after season. Designers of footwear seemed to have only these two types of shoes to offer, and when women became weary of the one they could do nothing but turn back to the other.

At the start of the year 1921 women in both this country and on the continent demanded something different in footwear. Shoemakers then realized that it was time to present new attractions, and from then on there was a steady and definite trend toward ornate footwear.

SUPPLEMENT TO ST. JOE NEWS

Things Have Changed

"Things have changed since Hannah died." Thirty years ago, a girl was pleased just to have a fellow come to see her. They sat down quietly in the sedate old parlor and talked about the church socials and dancing school and had a lovely time. Pa and Ma dodged in occasionally to see how things were going, but rarely found anything doing.

A girl considered she was given a treat in those days, if she was taken to a 25 cent show. The boys would occasionally blow in $1.50 on a livery team, but that was about the peak of extravagance.

Nowadays, as one young woman said, "If the fellows want to see us, they have got to spend something besides the evening." Many of them spend $10 to $20 on taking a girl to one dance. A college fellow remarked the other day that it cost $100 to entertain a girl at the "prom" at his institution, and no doubt there are others where similar extravagance prevails.

Free spending habits got a start during the war, when young fellows earned big pay, and threw away dollars faster than their dads ever squandered nickels. But the country can not prosper if these habits become permanent among the people.—Avilla News.

HIS DEFINITION

Elder Watkins, of Muddy Hollow, just back from the city, was telling his wife of the church he had attended.

"Did you know any of their songs?" she asked.

"No," replied the elder, "They didn't sing anything but anthems."

"Anthems!" exclaimed his wife. "What on earth is an anthem?"

"Well," answered the elder, "I can't tell you just exactly, but if I'd say to you, 'Betsy, the cows are in the corn,' that wouldn't be an anthem. But if I'd say, 'Betsy-Betsy-Betsy, the cows — the cows, the Holstein cow, the muley cow, the Jersey cow, the spotted cow—all the cows are in—are in—the corn—corn—corn. Ahmen!' Why, that'd be an anthem."

Skating every Thursday night, at the Spencerville Rink.

A MORNING PRAYER:— Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me.—Psalm 51:10.

WINNING AN ENEMY:—If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink.—Proverbs 25:21.

FATE OF THE ROBBER:—Behold at eveningtide trouble; and before morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.—Isaiah 17:14.

I SHALL NOT WANT:—The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. . . . Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.—Psalm 23:1, 6.

THE CHOSEN FAST:—Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?—Isaiah 58:6.

IF YE OBEY:—If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasurer unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation.—Exodus 19:5, 6.

HE LEADETH ME:—I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.—Isaiah 42:16.

A Real Church

It isn't the preacher's flowery prayer
Or the way the choir sings,
Or the size of the coin your neighbor gives,
Or the help your brother brings.
It isn't the size of your favorite church
Or the cost of your favorite pew,
Or the style of the clothes the members wear;
For it isn't the church, it's you.
It isn't the way the work is done
Or the way the money's spent
Or whether the gospel's all brot in
Or whether ther's some that's sent
It isn't the kind of creed they love,
Or peculiar things they do
Or whether the doctrine suits your taste
For it isn't the church, it's you.
A chain's as strong as the weakest link
And it breaks with a heavy load;
But a church that's full of the links that pull
Can level the roughest road.
If you get in tune with the Master's will
With your heart and labors too,
You will love your church, though it has it's faults,
For it isn't the church, it's you.

A contract for a $3,500 memorial to William H. Leedy, who was for twenty-six years grand secretary of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, has been awarded to Myra Reynolds Richards, an Indianapolis sculptor. The memorial will take the form of a life sized bust of Mr. Leedy in bronze, set on a pedestal of black Belgian marble, four feet high. The background is to be composed of two large pillars of black Belgian marble, eight feet high and four feet wide, and above the bust between the pillars, will be the name and dates of birth and death carved in the marble. Around the pedestal will be the dates of Mr. Leedy's long service and position in the order. Mrs. Richards will begin on the work soon.

Safe Investments!

Rest assured of this: The greater your chances of gain on any investment, the greater your chances of loosing all that you have invested.

This is a poor time to speculate. Good investments usually bear a low rate of interest. That's why the rate is low on farm loans, Liberty bonds, municipal bonds and other like securities. The safer your investment the lower the rate. It pays to be on the safe side, even if the income is low. Our Bank buys and sells bonds, mortgages and other relibale securities in which your surplus funds may be safely invested. Ask us about them.

Anoth'r Grade Accident

Sunday evening as Mr. and Mrs Newt Henderson were returning to their home at Hurshtown in their new Ford Coupe after having visited in the Wilson Sanders home, their auto was turned over near the William Keeler home, south of town landing them in the ditch.

The accident occurred on the same grade off of which Mr. and Mrs. Sanders turned turtle just a week before, and Mr. and Mrs. Henderson were looking at that place when a large car suddenly swept past them, turning back into the road so abruptly that Mrs. Henderson jerked his wheel to the right to keep from striking the passing car but he was too close to the edge of the bank so over they went.

The car lit upsidedown with the top and right side in the water.

The unfortunate couple suffered no broken bones but were badly cut and bruised. The driver of the other machine did not stop but drove rapidly on his way. Others came to their assistance and helped them to Spencerville for medical aid. The car was badly damaged but not beyond hasty repair. The right front wheel and one of the doors were broken off. Most of the glass was broken out.

Surely this grade should have a railing to prevent more accidents for three automobiles have turned over here recently.

Elder Extraordinary

S. S. Widney was unanimously elected a bona fide elder for life, of the St. Joe Lutheran church by its members Sunday at the morning service. The pastor made the statement for this action as a surprise to the congregation as well as to Mr. Widney. This honor bestowed on Mr. Widney is an appreciation of his faithfulness and patience in his long time connection with that church; and also as an expression of spmpathy toward him in his life affliction, for God has laid a heavy hand upon him.

Fourth Place In County

Coburn's Corners was highly elated over the fine showing the Sunday School made at the big county Sunday School meet at Auburn last Sunday. Their church is perhaps a greater distance from Auburn than any other contestant, yet it ranked fourth in percentage of their enrollment, having a total of 104 percent.

"Soul After Death"

Many people are interested in the condition of the "soul after death." A series of sermons will be preached on the subject at the evening services at the Lutheran church. The first one will be preached next Sunday evening at seven o'clock; subject "Does Death End All?" Come and hear the scriptural teaching of immortality.

D. U. Fritz, a Civil war veteran, age 76 years, living at Butler, committed suicide Sunday morning at about 6:45 o'clock by firing a bullet through his head from a thirty-two caliber revolver. Mr. Fritz left a note in his clothes on which was written, "could stand it no longer" and this is the only known explanation for his rash act.

M.W.A. Re-Organization

A reorganization of the Lodge of Modern Woodmen of America was made at the I. O. O. Hall Thursday evening. The Auburn team being present to do the initiation of the eleven new members who were E. R. Kinsey, Roy Kinsey, Frank Kinsey and sons Gareld and Donald, Albert Wade, Lester Pugsley, Paul Tustison, Lester Coburn, Vernon Woodcox Herbert Curie and Joe Bice. The latter of Spencerville. District Deputy clerk of Fremont had been here several days before getting things ready for the reorganization. After the exercises at the hall the men went to the Christian Church basement where luncheon was served to thirty-three by the Martha Society. The second meeting will be held next Thursday night at the I. O. O. F.

"You're willing to take care of all the rest of the gang, chief?"

"Sure," assented the officer.

"All right. Boys, turn over the whole crowd to the chief, and I'll trust you to see that they're properly booked and jailed. Turn over all the evidence likewise, except that mail sack. Have that brought up here, to this room, and see that the corridor outside is kept guarded. Get me?"

The two saluted. "Yes, sir."

"Good. Send to the federal building, find out where there's an agent of the Department of Justice, and get him here. Have him here inside of fifteen minutes."

"My dear Gramont, your devotion to duty is Roman in spirit," said Jachin Fell, lightly. "I really regret that circumstances so conspire to defeat you! Why can't you be satisfied with bagging so many other victims? You can't bag me—"

"Can't I?" said Gramont, taking a cigar and biting at it. He was cooler now. "By heavens, Fell, there's one thing in this country that you and no other man can reach with any influence, political bribery or crooked connections—and that's the government of the United States! You can reach judges and senators and governors, but you can't reach the unknown and humble men who carry the badge of the Department of Justice!"

Fell made a slight gesture.

"Human nature, my dear Gramont. It is quite true that I have not established this gang of criminals, as you call them, without taking proper precautions. Memphis Izzy, for instance, has influence that reaches far and wide. So have I. So have others in the party. I give you my assurance that your Department of Justice man will not arrest me."

Gramont paled.

Jachin Fell glanced at his watch.

"Lucie will be here at any minute now," he observed. "I suppose your sense of duty will force you to disclose everything to her?"

Gramont merely nodded, tight-lipped. A knock at the door, and one of his men entered with the sack of mail they had taken as evidence.

"A lady is coming here at any moment," said Gramont. "Allow her to enter."

The other saluted and departed.

"A sense of duty is a terrible thing," and Jachin Fell sighed. "What about the oil company? Are you going to let Miss Ledanois' fortunes go to wrack and ruin?"

"Better that," said Gramont, "than to have her profit come through criminal money and means. She'd be the first to say so, herself. But I'll tell you this: I'm convinced that there is oil under that land of hers! If she'll agree, I'll put up what money I have against her land; we'll be able to have one well drilled at least, on the chance!"

"If it's dry," said Fell, "you'll be broke."

"I can always get work," and Gramont laughed harshly.

Fell regarded him in silence a moment. Then: "I think Lucie loves you, Gramont."

A trembling seized Gramont; a furious impulse to shoot the man down as he sat. Did he have the baseness to try and save himself through Lucie? Something of his stifled anger must have shown in his eyes, for Jachin Fell laid down his cigar and continued quickly:

"Don't misunderstand. I say that I think she cares for you; it is merely surmise on my part. Lucie is one person for whom I'd do anything. I stand and have stood in the place of a parent to her. She is very dear to me. I have a special reason for intruding on your personal affairs in this manner, and some right to ask you in regard to your intentions."

"I don't recognize any right whatever on your part," said Gramont, steadily.

Fell smiled. "Ah! Then you are in love. Well, youth must be served!"

"I'd like to know one thing," struck in Gramont. "That is, why you were so cursed anxious to get something on my man Hammond! And why you held the Midnight Masquer affair over me as a threat. Did you suspect my business?"

Fell threw back his head and laughed in a hearty amusement that was quite unrestrained.

"That," he responded, "is really humorous! Do you know, I honestly thought you a fortune-hunter from Europe? There, I confess, I made a grave error."

Without a knock the door opened and Lucie [illegible].

"Good evening, [illegible]!" she exclaimed. "[illegible] know there's a crowd [illegible] in the [illegible] policemen and [illegible] and a lot of excitement[illegible]" but to arrest Mr. Fell, you will understand. I am very sorry, Lucie, to have to tell you all this, for I know your attachment to him."

"Arrest—you, Uncle Jachin?" The girl glanced from the paper to Fell, who nodded. "Why—this isn't a joke of some kind?"

"None whatever, my dear," said Fell, quietly. "Mr. Gramont is to be congratulated. He has discovere I was the head of a large orga of criminals. Here, if I mist are your Department of ice friends, Gramont."

A knock at the door, and it opened to admit one of Gramont's men.

"Here they are, sir—the chief agent and a deputy. Shall I let them in?"

Gramont nodded. Two men entered the room, and Gramont dismissed his own man with a gesture. He saw that the agents both nodded to Fell.

"Do you gentlemen know this man?" he demanded, rising.

"Yes," said one of them, regarding him keenly. "Who sent for us?"

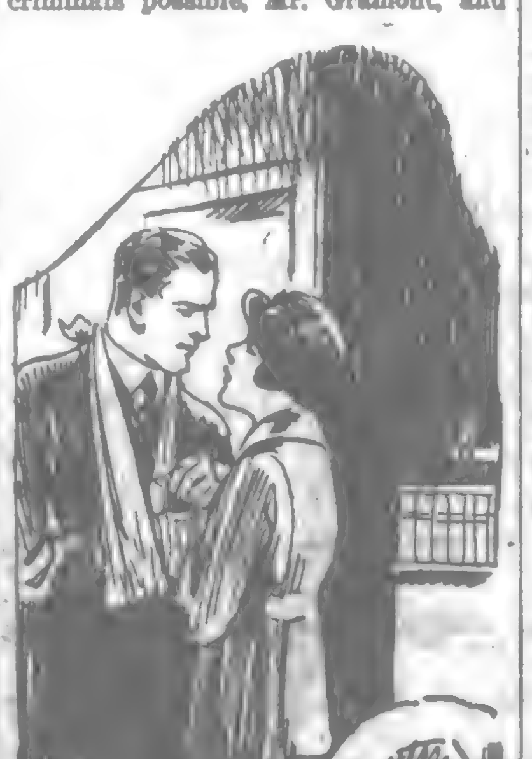
"I did." Gramont gave his name, and handed them his commission. "I have been investigating a lottery which has been conducted in this state for a long time by an organization of very clever criminals. Jachin Fell is the man at the head of this organization. The lesser members of the gang are in custody. The police department will not arrest this man Fell; his influence and that of his gang is extensive in political fields and elsewhere. I have called up the governor, and have been told not to arrest him. I have disregarded these facts, and I now call upon you to hold him in custody as a federal prisoner. Now go to it."

The chief agent laid Gramont's commission on the table and looked at Jachin Fell. For an instant there was a dead silence. Then, when the federal man spoke, Gramont was paralyzed.

"I'm very sorry, Mr. Gramont, to have to refuse—"

"What!" cried Gramont, incredulously. "Do you dare stand there and—"

"One moment, please," said Fell, his quiet voice breaking in. "It is quite true that I have organized all the criminals possible, Mr. Gramont, and have put the underground lottery into a systematized form. I have done this by the authority of the United States, in order to apprehend Memphis Izzy Gumberts and other men at one crack. These gentlemen will tell you that I am a special agent of the Department of Justice, employed in that capacity through the efforts of Judge Forester and Senator Flaxman. I regret that this had to be held so secret that not even the governor himself was aware of it until this evening. The conflict was quite unavoidable. Not a member of that gang must become aware of my real identity."



He Was Still Looking Into the Eyes of Lucie Ledanois.

Gramont sank into his chair, the automatic dropping from his hand. He was suddenly dazed, thunderstruck. Yet he had to believe. He was dimly aware that Lucie had gone to Jachin Fell, her arms about his neck. He stared from unseeing eyes.

Realization smote him like a blow, numbing his brain. He saw now why the governor had conferred with Judge Forester and the senator, why he had been ordered off the trail. He saw now why Fell had preserved secrecy so great that even to the chief of police the impregnable position was supposedly due to influence higher up.

He saw how Fell must have been working month after month, [illegible] and [illegible] to form one [illegible] within [illegible] Memphis Izzy [illegible] was aware that the agents had departed. He was alone with Lucie and Fell, and the latter was rising and holding out his hand smiling.

"Gramont, you got ahead of me in this deal, and I congratulate you with all my heart!" said Fell, earnestly. "Neither of us suspected the part played by the other man! but you've done the work and done it well. Will you shake hands?"

Gramont confusedly took the hand extended to him.

"I've been a fool," he said, slowly. "I might have guessed that something unusual was—"

"No; how could you guess?" said Fell. "There are three men in Baton Rouge who know the truth, and three persons in this room. That's all, outside of the regular government men. I had not told even Lucie, here! I dared not. And I dare say nothing even now. To the underworld at large I will be known as the crook whom not even the government could touch; in days to come I may be of untold service to my country."

"If you will excuse me one moment," he went on, "I shall speak with your men who are on guard, Gramont. I—ah—will be back in a moment, and we may then discuss business. If you agree, I think that your company may proceed upon the original lines, and we shall set to work drilling for oil without delay—"

Gramont scarcely heard the words, nor did he hear the door close. He was still looking into the eyes of Lucie Ledanois, and wondering if the message they held was really meant for him.

CHAPTER XVI

Mi-Careme.

A nameless gentleman from the effete North was enjoying for the first time the privileges of a guest card at the Chess and Checkers. In a somewhat perplexed manner he approached the secretary's desk and obtained a cigar. Then he paused, listening to the sounds of revelry which filled the club, and which came roaring in from the city streets outside.

"Say!" he addressed the secretary. "What's this Mi-Careme I've been reading about in the papers, anyhow? I thought everything was tight as a clam down here after Mardi Gras? It's still the Lenten season, isn't it? Mardi Gras doesn't come more than once a year? Then what's all the celebration about?"

The secretary smiled.

"Certainly, sir, it's still Lent. But the French people have what they call Mi-Careme, or Mid-Lent, and they certainly give it a big celebration! You see, it's a night halfway through Lent, when they can enjoy themselves to the limit—let off steam, as it were. We're having several dinner parties here in the club tonight, for the occasion."

A slightly built little man, who had much the air of a shy clerk—had it not been for his evening attire—approached the desk. He signed a check for a handful of cigars, which he stowed away.

"Please provide a fresh box later," he said to the secretary. "Most of my party is here, I believe."

"I'll send them up, Mr. Fell," answered the secretary, quickly. "Yes, I think the dining room is all ready for you, sir. By the way, Mr. Gramont was looking for you a moment ago—ah! Here he comes now!"

Jachin Fell turned. Gramont was plunging at him, a yellow telegraph form in his hand, excitement in his eyes.

"Look here, Jachin! This wire just came in from Hammond—you know, I left him in charge of things down at Bayou Terrebonne! Read it, man—read it! They've struck oil-sands at five hundred feet—and sands at five hundred, with these indications. It means a gusher at a thousand! Where's Lucie? Have you brought her?"

"She's upstairs. Well, well!" Jachin Fell glanced at the telegram, and returned it. "So oil is actually found! This is certainly going to be one big night. Come along. Let's find Lucie and tell her about it—"

The two men turned away together

[THE END]

Typographical Error Cost Life.

A typographical error once cost a woman her life. Shortly after the invention of printing, a German printer working on an edition of the Bible entrusted to his wife the setting up of the type for a portion of the Book of Genesis. There is a sentence in Genesis, describing Eve's duty to Adam, which runs "He shall be thy Lord." The German word for Lord is "Herr" and that for fool is "Narr." The printer's wife changed the "e" to "a" and, in the [illegible] of that period the capital "H" [illegible] "He shall be thy fool." [illegible]

A BUNDLE OF MYRRH

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

ONE of the first things that a new reporter on our paper has to learn is the kinology of the town. Until he knows who is kin to whom, and how, a reporter is likely at any time to make a bad break. Now, the kinology of a country town is no simple proposition. After a man has spent ten years writing up weddings, births and deaths, attending old settlers' picnics, family reunions and golden weddings, he may run into a new line of kin that opens a whole avenue of hitherto unexplainable facts to him, showing why certain families line up in the ward primaries, and why certain others are fighting tooth and toenail.

The only person in town who knows all of our kinology—and most of that in the county, where it is a separate and interminable study—is "Aunt" Martha Merryfield. She has lived here since the early fifties, and was a Perkins, one of the eleven Perkins children that grew up in town; and the Perkinses were related by marriage to the Mortons, of whom there are over fifty living adult descendants on the town-site now. So one begins to see why she is called "Aunt" Martha Merryfield. She is literally aunt to over a hundred people here.

She lives alone in the big brick house on the hill, though her children and grandchildren are in and out all day and most of the night, so that she is not at all lonesome. She is the only person to whom we can look for accurate information about local history, and when a man dies who has been at all prominent in affairs of the town or county or state, we always call up "Aunt" Martha on the 'phone, or send a reporter to her, to learn the real printable and unprintable truth about him.

Aunt Martha used to bring us flowers for the office table, and it was her delight to sit down and take out her corn-knife—as she called it—and go after the town shams. She has promised a dozen times to write an article for the paper, which she says we are not to print, entitled "Self-Made Women I Have Known." She says that men were always bragging about how they had clerked, worked on farms, dug ditches and whacked mules across the plains before the railroads came; but that their wives insisted that they were princesses of the royal blood.

Her particular animosity in the town is Mrs. Julia Neal Worthington. Aunt Martha told us that when Tim Neal came to town he had a brogue you could scrape with a knife and an "O" before his name you could hoop a hogshead with. "And that woman," exclaimed Aunt Martha, when she was under full sail, "that woman, because she has two bookcases in the front room and reads the book reviews in the Delineator, thinks that she is cultured. When her folks first came to town they were as poor as Job's turkey, which was not to their discredit—everyone was poor in those days. The old man Neal was as honest an old Mick as you'd meet in a day's journey, or at a fair, and he used to run a lemonade and peanut stand down by the bank corner. But his girls, who were raised on it, until they began teaching school, used to refer to the peanut stand as 'papa's hobby,' pretend that he only ran it for recreation, and say: 'Now why do you suppose papa enjoys it?—We just can't get him to give it up!' And now Julia is president of the Woman's federation, has stomach trouble, has had two operations, and is suffering untold agonies with acute culturitis. And yet," Aunt Martha would say through a beatific smile, "she's a good-enough woman in many ways, and I wouldn't say anything against her for the world."

Once Miss Larrabee, the society reporter, brought back this from a visit to Aunt Martha: "I know, my dear, that your paper says there are no cliques and crowds in society in this town, and that it is so democratic. But you and I know the truth. We know about society in this town. We know that if there ever was a town that looked like a side of bacon—streak of lean and streak of fat all the way down—it is this blessed place. Crowds?—why, I've lived here over fifty years and it was always crowds. 'Way back in the days when the boys used to pick us up and carry us across Elm Creek when we went to dances, there were crowds. The girls who crossed on the boys' backs weren't considered quite proper by the girls who were carried over in the boys' arms. And they didn't dance in the same set."

Miss Larrabee says she looked into the elder woman's eyes to find which crowd Aunt Martha belonged to, when she [illegible]:

"[illegible] you needn't look at me—I [illegible] on who was [illegible]! [illegible] as I was saying, if [illegible] society in this town. I [illegible] went to every dance [illegible] calls the Amalgamated Handholders, to the trundle-bed trash just out of their kissing games. It's funny to watch the little tads grow up and pair off and see how bravely they try to keep in the swim. I've seen ten grandchildren get out and I've a great-grandchild whose mother will be pushing her out before she is old enough to know anything. When young people get married they all say they're not going to be old-marriedly, and they hang on to the dances and little hops until the first baby comes. Then they don't get out to the dances much, but they join a card club."

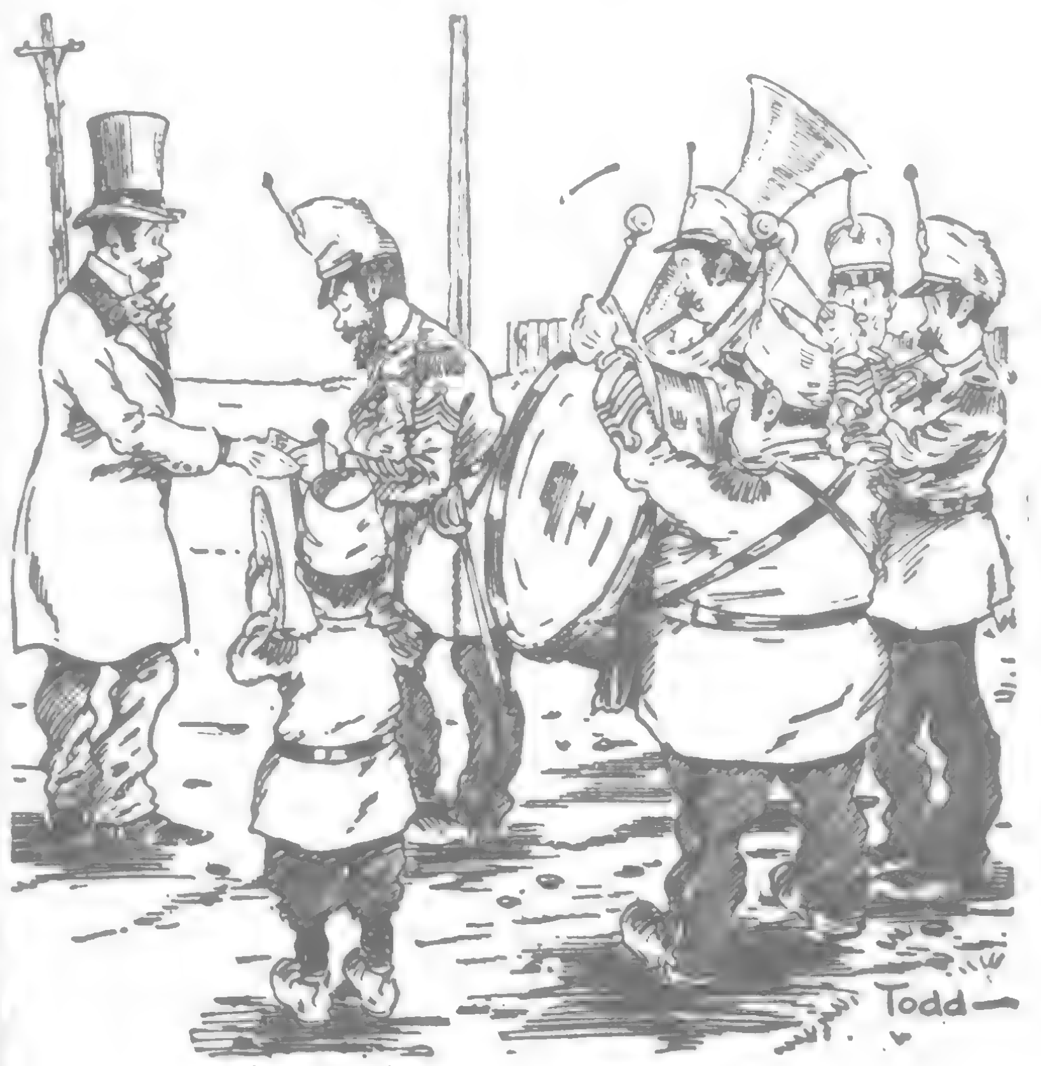
In her dissertation on the social progress of young married people, Aunt Martha explained that after the second year the couple go only to the big dances where everyone is invited, but they pay more attention to cards. The young mother begins going to afternoon parties, and has the other young married couples in for dinner. Then, before they know it, they are invited out to receptions and parties, where little tads preside at the punch-bowls and wait on table, and are seen and not heard. Aunt Martha continued:

"By the time the second baby comes they take one of two shoots—either go in for church socials or edge into a whist club.

Aunt Martha's eyes danced with the mischief in her heart as she went on: "Now, if after the second baby comes, the young parents begin to feel like saving money, and being someone at the bank, they join the church and go in for church socials, which don't take so much time or money as the whist clubs and receptions. The babies keep coming and the young people keep on improving their home, moving from the little house to the big house; the young man's name begins to creep into lists of directors at the bank, and they are invited out to the big parties, and she goes to all the stand-up and 'gabble-gobble-and-git' receptions. As they grow older, they are asked with the preachers and widows for the first night of a series of parties at a house to get them out of the way and over with before the young folks come later in the week. When they get to a point where the young folks laugh and clap their hands at little pudgy daddy when he dances 'Old Dan Tucker' at the big parties in the brick house, it's all up with them—they are old married folks, and the next step takes them to the old folks' whist club, where the bankers' wives and the insurance widows run things. That is the inner sanctuary, the holy of holies in the society of this town."



The Judge Walked Over and Gave the Band Leader Five Dollars.

"That reminds me of the Winthrops. When they came here, back in the sixties, it happened to be Fourth of July, and the band was out playing in the grove by the depot. Mrs. Winthrop got off the train quite grandly and bowed and waved her hand to the band, and the Judge walked over and gave the band leader five dollars. They said afterward that they felt deeply touched to find a raw western town so appreciative of the coming of an old New England family, that it greeted them with a band. Before Mrs. Winthrop had been here three weeks she called on me, 'as one of the first ladies of the town,' she said, to organize and see if we couldn't break up the habit of the hired girls eating at the table with the family."

The talk drifted back to the old days, and Aunt Martha got out her photograph-album and showed Miss Larrabee the pictures of those whom she called "the rude forefathers of the village," in their quaint old costumes of war-times. In the book were baby pictures of middle-aged men and women, and youthful pictures of the old men and women of the town. But most interesting of all to Miss Larrabee were the daguerrotypes—quaint old portraits in their little black boxes, framed in plush and gilt. The old woman brought out picture after picture—her husband's among the others in a broad beaver hat with a [illegible] taken back in Brattleboro before he came to Kansas. She [illegible] at [illegible] a long minute, and [illegible] to Miss Larrabee: "[illegible] when we were married—judge of the District court at twenty-four." She held the case in her hand and went on opening the others. She came to one showing a mustached and goateed youth in a captain's uniform—a slim, straight, soldierly figure. As she passed it to Miss Larrabee Aunt Martha looked sidewise at her, saying: "You wouldn't know him now. Yet you see him every day, I suppose." After the girl shook her head, the elder woman continued: "Well, that's Jim Purdy, taken the day he left for the army." She sighed as she said: "Let me see, I guess I haven't happened to run across Jim for ten years or more, but he didn't look much like this then. Poor old Jim, they tell me he's not having the best time in the world.

Miss Larrabee came down the lilac-bordered walk from the stately old brick house, carrying a great bouquet of sweet peas and nasturtiums and poppies and phlox, a fleeting memory of some association she had in her mind of Uncle Jimmy Purdy and Aunt Martha kept tantalizing her. She could not get it out of the background of her consciousness, and yet it refused to form itself into a tangible conception. It was associated vaguely with her own grandmother, as though, infinite ages ago, her grandmother had said something that had lodged in the girl's head.

When the occasion made itself, Miss Larrabee asked her grandmother the question that puzzled her, and learned that Martha Perkins and Jim Purdy were lovers before the war, and that she was wearing his ring when he went away—thinking he would be back in a few weeks with the Civil war ended. In his first fight he was shot in the head and was in the hospital for a year, demented; when he was put back in the ranks he was captured and his name given out among the killed. In prison his dementia returned and he stayed there two years. Then for a year after his exchange he followed the Union army like a dumb creature, and not until two years after the close of the war did the poor fellow drift home again, as one from the dead—all uncertain of the past and unfitted for the future.

And his sweetheart drank her cup alone. The old settlers say that she never flinched nor shrank, but for years, even after her marriage, the young woman kept a little grave covered with flowers, that bore the simple words: "Martha, aged five months and three days."

The war brought her neighbors so many sorrows that Martha's trouble was forgotten, the years passed and only the old people of the community know about the little grave beside the judge's and their little boy's. Jimmy Purdy grew into a smooth-faced, unwrinkled, rather blank-eyed old man, clerking in the bookstore for a time, serving as city clerk for 20 years, and later living at the Palace hotel on his pension. He worshiped Aunt Martha's children, but he never saw her except when they met in some casual way. She was married when he came back from the war, and if he ever knew her agony he never spoke of it.

One day they found him dead in his bed. And Miss Larrabee hurried out to Aunt Martha's to get the facts about his life for the paper. It was a bright October morning as she went up the walk to the old brick house, and she heard someone playing on the piano, rolling the chords after the grandiose manner of pianists 50 years ago. A voice seemed to be singing an old ballad. As the girl mounted the steps the voice came more distinctly to her. It was quavering and unsure, but with a moan of passion the words came forth:

"As I lay my heart on your dead heart—Douglas,
Douglas, Douglas, tender and true—"

Suddenly the voice choked with a groan. As she stood by the open door Miss Larrabee could see in the darkened room the figure of an old woman, racked with sobs on a great mahogany sofa, and on the floor beside her lay a daguerreotype, glinting its gilt and glass through the gloom.

Why Bake At Home

when you can buy bread like it, ready baked?

COUNT the raisins—at least eight big, plump, tender fruit-meats to the slice.

Taste it—see how the raisin flavor permeates the bread.

No need to bake at home when we've arranged with bakers in almost every town and city to bake this full-fruited raisin bread.

Just 'phone and they'll deliver it—all ready to surprise the family tonight.

It comes from master bakers' modern ovens in your city. And it's made with Sun-Maid Raisins.

That's another reason for its superiority. A rare combination of nutritious cereal and fruit—both good and good for you, so you should serve it at least twice a week.

Use Sun-Maid Raisins also in puddings, cakes and cookies. You may be offered other brands that you know less well than Sun-Maids, but the kind you want is the kind you know is good. Insist, therefore, on Sun-Maid brand. They cost no more than ordinary raisins.

Did Leonardo Name America?

It has been generally supposed that Martin Waldseemueller of St. Die first applied the name America to the western continent. But now Professor Harrington asserts that Leonardo da Vinci gave the name on a map made in 1514.

Flowers for the Living.

There is a fine drinking fountain in the porch of old Jewell hall at William Jewell college with a tablet bearing this inscription set in the wall over it: "Dedicated to the members of this class who are fighting to make the world safe for democracy, 1918."—Kansas City Times.

Not Now.

"When I was young, girls were taught to darn their own stockings."

"Yes, Grandma, but in those days it was possible to place a darn where it wouldn't show."—Life.

Intelligent Question.

For the geography lesson the young teacher had selected Iceland as the topic to be discussed and always being eager to make the lessons as interesting as possible had dwelt for a considerable time on the customs, habits and dress of the Eskimos. The class showed its interest by the eager questions that were asked.

At the rear of the room sat a very quiet and thoughtful little girl, who, so far, had not ventured to ask any questions. But now she raised her hand.

"Yes, Tessie?" queried the young teacher, smiling encouragingly on the youngster.

"Please, Miss Brown," timidly inquired Tessie, "do the Eskimos make our Eskimo pie?"

INDIANA BREVITIES

Columbus.—Officers elected by Isham Keith Post No. 13, G. A. R., are: Jonathan Baker, commander; David Barkes, senior vice commander; James Brown, junior vice commander; Solomon S. Glick, sergeant; John A. Robertson, chaplain; William F. Kendall, officer of the day, and William Watson, officer of the guard. Officers elected by the W. R. C. are: Mrs. Alice Trotter, president; Mrs. Barton Beatty, vice president; Mrs. Mona Foster, treasurer; Mrs. Nannie Beatty, chaplain; Mrs. Emma Robertson, conductor, and Mrs. Ida Osborne, guard.

Laporte.—Motion for the appointment of another judge to hear the case of Russell Lingard, charged with embezzling more than $2,000 from the water works department of Michigan City, was filed in the Circuit court here. Four judges and one attorney, from which a selection will be made, are: Judge Loring, of Porter county; Judges Funk, Care and Montgomery, of St. Joseph county, and Arthur Hubbard, of South Bend.

Muncie.—After a year of contests in the courts over the proposal to construct a new high school building at Gaston, all suits have been withdrawn by the taxpayers who filed them. The old school building has been condemned by the state board of health as insanitary and unsafe. It is not known what move will be made next. The Gaston schildren now are attending the consolidated schools near the town.

Elwood.—The controversy between Elwood citizens and the Indiana General Service company has been settled. In the Madison Superior court Fred C. Gause, special judge, decided that the cost-plus plan of charging for heat was illegal. William Hayman, counsel for the company, submitted a proposal of 38½ cents a foot of radiation, which the consumers will accept.

Vincennes.—In an effort to beautify the Wabash river front at the foot of Main street, the Knox County War Mothers Friday planted twenty-five hard maple trees. Mrs. Charles B. O'Donnell, first president of the Knox County War Mothers; Mrs. Elijah McFarland, and Mrs. B. B. Griffith, past presidents, dug the holes and planted the first ten trees.

Terre Haute.—Able to handle his own affairs until recently, John Myers, one hundred and one, submitted to appointment of a guardian. He admits that his age handicaps him. The petition states he is unable to care for himself and second wife, who is seventy-five. He has a daughter more than eighty by his first wife.

Columbus.—Three farmers' institutes have been arranged for Bartholomew county, as follows: At Hartsville, January 18; in Hawcreek township, January 19, and at Taylorsville, February 17. J. P. Trigg of Middletown, W. H. Senour of Brookville, and Mrs. John W. Spindler of Grabill, will make addresses.

Richmond.—The annual memorial address before the Richmond Lodge of Elks was delivered by Rev. McLean Work, pastor of the Reed Memorial church, and the Elks' tribute to members who died during the last year was given by Will W. Reller, attorney, of Richmond.

Delphi.—The trustees of the Delphi and Deer Creek consolidated schools have voted to erect a new high school building this school year. A new high school building was erected a few years for 150 pupils. The growth has been so rapid that 270 are now enrolled.

Anderson.—Mrs. Culla Vayhinger of Upland, formerly president of the Indiana Women's Christian Temperance Union, spoke in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian association. She said that prohibition is unpopular only with the foes of temperance.

Elwood.—The Kiwanis club elected Bert E. Sneed president, R. T. Boston vice president and L. M. Grose treasurer. Directors named are Milton York, H. C. Cornuelle, Thomas Jenner, W. A. Risinger, J. Lewis Small, Dr. C. P. Runyan and Ernest Daniels.

Fowler.—John M. Lugar, who was defeated for trustee of Bolivar township by seven votes, alleges that eleven illegal votes were cast for L. W. Burns, his Democratic opponent. A hearing by the county commissioners will be held.

Columbus.—The twentieth annual wild game feast of the Ogilville tribe of Red Men was held at Ogilville. Approximately 300 attended. Members of the tribe went hunting and bagged the game for the feast.

Marion.—Miss Laura Geddes Henry, of Peoria, Ill., has been named general secretary of the Marion Y. W. C. A. She will succeed Miss Annabella Lockhart, who resigned.

Wabash.—A committee of farmers will be sent to Wells county to investigate the Farmers' Produce association, with a view to forming a similar organization in Wabash county.

Bloomington.—[illegible] A. The [illegible] him against a [illegible] Mr. [illegible] his jaw. The body was [illegible] Orville [illegible]

[illegible]

Anderson.—A resolution recommending that Mounds park, two miles east of Anderson, be included in the state park system because of its natural attractiveness and the several historic mounds in the park, was adopted by the Anderson Kiwanis club, which invited the co-operation of the Rotary club and others in a movement to have Governor McCray and the next session of the legislature interested in the proposal. The park is owned by the Union Traction company, which, it was said, would favorably consider transferring the park to the state.

Indianapolis.—The manuscript division of the state department of public instruction in the state fiscal year ended September 30, accumulated a profit of $7,013.87, the largest by $2,000 of any year's business in the history of the division, says a report Robert K. Devericks, head of the division, has made to Benjamin J. Burris, state superintendent of public instruction. The division took in $23,434.41, mostly fees for examination of applicants for teacher licenses.

Evansville.—Declaring that conditions are beyond the control of George D. Heilman, prosecuting attorney, and his deputy, Philip C. Gould, judge of the Vanderburg Circuit court, in a talk from the bench, said another deputy prosecutor for the county should be named at once. He said that Mr. Heilman and his deputy, Charles Werner, are kept so busy with routine work that they haven't the time to investigate liquor law violations.

Indianapolis.—A sanity test will be given all persons arrested for speeding, Mayor Samuel Lewis Shank announced. The mayor made this announcement after Judge Delbert O. Wilmeth in city court gave a number of speeders light fines. Speeders, the mayor said, will be held in padded cells until examined, the law providing that persons held for sanity tests cannot give bond.

Richmond.—Edward Bellis, widely known in Richmond, observed his ninety-fifth birthday anniversary the other day. He passed a part of the morning piling a load of firewood in his barn, following a daily custom for years, walked a mile or more and visited his friends. Bellis was born in England and came to Richmond in 1848.

Hartford City.—Dates for the farmers' institutes in Blackford county were announced as follows: In Harrison township, at Montpelier, January 3; in Jackson township, at Trenton, January 4; in Washington township, at Roll, January 5, and in Licking township, at Hartford City, January 5. R. A. Ogg and Mrs. Lillian Pierce will be the speakers.

Indianapolis.—The physical value of the operative property of the Indianapolis Water company is $13,330,823, it was set out in an appraisal by Earl Carter, chief engineer of the public service commission, filed with the commission in relation to the petition of the company asking for a valuation for the purpose of security issues.

Greensburg.—Earl Gibson is being held in the county jail on the charge of desertion from the army. He is said to have enlisted at Fort Thomas, Ky., about a year ago, to have been assigned to Battery D, of the Twelfth field artillery and to have deserted at Camp Travis, Tex., in August.

Hartford City.—The city council appointed city employees for the coming year, as follows: Albert Pruden night policeman; E. A. Bookhout and F. B. Baer, engineers at the city water works, and William King, water works superintendent.

Shelbyville.—Plans for a municipal Christmas celebration to be held at the city building on the morning of Christmas day, were made at a meeting of city officials and citizens. Money for buying candy, nuts, fruit and toys will be raised.

Greensburg.—Raymond Eubank has been appointed secretary for Philip B. Stapp, editor of the Hoosier Legionnaire. He will have charge of the clerical work connected with the Legionnaire.

Laporte.—Albert Jahns, Theodore Quigley and Walter Utrowski, drivers for the Jahns Bus company, which operated a dozen bus lines, were arrested in Michigan City and charged with violating the city bus ordinance.

Shelbyville.—Glen Phares, of Union township, won the boys' one-acre corn contest in Shelby county this year with an average of 96.45 per cent. The grade was computed on the basis of yield, cost, exhibit and record.

Anderson.—Rev. Fred Compson, of New York, Nebraska, has been appointed pastor of Trinity Episcopal church and will begin his service January 1.

Columbus.—Following the announcement by dairymen of an increase in the price of milk, Ed Hall, sanitary officer, said that milk inspection will be made more rigid.

Marion.—While eating dinner at the home of a daughter, [illegible] Crawford, age eighty-five, a retired farmer, choked on a piece of turkey and died a few minutes later.

Columbus.—Memorial services were held in the Elks' [illegible]. Thirty-six members of the lodge have died.

DYED HER BABY'S COAT, A SKIRT AND CURTAINS WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her old, worn, faded things new. Even if she has never dyed before, she can put a new, rich color into shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything. Buy Diamond Dyes—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed. Just tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade or run.—Advertisement.

Learning Business Methods.

"How is your son James getting on at college, Mr. Jones?" asked the clergyman.

"Fine! He's getting more business-like every day."

"I am glad to hear that. How does the lad show it?"

"Well," said Jones, "when he first went up there and wanted money he used to write asking for it. Now he generally draws on me at sight."

WHY DRUGGISTS RECOMMEND SWAMP-ROOT

For many years druggists have watched with much interest the remarkable record maintained by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine.

It is a physician's prescription.

Swamp-Root is a strengthening medicine. It helps the kidneys, liver and bladder do the work nature intended they should do.

Swamp-Root has stood the test of years. It is sold by all druggists on its merit and it should help you. No other kidney medicine has so many friends.

Be sure to get Swamp-Root and start treatment at once.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparartion send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

That Theory Won't Do.

A humorist remarks that in view of the fuss a woman makes over a tiny mouse, he is inclined to believe that the "serpent" Eve said she saw was nothing but an apple worm. The only thing wrong with this theory is that an apple worm certainly doesn't tempt one to eat the apple.—Boston Transcript.

Baby's little dresses will just simply dazzle if Red Cross Ball Blue is used in the laundry. Try it and see for yourself. At all good grocers.—Advertisement.

Love Killed Right There.

"I was fouteen and she was thirteen. She was a classmate of mine and I fell deeply in love with her. Another fellow was in love with her, also. We were always quarreling about her, until she said: "You two have a fight and the one who wins wins my hand." We fought, but she told the other fellow to punch me hard, and so my love for her died.—Chicago Journal.

Big Winter Indoor Free Fair, Dec. 19, 20, 21.

Tabernacle Building To Be Used

Four shows in one! The Swine Show, the Poultry Show, the Corn Show and the Potato Show. Any one of these separately would be well worth while. A big program has been outlined. The one outstanding feature is that the whole fair is to be educational. The farmers, whether breeders of livestock or growers of crops are going to exhibit for the ribbons, and ribbons only. No cash prizes are being offered.

Specialists from the Experiment Station and Purdue University will be present to do part of the judging and give talks on the subjects at hand.

The exhibits will be held in the tabernacle, which is one block east of the court house on 7th Street This is an ideal building for such a Fair. It will be well heated. No matter how cold it may be outside the inside will be comfortable.

On Wednesday night, Dec. 20, a good two hour program will be given in the assembly room of the court house.

On Thursday night will be the banquet. A real country dinner with real country sausage, honest-to-goodness pumpkin pies, but here the writer must stop! This will be given in the dining hall of the Commercial Club building.

Those Interested In Good Roads

I wish to take this way of thanking all who donated so liberaly, both by work and money in the grading and building of the three miles of road north of the Bear Creek bridge to the Auburn and Newville road. We want to have one of the best roads in DeKalb County, and we can if you will help us.

The first thing we want to do is to drive slower.

Second, help pack the road by staying out of the old rut.

Third, use good sense in passing the other fellow.

To the truck driver and all heavily loaded vehicles, there is a law to govern your load especially when roads are soft.

I will give an estimate on cost donated to first mile of grading, from Bear Creek bridge to H. M. Widney corner, $100.

Second mile cost donated on grading, from H. M. Widney to S. L. Widney corner, $200.

Third mile, S. L. Widney corner to Auburn and Newville road, not completed.

One who is interested.

SPELLING AVERAGES:

Sophomore	90.44
Freshmen	88.00

Books needed: Little Shepperd of Kingdom Come, Message to Grace, and Dicken's Christmas Stories. Records wanted: Moonlight Senata by Beethoven, Salut d' Amour by Elgar, and Liebestraum by Liszt.

We yet have one more day to make up; the Friday following Thanksgiving.

The teachers in a meeting held Friday evening, decided to give a Christmas entertainment on the Friday afternoon preceding Christmas vacation. Each room will prepare a portion of the work. This program will be given in the assembly room of the school building.

The teachers of Concord Township were in attendance at the Joint Instatute at Spencerville, Saturday a. m. In the afternoon the teachers of the three townships attended a meeting at Auburn.

Arrangements are being made to begin picture shows in the near future, providing that the interest and attendance is sufficient to warrant them.

Miss Neal, County Murse, was in St. Joe Monday giving, to the pupils of the schools, an examination preliminary to a medical examination a little later. She will be here again next Monday. Parents interested in this examination are invited, and urged to attend.

Schools will convene Monday, January 1, following a week's vacation.

The mid-term examinations will be held January 4 and 5.

SOPHOMORE:

We have been discovering, among the members of our class, some hidden talent along the line of teaching.

We now have our boastful Sophomore poster in the Assembly room. Yes, we are some pumpkins! L.E.K.

JUNIOR:

Having completed our work in Geometry for the semester, we are now making a complete review of the first five books.

In History class we are now making an outline of the lives and services of the Presidents of the United States. This is very interesting as well as beneficial. R. J.

SENIOR:

We have unfortunately lost one of our new members, Mildred Murphy, who has decided not to finish her High School work. This leaves us only eleven members and we hope to keep these until the last.

Attendance averages during the month of November.

Seniors	99.79%
Freshman	99 58
Juniors	98 86
Sophomores	95.81

Notice that the Seniors stand at the lead of the attendance averages. Only one-half day was missed.

The K. of P. Lodge held an open meeting Wednesday night at the Hall at which time about one hundred people were present. The evening was spent in having a general good time. The Knights served luncheon to those present.

Letters To Santa Claus

Dec. 10, 1922
St. Joe, Ind.

Dear Santa:—

I am writing you a letter to tell you what to bring baby brother James and myself I would like to have a doll bed and doll, a table and set of dishes, some books and that will be all. Little James wants a rubber tire wagon and book. Grandpa has lots of candy for us so you can give our candy to some other little girl and boy. I am five years old and James is 18 months old. Be kind to boys and girls that have no mother and daddy.

Lots of Love,
Eloise and James Draggoo.

December 6, 1922

Dear Santa Claus, and Grandma Santa Claus:—Ho-Hi-Ho! Here I am a little boy 8 years old, and would like to be remembered at Xmas time. I like to have an air gun, a red sweater, and a neck tie. But if you havent got what I want, just give me what you have, most any old thing will do. I live 5 miles west of St. Joe on top of a hill. Some times people get stuck here, but if you and your rain deers get stuck, just toot your horn, and I will come out and give you a boost so as you get here, as I want an air gun most mighty bad. Please Santa don't forget, and bring Grandma Santa along. I'll look for you.

American Farm Bureau

Lespedeza Seeding Machinery at Work on Farm of E. M. Percy, Secretary-Treasurer of the Lespedeza Seed Growers' Association, St. Francisville, Louisiana.

More than 20,000 bushels of high-grade lespedeza, or "Japan clover," seed was marketed during the season of 1922 by the Louisiana Farm Bureau Lespedeza Seed Growers' Association, Inc., the first functioning commodity marketing organization organized under the direction of the farm bureau in Louisiana.

Lespedeza seed growing is a highly specialized industry, confined to a limited area of Louisiana, Mississippi and certain sections of Tennessee and Alabama. The 20,000 bushels handled by the Louisiana association is approximately one-third of the entire production of the South.

Many Orders Filled.

Under the direction of A. G. Hamilton, marketing specialist of the Louisiana State university, the association filled a total of 1,250 orders from all sections of the United States, and although selling on a falling market managed to maintain a fair percentage of profit for its members.

FARMERS PROFIT BY POSTING THEMSELVES

Those Who Have Wool on Hand Are Warned Not to Sell Without Knowledge of Market.

Farmers of Minnesota who still have wool on hand are warned by F. L. French, secretary of the Minnesota Farm Bureau federation, not to sell without full knowledge of market values. Eastern speculators, Mr. French says, are obtaining shipment from Mid-Western states at bargain prices, despite the fact that on the central markets they are bidding against each other for supplies.

"The farm bureau," says Mr. French, "has worked long and hard for a fair tariff on wool and the schedule now prevailing has strengthened the market. Farmers should profit by keeping posted on market values and not selling for less than the wool actually is worth. Recent wool pools have not only netted growers better prices, but they have served to stabilize prices. Every sale now made under the true market value tends to discount this important effect of the pool.

"More than three-fourths of the 2,700,000 pounds of wool consigned by Ohio producers for co-operative sale through the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' association have been sold. Sale of a large quantity of fine wool at the top market price on the date of sale was also announced."

"The wool market is strong, and there seems to be an actual shortage in some lines of wool," said Mark Smith, wool marketing expert of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation, on his return from a trip to the Boston market.

U. S. GRAIN GROWERS OPEN SALES AGENCY

Minneapolis Office Placed in Charge of T. H. Hagen, a Farmer of Lakeville, Minn.

President E. H. Cunningham of the United States Grain Growers, Inc., announces the opening of a sales agency at Minneapolis. The Minneapolis chamber of commerce approved the application of the United States Grain Growers Sales company of Minneapolis in October to do business through the grain exchange there.

The doors of the Minneapolis sales agency of the United States Grain Growers were opened for business on Wednesday morning, October 11, under the management of T. H. Hagen, Lakeville, Minn. The Minneapolis house of the farmers co-operative grain marketing agency will handle the grain of the Northwestern states under contract to the United States Grain Growers.

Two cars of grain from North Dakota were the first to be sold. They belonged to J. T. Faa of Divide county.

All elevators and growers in the territory tributary to Minneapolis are being notified that the United States Grain Growers is now ready to receive contracted grain.

The United States Grain Growers Sales company of Minneapolis is incorporated under the laws of Minnesota.

The United States Grain Growers Sales company of Minneapolis has an initial capital stock of $25,000 fully paid up.

The United States Grain Growers, Inc., has approximately 8,500 members in the spring wheat area, of which number 5,000 are in North Dakota, 3,100 in Minnesota and the remainder in South Dakota. Contracts signed by these members represent more than 15,000,000 bushels of grain, which they have agreed to sell through the agency for at least five years. The agency will handle grain of all kinds.

T. H. Hagen, a farmer of Lakeville, Minn., who has been selected as Minneapolis manager, has had 25 years of successful experience in the grain business at Minneapolis and Duluth. He retired two years ago to operate his farm.

In announcing the policy of the management of the Northwest sales agency, President J. F. Reed says:

"It is the hope of the directors that much of the grain marketed will be handled direct from country elevators to millers and exporters. But in order to dispose of all grain coming to the company, a seat on the Minneapolis chamber of commerce has been obtained.

"Directors of the Minnesota Farmers' Grain Dealers' association have indorsed the company and plan of organization and will use it as a selling agency for its members.

"It is the hope of directors of the Minneapolis agency that the demand of grain producers for their own marketing agency will be fully met. It will become an important factor in the grain market."

Announcement of the incorporation of the Minneapolis company marks the completion of the first step of the United States Grain Growers as [illegible] to open sales agencies at various markets.

MANY PROBLEMS ARE NAMED BY THE PRESIDENT

Outstanding Among Them Prohibition, Farm Credits and Transportation Troubles.

WOULD ENFORCE DRY LAW

Agricultural Relief Given Foremost Place, While Abolition or Revision of U. S. Railroad Labor Board Is Urged—Would Raise Immigration Limit.

Washington, Dec. 8. — President Harding appeared before congress with his annual message on the state of the Union. The following is a partial text of what he said:

"There never again will be precisely the old order; indeed, I know of no one who thinks it to be desirable. For out of the old order came the war itself, and the new order, established and made secure, never will permit its recurrence.

"It is no figure of speech to say we have come to the test of our civilization. The world has been passing—is today passing—through a great crisis. The conduct of war itself is not more difficult than the solution of the problems which necessarily follow.

Considers Home Problems.

"I am not speaking at this moment of the problem in its wider aspects of world rehabilitation or of international relationships. The reference is to our own social, financial and economic problems at home. These things are not to be considered solely as problems apart from all international relationship, but every nation must be able to carry on for itself, else its international relationship will have scant importance.

"Doubtless our own people have emerged from the World war tumult less impaired than most belligerent powers; probably we have made larger progress toward reconstruction. . . . Had we escaped the coal and railway strikes, which had no excuse for their beginning, and less justification for their delayed settlement, we should have done infinitely better. But labor was insistent on holding to the war heights, and heedless forces of reaction sought the prewar levels, and both were wrong.

"The railway strike accentuated the difficulty of the American farmer. The first distress of readjustment came to the farmer, and it will not be a readjustment fit to abide until he is relieved. The distress brought to the farmer does not affect him alone. Agricultural ill fortune is a national ill fortune. . . .

Saved From Disaster.

This congress already has taken cognizance of the misfortune which precipitate deflation brought to American agriculture. Your measures of relief and the reduction of the federal reserve discount rate undoubtedly saved the country from widespread disaster. The very proof of helpfulness already given is the strongest argument for the permanent establishment of widened credits, heretofore temporarily extended through the war finance corporation.

"The farm loan bureau, which already has proved its usefulness through the federal land banks, may well have its powers enlarged to provide ample farm production credits as well as enlarged land credits.

"In the last half of the year now closing the railways, broken in carrying capacity because of motive power and rolling stock out of order, though insistently declaring to the contrary, embargoed the farmer's shipments, or denied him cars when fortunate markets were calling.

Rail Problem Vital.

"I know of no problem exceeding in importance this one of transportation. . . . We have built 40 per cent of the world's railroad mileage, and yet find it inadequate to our present requirements. When we contemplate the inadequacy of today, it is easy to believe that the next few decades will witness the paralysis of our transportation-using social scheme or a complete reorganization on some new basis.

"Manifestly, we have need to begin on plans to co-ordinate all transportation facilities. We should more effectively connect up our rail lines with our carriers by sea. We ought to reap some benefit from the hundreds of millions expended on inland waterways, providing our capacity to utilize as well as expend. We ought to turn the motortruck into a railway feeder and distributor instead of a destroying competitor.

"The transportation problem cannot be [illegible]

Rates horizontally increased to meet increased wage outlays during the war inflation are not easily reduced. When some very moderate wage reductions were effected last summer there was a 5 per cent horizontal reduction in rates. I sought at that time, in a very informal way, to have the railway managers to go before the interstate commerce commission and agree to a heavier reduction on farm products and coal and other basic commodities and leave unchanged the freight tariffs which a very large portion of the traffic was able to bear. Neither the managers nor the commission saw fit to adopt the suggestion. Railways are not expected to render the most essential service in our social organization without a fair return on capital invested, but the government has gone so far in the regulation of rates and rules of operation that it has the responsibility of pointing the way to the reduced freight costs so essential to your national welfare. Government operation does not afford the cure.

"The labor board itself is not so constituted as best to serve the public interest. With six partisan members on a board of nine, three partisans nominated by the employees and three by the railway managers, it is inevitable that the partisan viewpoint is maintained throughout hearings and in decisions handed down. . . . I am well convinced that the functions of this tribunal could be much better carried on here in Washington.

Offers New Plan.

"The substitution of a labor division in the interstate commerce commission made up from its membership to hear and decide disputes relating to wages and working conditions which have failed of adjustment by proper committees created by the railways and their employees, offers a more effective plan. . . . .

"This suggested substitution will involve a necessary increase in the membership of the commission, probably four, to constitute the labor division. If the suggestion appeals to the congress, it will be well to specify that the labor division shall be constituted of representatives of the four rate-making territories, thereby assuring a tribunal conversant with the conditions which obtain in the different rate-making sections of the country.

Most Demoralizing Factor.

"Constitutional prohibition has been adopted by the nation. It is the supreme law of the land. In plain speaking, there are conditions relating to its enforcement which savor of nation-wide scandal. It is the most demoralizing factor in our public life.

"Most of our people assumed that the adoption of the eighteenth amendment meant the elimination of the question from our politics. On the contrary, it has been so intensified as an issue that many voters are disposed to make all political decisions with reference to this single question. It is distracting the public mind and prejudicing the judgment of the electorate.

"The day is unlikely to come when the eighteenth amendment will be repealed. The fact may as well be recognized and our course adapted accordingly. If the statutory provisions for its enforcement are contrary to deliberate public opinion, which, I do not believe, the rigorous and literal enforcement will concentrate public attention on any requisite modification.

"Such a course conforms with the law and saves the humiliation of the government and the humiliation of our the destructive forces engaged in widespread violation, official corruption, and individual demoralization.

Plans Governors' Meet.

"The eighteenth amendment involves the concurrent authority of state and federal governments for the enforcement of the policy it defines. A certain lack of definiteness, through division of responsibility is thus introduced. In order to bring about a full understanding of duties and responsibilities, as thus distributed, I purpose to invite the governors of the states and territories, at an early opportunity, to a conference with the federal executive authority. Out of the full and free considerations which will thus be possible, it is confidently believed will emerge a more adequate comprehension of the whole problem, and definite policies of national and state co-operation in administering the laws.

"There are pending bills for the registration of the alien who has come to our shores. I wish the passage of such an act might be expedited. . . . Before enlarging the immigration quota, we had better provide registration for aliens, now here or continually pressing for admission, and establish our examination boards abroad, to make sure of desirables only.

Wants to Be Prepared.

"The proposed survey of a plan to draft all the resources of the republic, human and material, for national defense may well have your approval. I commended such a program in case of future war, in the inaugural address of March 4, 1921, and every [illegible]

JESUS AMONG FRIENDS AND FOES

LESSON TEXT—Luke 10:38-42; 11:14-54.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.—John 15:14.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Luke 2:34, 35.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus in the Home of Friends.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Among Friends and Foes.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Friends and Enemies of Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Methods of Dealing With People.

I. Jesus in the Home of Friends (Luke 10:38-42).

There is no place where true character is so clearly revealed as at home.

1. His Reception (v. 38). Martha was the head of the home, therefore she received him. It would be a fine thing if all homes were open to receive Jesus.

2. Mary Sitting at Jesus' Feet (v. 39). She, of fine spiritual discernment, knew that sitting at the Lord's feet and hearing His Word was that which would please him most.

3. Martha Cumbered About Much Serving (v. 40). Both sisters loved the Lord. It would be impossible to say which loved the more; but Martha was bent on providing a fine meal for Him. She was trying to do so many things that she was on the verge of distraction. This had so completely got on her nerves that she found fault with Jesus for permitting Mary to leave the kitchen to listen to His teaching. Not only did she criticize her sister and Jesus, but she assumed the authority to command Him to send Mary back to the kitchen to help.

4. Jesus' Answer (vv. 41, 42. (1) Rebuked Martha (v. 41). He did this tenderly, for He knew that she loved Him sincerely. (2) Defends Mary (v. 42). He declared that but one thing was needful, and that Mary had chosen that good part which could not be taken away from her.

II. Jesus Among Foes (11:14-23; 29-32; 37-54).

1. Charged With Being in League With the Devil (vv. 14-23). Being unwilling to receive Him as the Son of God, and yet unable to account for His mighty works, they declared He was casting out demons through Beelzebub, the chief of demons. Jesus exposed the fallacy of their reasoning by showing that in that case Satan would be arrayed against himself, and therefore would destroy his own kingdom.

2. Refused to Believe His Miracles (vv. 29-32). They asked for a sign, to which He replied that they would have a sign from heaven in His death and resurrection. He reminded them, however, that their request showed unbelief surpassing that of the heathen queen of the South, and the wicked people of Nineveh.

3. Wickedness Denounced (vv. 37-54). He pronounced six woes upon those who were opposing Him and seeking His destruction.

(1) The Pharisees (vv. 37-41). These He denounced for (a) punctiliously observing some minute rites and at the same time breaking the Ten Commandments. They carefully tithed the small herbs of the garden while practicing injustice to their fellowmen and withholding love from God. He pointed out to them the folly of attending to these external acts while the heart was filled with wickedness. (b) Desiring public recognition (v. 43). This is a common sin today. (c) For feigning humility (v. 44). He compares their hypocrisy to graves which are on a level with the ground and may be stepped upon unconsciously by someone, and thus defiled. We can avoid those who make their vanity known by boasting, but some are filled with this same wickedness who do not thus make it known.

(2) The Lawyers (vv. 45-54). Jesus' strictures on the hypocritical Pharisees aroused the lawyers, one of whom indignantly declared: "You are insulting us also." In replying to this Christ pronounced three woes upon them; (a) for placing burdensome requirements upon the people to which they themselves would not sumbit (v. 46). (b) For the murder of God's prophets (vv. 47-51). He showed that their attitude toward Him was the same that was shown to the prophets by their fathers. (c) For keeping back the knowledge of God by false interpretation of the Scriptures (vv. 52-54). There is no wickedness perhaps so great as that of supposed teachers of God's Word who keep its precious truths from the people by perverting its meaning.

Rival Claims.

Governor Sproul was talking at a dinner in Harrisburg, about certain rival trade claims.

"It reminds me of a story," he said. Calhoun Clay said to George Washington White:

"'A hunnerd an' four? Why,' said Wash White, 'he tole me last March he wuz ninety-six.'

"'Yas,' said Cal Clay, 'but he done hear since den of an ole man in Ireland wot's a hunnerd and free.'"

Revenged.

"The magician fired you?"

"Yes," replied the professor's helper, "but I got even with him."

"How?"

"For one of his tricks he borrowed a gold watch from a gentleman in the audience and pretended to smash it with a hammer. Instead of slipping him the phony watch used for that purpose, I handed him the gentleman's watch. That little trick cost him $200."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

OUTLINE OF BIG ROAD-BUILDING PROGRAM FOR UNITED STATES

An Improved Highway in Muskingum County, Ohio.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Fifteen to twenty years of building good roads lie ahead of the United States. Under the program which the country has adopted there will be built, during that time, 180,000 miles of improved highways which will constitute the federal-aid highway system and an equal or greater mileage of state and local roads. When the great job is done, the transportation facilities of the country will far exceed those of any other nation, past or present, in the world. The highways of the ancient Romans, whose fame has come down through the centuries, will pale by comparison.

Details of this vast road-building program were placed before the Highway Education board at its recent conference in Washington by state highway engineers and officials of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, to whom has been entrusted the work of planning and supervising the construction of federal-aid highways. The plan was presented to enable the board to proceed authoritatively with its work of devising aids for schools and colleges to which road-builders of the country are turning for competent highway engineers.

Aggregate Cost $3,000,000,000.

Officials of the bureau place the aggregate cost of the federal-aid program alone at about $3,000,000,000, spread over the twenty-year period. They base this estimate on an average cost of $17,000 per mile. The average cost, in turn, takes into consideration all classes of improved roadways from the cheapest to the most expensive types. Approximately one-third of the proposed system, or 60,000 miles of improved highways, already are either built or building.

The program is a new one. Up to comparatively recent years, road-building in the United States had been conducted without special regard to a national system. Highways had been constructed where needed without considering whether they would link up in the most effective manner with the whole network of roads to be spread over the nation. Engineers had sought more to meet immediate and local demands than the broader requirements of the states and nation.

Roads Fit National System.

The present federal-aid road-building program, officials of the bureau state, will contemplate the construction of only such roads as fit into the national program and contribute to the national system. At the same time the roads will be so selected as to serve the most important local requirements. With marked modifications, the system adopted in building the railways of the country will be borne in mind in the construction of the country's new highways. There will be main lines of highway communication between centers and thousands of miles of feeder roads, reaching back into the more sparsely settled regions and into the rich agricultural sections, to tap areas whose population and products will flow over the new system.

New roads will be planned and built—thousands of miles of them—where they will fit in most advantageously with the entire program. The bureau is continuing its research work into most efficient methods of road building, including the character and wearing power of materials, resisting qualities of varying sub-soils, etc., and has amassed a considerable store of valuable information all of which will be available for the highway engineer of tomorrow, whom the board is seeking to have educated in practical and modern methods.

No Truth in Statement That Seeds Work on Animals' Kidneys—Proved by Tests.

For feeding cows, 2.5 tons of pumpkins, with seeds in, are the equal of one ton of corn silage. Some folks say that pumpkin seeds will cause cows to go dry, or that they will work on animals' kidneys, and hence the pumpkin seeds should not be fed. There is no truth in such statements, as has been proved by feeding tests. On the other hand, pumpkin seeds are beneficial. When fed to pigs they free the pigs of worms and put the digestive apparatus in tip-top shape. An excess of seeds causes an upset of the digestive organs for a day or so, because the seeds are very rich. There is no danger, though, if fed in the amounts in which they occur naturally. For feeding pigs pumpkins are sometimes cooked, but this extra work is not warranted.

Squashes can be fed to cows, pigs and horses the same as pumpkins. Some Colorado stockmen make a practice of fattening pigs exclusively on squashes, and get good returns per acre from the crop, but the pork has an objectionable yellow color. Horses will sometimes refuse to eat pumpkins or squashes.

USEFUL GIFT FOR CHRISTMAS

Kansas Agriculturist Suggests Sled Load of Purebred Pigs, Calves and Chickens.

A Kansas agriculturist has suggested a new kind of Christmas present for farm boys and girls. He thinks it would be a good stunt for Santa Claus to bring a sled load of purebred pigs, calves and chickens and leave them for children along with the dolls, red trains, skates, drums and other toys. Purebred poultry farms are often started from a trio of chickens, and valuable herds of cattle from a calf.

MARKET HOME-GROWN FEEDS

Department of Agriculture Says One of Best Methods Is Through Good Dairy Cows.

One of the best methods of marketing home-grown feeds is through good dairy cows, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It displays in a convincing manner the results that come from giving the feed to different herds.

The results show that:

If you sell feeds to dairy cows you have a constant market.

If you sell feeds to high-producing dairy cows you have a good and constant market.

If you sell feeds to purebred, high-producing dairy cows you have a double market—a market for calves and a market for milk.

That it pays to know whether a cow is a good, poor, or high producer is shown by records of cow-testing associations. In one association the poorest cow produced in a year only enough income over cost of feed to buy a 2-cent stamp. To pay for labor and overhead expenses her owner had only the manure, skim milk, and calf. To get rid of such cows is one of the principal objects of cow-testing associations.

WOOL PRODUCED IN INDIANA

Demonstration Work in Montgomery County Credited for Big Increase in Yield.

Demonstration work in sheep breeding has had a marked effect on wool production in Montgomery county, Ind., as is shown by the fact that in 1918, 10,000 pounds of wool were produced in the county, while in 1921 the sheep breeders' association alone pooled and marketed more than six carloads. RADIO

VARYING INDUCTANCE OF THE TUNING COIL

How Different Forms of Winding Affect Reception of Long and Short Waves.

Tuning inductances for radio receiving circuits are made in a variety of forms. For short waves, the most commonly used form of inductance is the single layer solenoid, which is nothing more nor less than the common tuning coil, consisting of a single layer of wire wound upon a cylindrical form.

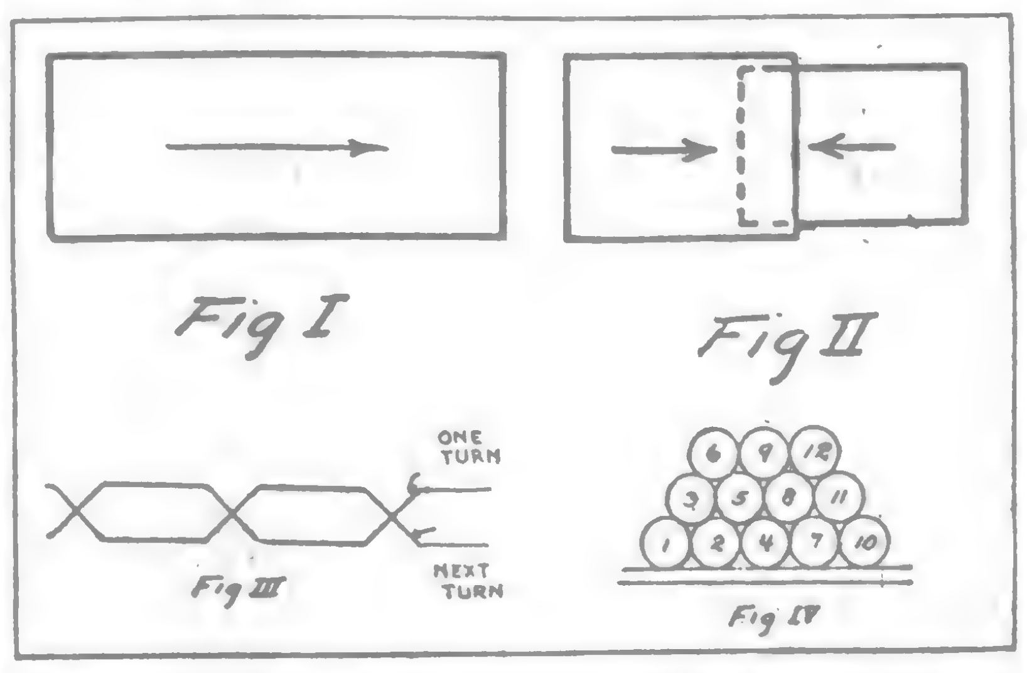
The method used to vary the inductance of a tuning coil is a slide which gives single turn variations or a switch which usually varies the inductance in groups of turns. For very close tuning where even the turn to turn variation is too coarse, a series or shunt in the circuit is necessary.

A closer variation of inductance can be procured by splitting the number of turns in two and winding one-half on a hollow cylindrical tube, and winding the second half on a slightly smaller cylindrical tube of such size that it can easily be slid into the first one. If now, the two coils are connected in series but in such a manner that their magnetic fields interlock, a continuous variation of inductance can be had by moving the coils with respect to each other. Fig. 1 represents the tuning coil—all of the magnetic field in the same direction. Fig. 2 represents approximately the same winding as was used in Fig. 1, but wound on two concentric forms. When the two coils of Fig. 2 are separated the fields of the two coils do not react and the inductance is the sum of the separate inductances of the two individual coils.

As the coils are brought closer together the field of one coil bucks down the coil and the total inductance is decreased. Finally when the winding on the inner cylinder is exactly under the winding on the outer cylinder, the inductance of one coil neutralizes that of the other and the resultant inductance, neglecting leakage, is zero.

A variometer functions exactly as did the two coils shown in Fig. 2. In a variometer, one coil rotates with respect to the other instead of sliding in and out as was the case in Fig. 2. If the windings of a variometer are on a cylindrical surface there will be a large amount of leakage, which decreases the ratio of maximum to minimum wave length to which the variometer will tune. A variometer with windings on a spherical surface and having a small mechanical clearance between rotor and stator will give mimimum leakage. There is an excellent variometer on the market at the present time with a so-called "basket" winding. Not only are the windings on a spherical surface, but a cross-section of the winding (see Fig. 3) is such that the distributed capacity is reduced to a minimum. This is accomplished by separating adjacent turns and crossing them at right angles.

This same method of winding inductances is applied to the "spider web" coils. The change in wave length when using "spider web" coils is accomplished by the use of a series of shunt variable condensers since the coils are not as a rule provided with taps.



For longer wave lengths the bank wound coil is used to reduce the distributed capacity in winding multilayer inductances. Fig. 4 shows how the turns of three-layer bank wound inductances are arranged.

The "duo-lateral" coil is an improvement over the bank wound coil. In a "duo-lateral" winding the conductors in two successive layers are not parallel as they are in the bank winding, but cross each other at an angle. In our estimation basket wound variometers with no shunted capacity are most efficient for short wave tuning while duo-lateral wound coils of large diameter, with a small amount of shunted capacity for tuning, are most efficient for long wave reception.

USEFUL "DON'TS" TO KNOW

Every One of Them Is Valuable Advice to the Amateur Radio Operator.

Don't fail to insulate the antenna.

Don't place the lightning switch indoors.

Don't listen-in during a thunderstorm.

Don't cause interference with other stations.

Don't try to use a loud speaker with a crystal set.

Don't run wires parallel in making up receiving sets.

Don't neglect to read everything available on radio.

Don't attach ends of antenna to power or telephone poles.

Don't connect a radio set direct to the electric light circuit.

Don't forget that tickler coils are not used with crystal detector sets.

Don't expect to get loud signals with a crystal detector set while using an indoor antenna.

Don't always blame the broadcasting station. It is sometimes the fault of your own apparatus.

Annealing Hard Wire.

If hard-drawn copper wire is used for connections in the rear of panels, it will break when bent or it is most sure to break upon removal from the fastening. The end of the wire may be annealed by heating it in a flannel or by applying a coat of tin or solder. The wire can then be bent several times without its breaking.

ROAD BUILDING

NO ONE ROAD TYPE IS BEST

There Is Suitable Kind of Highway for Traffic of Every Description—Many Considerations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

No effort has been made to encourage the construction of any particular type of road in the federal-aid projects administered by the bureau of roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. The legal requirement that the roads shall be "substantial in character" has not been interpreted to mean that only the most expensive types of roads should be built. It has been recognized that the heavy and expensive construction which is necessary in New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania is not suitable or warranted for the less exacting traffic of Nevada, Idaho and the Dakotas.

There is a suitable type of road for every type of traffic. Granite blocks are best around wharves and freight depots; country thoroughfares need to be better than rural side roads, lightly traveled. A number of other considerations have influenced the choice of type in many cases. It is frequently found that suitable local materials may cost less than better materials imported from a distance; approval of the use of local materials is not infrequently given for the purpose of encouraging local production. In parts of the Far West the entire absence of water along a right of way, and the expense of keeping an adequate supply, often make it necessary to approve the building of a type of construction that can be built without using large quantities of water.

The initial decision as to the type of a particular road is made by the state highway department. The bureau of public roads makes an independent study of the conditions. The most suitable type of road in the judgment of the engineers of the State department and of the bureau of public roads is finally decided upon. The earth, sand-clay and gravel roads which make up 66 per cent of the mileage, have cost only about one-fourth of the federal-aid funds used, while the highest types, including cement concrete, brick and bituminous concrete have called for 60 per cent of the money to build 24 per cent of the mileage.

Much Money Is Needed to Cut a Highway Through the Mountains.

PAINT HELPS STEEL BRIDGES

Life of Many Steel Structures Is Shortened by Infrequent and Improper Attention.

The life of many steel highway bridges is materially shortened because of infrequent and improper painting, says the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. Each year a considerable amount of money is spent for the replacement of rusted bridge members that would have remained sound if they had been kept painted; and more serious than the waste of money is the danger to the public due to the weakening of some hidden part which may cause the collapse of the whole bridge.

Officials of the bureau urge that all steel bridges be inspected at least once each year and repainted at the first sign of rusting. Normally repainting is required at periods of from two to five years, depending on the climate. A suitable paint should be used, and if there is uncertainty about any paint, information should be requested from the state highway department.

It is a mistake to repaint without properly cleaning the metal of all dirt, rust, loose paint, and blisters. Usually the places hardest to reach are the ones that should receive the most attention.

TERRIBLE BUSINESS RIVALRY IN KANSAS TOWN

Concordia, Kan., has a man whose proudest accomplishment is that of beating his business competitor to the postoffice every morning.

The Solution

Several solutions were sent in in reply to the bibical problem which we published on November 16, under the head "How Many Fish Did Charles Catch." Several of them were correct but as many were incorrect.

A correct answer is as follows:

Number of books in the Old Testament	39
Number of books in the New Testament	27
Number of Apostles present at Transfiguration	3
Number of books written by Luke	2
Number of times Israelites marched around Jericho	13
Number of pieces of silver received by Judas	30
Number of spies sent out by Moses	12
Number of letters in city where Zacheus climed tree	7
Number of Apostles called "sons of thunder"	2

Solution:—39 plus 27 equals 66, times 3 equals 198, divided by 2 equals 99, less 13 equals 86, times 30 equals 2580, divided by 12 equals 215, plus 7 equals 222, divided by 2 equals 111, the answer.

Don't Trust To Luck

The mere fact that you have been lucky so far and have not felt the pinch of poverty, is no sign that your luck will continue. Many things may happen sometime.

Ever stop to think that your wife may get sick? That there will be a hired girl in the kitchen? That there will be doctor's bills to pay? That the rent may come due? That there are installments on the furniture? That you might break a leg? That taxes are sure as death? That you might be burned out at house and home? That your stock might die? That there is no limit to the bad luck that might come? That such events require ready money? BE PREPARED by saving a little now. You will never regret it.

WE WISH

A Merry CHRISTMAS

TO YOU ALL

The St. JOE ELEVATOR

Samuel Keesler, Mgr. Grain Dept.

Bert Jackson, Mgr. Coal Dept.

Call on us—glad to see you. Come in whether you want anything or not.

Our Greeting to Each of You

WE TRUST that your Christmas preparations have been satisfactory, that your gifts will produce a high degree of pleasure in recompense for the love and consideration which prompt them, and that you will spend the holiday suffused with the feelings of peace and joy which come from work well done and a knowledge that you have made others happier.

If the bestowal of Christmas remembrances were merely the following of a custom, and not inspired by a higher purpose, we believe that it would soon disuse; for customs change. The fact that it increases from year to year shows that the spirit of good will, the desire to give pleasure to the unfortunate and the impressing upon friends that they have an important existence in one's heart are deeply rooted, flourishing sentiments. Such are attributes of the soul and point to that soul-growth which is the best augury for the future of mankind.

Our greeting to you is of cheer and confident hope. Our feeling toward you is of deep appreciation for the encouragement and patronage you have given us, and an optimism that if we continue to co-operate we shall be able to make this community more prosperous and better in every way. Our wish is that this may be the merriest Christmas you have ever spent.

Sheffer Guilty

Goes to Prison For Life

Nie Sheffer is guilty of the murder of James W. Sheffer of Auburn, his brother. A jury in the Steuben circuit court at Angola returned this verdict at 2:12 Sunday afternoon.

Only four ballots were taken. The jury stood 10 to 2 for conviction on the first ballot. The jury decided on a life sentence and Judge Endicott passed sentence on the prisoner immediately after the jury's verdict was returned.

Ten jurors favored the death penalty but a compromise was finally reached finding Sheffer guilty of second degree murder with the penalty at life sentence.

Nie was trembling with emotion after the sentence was passed. He said that he didn't want a new trial. He was taken to Auburn Monday morning and was then taken to Michigan City Wednesday to start his life term.

Nie wept bitterly and requested that he be allowed to see his father before being taken to Michigan City, also to visit the garage in which J. W. Sheffer and wife were shot and the Sheffer farm.

Other charges are now rising against Nie. One is that he is suspected of killing a groceryman in Fort Wayne in 1918.

VENGEANCE!

Opie Read

Supposing you were a young man who had served in a war and escaped its perils and that the future were rosy with promise, excepting that fate had called upon you to execute a grim and terrible purpose, the circumstances being that during the conflict, an outlaw operating under the semi-sanction of guerrilla warfare had raided your home and murdered your father, and then, hanging his body to a tree, had insolently pinned a card to it bearing the outlaw's name! Would not you likely do as Virgil Drace did—swear a solemn vow to find that outlaw, hang him as high as Haman, and decorate his corpse with your own card? Then, while you were setting about to execute that vow, suppose you met a fascinating girl with whom you fell in love and had the satisfaction of finding your affection sincerely reciprocated. Then supposing it developed that the girl were the daughter of the man upon whom you had sworn to wreak vengeance. What would you do? Is it not a satisfactory web upon which to weave an intensely interesting story of romance, especially when the incidents occurred in the South following the Civil war, the young man a northern officer, the girl a beautiful, fiery southerner, and all the other characters and episodes of the South and that turbulent period which marked the days of reconstruction? Would it not be more absorbing if, as in this case, the author were one of the greatest of American novelists? You will find this stirring romance worked out in the most charming way in "Periwinkle House," by Opie Read.

No man in the United States has written as many stories as Opie Read, and no author has had a larger number of readers. He was born in a small town in Tennessee in 1852, followed newspaper work for awhile in Kentucky, and then moved to Little Rock, Ark., where he edited the Arkansas Gazette from 1878 to 1881. He was next on the staff of the Cleveland (O.) Leader and then returned to Little Rock, where he established the Arkansaw Traveler, a humorous paper which attracted the attention of the entire English-speaking world. Mr. Read furnished most of the material that went into the publication. He conducted it from 1883 to 1891 and then moved to Chicago, where he has since resided, engaged in literary work.

It is doubtful if Opie Read himself could recall the titles of all the books he has written, without referring to a list. One or more of them is in nearly every home where fiction is indulged in throughout the land. They form a conspicuous part of the fiction section of every public library, and are carried in stock by every enterprising book dealer. During late years he has been less prolific, due to the fact that he has not had the leisure for writing, for he has become one of the most sought after lecturers, and his time is practically filled with Chautauqua, Lyceum and special platform engagements. In this work he has covered practically the entire nation.

Out upon the sheen of the mighty river the pine-torch flames fell in rippling streams, and the full moon, peeping over the tall timber, made mouths at herself in the wrinkled mirror of flood. On the steamboat Leona the negro deck-hands were chanting the buoyant anthem of the June rise. In the gilt, enameled saloon, a sweet-stringed waltz, centuries removed from the melodic bellow of the black bucks below, swelled out upon a breeze that seemed eager to mingle with it, while sentiment smiled and gallantry bowed in the studied graces of a floating ballroom on the Mississippi. All ceremony was precise with the inherited observance of precedent, save when some hair-greased and less refined dandy of the woods, having lingered too long at the bar, let liquor fly to his heels to cut a rebellious pigeon-wing.

The boundless ranch of the West was unknown, and along the lower Mississippi lay the great plantations of America. Except for the toil of the slaves, industrial life had been only a sort of happy indolence; but society held many a thrilling charm, and with its libraries from Europe, intellectual life indulged the luxury of ceremonious romanticism. This atmosphere was still breathed on the big Mississippi steamboats, for fantasies which render poetic the condition of us all linger on the water after having been driven from the land.

In the ballroom of the Leona the dress of the men and the women was variegated with the odd ends of different periods of style. Old chests, hidden during the Civil war, only a few years past, had been opened to give up the faintly scented fluffs and gourd-flowered vests of Andrew Jackson's day; and the brigadier in ruffled shirt poured gallantry's extravagant figures of speech upon the graceful young dame arrayed in the silk that had adorned the form of her grandmother when in the village of Washington she waltzed with Lafayette.

During a lull in the music-measured capering a tall, handsome young man, garbed in the fashion of the day, passed with long and careless strides from one end of the saloon and out toward the upper deck.

Admiring eyes were bent upon him; and one lady turned to her partner and said:

[illegible]

The Colonel [illegible]

to gratify your more than natural curiosity, but that pleasure is denied me. I can't tell you who he is."

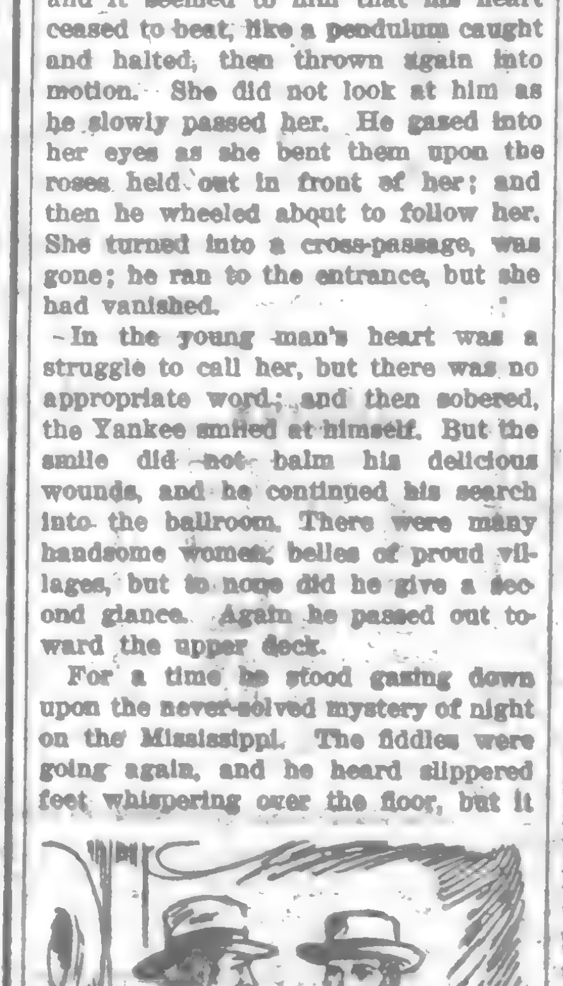
And then—because the Colonel had sighed his own sentimental distress in the presence of Miss Lucy and because her curiosity concerning the young stranger stirred a jealous qualm—he added: "He looks like a Yankee to me."

The young man was a Yankee. And because he was journeying to the South upon a grim and terrible mission, the gayeties of the ballroom had grated upon him and he had sought the solitude of the upper deck. Yet it was this moment that Fate chose to bring him face to face with one who was to change the whole course of his life.

For as he turned into a long passageway, aflame with light but deserted, there suddenly entered at the far end a girl thrilling in litheness and almost barbaric in dress. In swift unconsciousness of him she approached, a great handful of roses in red glare hiding her features. She lowered her hand; he caught full view of her face; and it seemed to him that his heart ceased to beat, like a pendulum caught and halted, then thrown again into motion. She did not look at him as he slowly passed her. He gazed into her eyes as she bent them upon the roses held out in front of her; and then he wheeled about to follow her. She turned into a cross-passage, was gone; he ran to the entrance, but she had vanished.

In the young man's heart was a struggle to call her, but there was no appropriate word; and then sobered, the Yankee smiled at himself. But the smile did not balm his delicious wounds, and he continued his search into the ballroom. There were many handsome women, belles of proud villages, but to none did he give a second glance. Again he passed out toward the upper deck.

For a time he stood gazing down upon the never-solved mystery of night on the Mississippi. The fiddles were going again, and he heard slippered feet whispering over the floor, but it seemed to him that this scene of gayety was forced, like a melancholy laugh; it reminded him of a book of poems in tatters, of a love-letter in faded ink.



"Then Tremble; I Am Liberty Shottle."

Built about one of the smokestacks was a shanty of boards called the "dog house." Turning a corner of the shanty, the young man stumbled against some one; a man growled in resentment.

"I beg your pardon!"

"I should say you do!" A young fellow of unusual height and of humorous slimness came forth out of the shadow. The boat was landing, and a turpentine-torch on the shore revealed him, pale and long of face, with collar cut low and chin standing high.

"Yes, sir," he added, "and although it may not be necessary on this occasion, yet if you knew who I am, you would apologize some more."

"Ah, you don't say!" replied the Yankee, smiling. "And as you seem to be fond of the music of apology, will you please tell me who you are?"

"I can do that easy enough, but I don't wish to frighten you."

"You are [illegible], but the fact is I rather enjoy the sensation of fright."

"Then, tremble; I am Liberty Shottle."

"What, you don't mean that you are really Liberty Shottle?"

"I swear it."

"Well, well! And now will you [illegible]

"Not at all. My name is Virgil Drace."

"You don't say? Well, well! But I never heard of you, either." Now they laughed, the joyous and unsuspicious mirth of youth. They stood looking down upon the deck-hands, loading freight, listening to the stream of the second mate's profanity, who swore his emotion by the stars, the moon, the river, the universe; and when the Leona was on her way again, the fiddles going, the muddy roustabouts singing, Liberty Shottle and Drace seated themselves on campstools, eagering toward swift acquaintance, the friendship of two natures far apart in aim and principle.

"If you've got two cigars, I'll join you in a smoke," said Shottle. "Thank you. You see, my people, what few of them are left, say that I don't exist. They haven't cast me off, or anything of that sort, but being of staid habits themselves, they swear that I am too unreal to exist. Lord, what is the world but queer? What's your game?"

"I haven't any—any game," parried the Northerner. "But what are you doing on this boat yourself?"

"I'm going down to New Orleans," replied Liberty, "to see how long I can stay there. I had a pretty fair job a couple of months ago teaching a school near Memphis. They liked me, too. I've got a sheep's hide from Chapel Hill university, North Carolina, with all the wool singed off and the board acknowledged my qualifications, but they caught me shaking dice with the boys and told me that as there were some branches of learning they didn't care to have instilled, I'd better get a professorship in some higher institution. Have you been in there?"

Liberty Shottle waved his hand; and Drace, thinking he meant the ballroom, answered him:

"Only passed through. I've been rather worn with that sort of thing."

"Oh, you think I meant the ball! I meant the poker-room."

"Yes, I sat in there for a time."

"How did you come out?"

"Not very well. Lost two hundred."

"You speak of losing two hundred as lightly as if it were a matter of breath instead of blood. Would you mind holding my hand till you say it again? Two hundred! Why, you know, a fellow would teach bulletheads and sissies for two months for two hundred dollars . . . Now, let me lay down a proposition: I am lucky tonight. I lost fifteen dollars, all I had, but I'd just got up to the point of winning when I lost my last dollar. Just one more ante, and it would have come my way. I saw it coming, but a blundering fool headed it off. Now, here's my scheme, and it's a good one: you want your two hundred back; you stake me to a hundred, and I'll go in there and make a cleaning. Don't refuse, now, until you have let your mind digest the situation. Most of the errors in this life come from snap judgment."

"Ah, you think you can win, because you lost?"

"My dear Virgil, there is, you might say, a psychology in everything. Who wins a fight? The man who believes he can't? No, the man who knows he can. And I know right now. Why, I'd stake my life on it. You give me the hundred and stay right here and wait. As for my honesty, I can give you references—the mayor of New Orleans and Judge Hebbins of Memphis—but he died last week. No matter — I'd jump into the river and let the paddle-wheel beat me into sausagemeat before I'd deceive you. Liberty Shottle, that's my name!"

Drace leaned back and laughed. "Liberty, a thing astonishing to me is going to happen. I'll stake you to the hundred."

No superstitious devotee ever received from the priest of the gods a libation with more of emotional strain than Liberty Shottle evinced when he closed in tight clutch on Drace's adventurous hundred. Then he bowed and disappeared.

Drace sat musing, and soon he began to wonder why he had been so weak as to give $100 to this peculiar fellow, a stranger. Well, Liberty had amused him. Mirth has its cash, and in this world there is more money spent for the promotion of laughter than for the relief of tears.

Presently Shottle returned. He sat down and though physically he was light, the camp stool groaned beneath him. Drace waited. The Leona blew her great horn and all the world seemed to tremble. When the sound had died [illegible] miles away, the [illegible]

A QUESTION OF CLIMATE

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

COLONEL MORRISON had three initials, so the town naturally called him "Alphabetical" Morrison, and dropped the "Colonel." He came to our part of the country in an early day—he used to explain that they caught him in the trees, when he was drinking creek water, eating sheep-sorrel and running wild with a buffalo tail for a trolley, and that the first thing they did, after teaching him to eat out of a plate, was to set him at work in the grading gang that was laying out the Cottonwood and Walnut rivers and putting the limestone in the hills. He was one of the original five patriots who laid out the Corn Belt railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific, and was appointed one of that committee to take the matter to New York for the inspection of capitalists, and be it said to the credit of Alphabetical Morrison that he was the only person in the crowd with money enough to pay the ferryman when he reached the Missouri river, though he had only enough to get himself across. But in spite of that the road was built, and though it missed our town, it was because we didn't vote the bonds, though old Alphabetical went through the county, roaring in the schoolhouses, bellowing at the crossroads, and doing all that a good, honest pair of lungs could do for the cause. However, he was not dismayed at his failure, and began immediately to organize a company to build another road. We finally secured a railroad, though it was only a branch.

Over his office door he had a sign —"Land Office"—painted on the false board front of the building in letters as big as a cow, and the first our newspaper knew of him was twenty years ago, when he brought in an order for some stationery for the Commercial club. At that time we had not heard that the town supported a Commercial club—nor had anyone else heard of it, for that matter—for old Alphabetical was the president, and his bookkeeper, with the Miss dropped off her name, was secretary. But he had a wonderfully alluring letterhead printed, and seemed to get results, for he made a living while his competitors starved. Later, when he found time, he organized a real Commercial club, and had himself elected president of it. He used to call meetings of the club to discuss things, but as no one cared much for his monologues on the future of the town, the attendance was often light. He issued circulars referring to our village as "the Queen City of the Prairies," and on the circulars was a map, showing that the Queen City of the Prairies was "the railroad axis of the West." There was one road running into the town; the others old Alphabetical indicated with dotted lines, and explained they were in process of construction.

He became possessed of a theory that a canning factory would pay in the Queen City of the Prairies, and the first step he took toward building it was to invest in a high hat, a long coat and white vest, and a pair of mouse-colored trousers. With these and his theory he went East and returned with a contract. The canning factory went up, but the railroad rates went wrong, and the factory was never opened. Alphabetical blinked at it through his gold-rimmed glasses for a few weeks, and then organized a company to turn it into a woolen mill. He elected himself president of that company and used to bring around to our paper notices of directors' meetings, and while he was in the office he would insist that we devoted too much space to idle gossip and not enough to the commercial and industrial interests of the Queen City.

At times he would bring in an editorial that he had written himself, highly excitable and full of cyclonic language, and if we printed it Alphabetical would buy a hundred copies of the paper containing it and send them east. His office desk gradually filled with woodcuts and zinc etchings of buildings that never existed save in his dear old head, and about twice a year during the boom days he would bring them around and have a circular printed on which were the pictures showing the imaginary public buildings and theoretical business thoroughfares of the Queen City.

The woolen mill naturally didn't pay, and he persuaded some eastern capitalists to install an electric plant in the building and put a street-car line in the town, though the longest distance from one side of the place to the other was less than ten blocks. But Alphabetical was [illegible] about it, and had the governor come down to drive the first spike. It was [illegible] and Alphabetical pulled it up and used it for a paper-weight in his office for many years, and it is now the only reminder there is in town of the street railway, except a hard ridge of earth over the ties in the middle of Main street. When someone twitted him on the failure of the street railway he made answer:

over and yawp that old Alphabetical is visionary. Here I can get a canning factory and nobody eats the goods; I hustle up a woolen factory, and the community quits wearing trousers; I build for them a street-car line to haul them to and from their palatial residences, and what do the sun-baked human mud-turtles do but all jump off the log into the water and hide from them cars like they were chariots of fire? What this town needs is not factories, nor railroads, nor modern improvements—Old Alphabetical can get them—but the next great scheme I go into is to go down the river, get some good red mud, and make a few thousand men who will build up a town."

It has been fifteen years and over since Colonel Morrison put on his long coat and high hat and started for the money markets of the East, seeking whom he might devour. At the close of the eighties the Colonel and all his tribe found that the stock of eastern capitalists who were ready to pay good prices for the fine shimmering blue sky and bracing ozone of the West was running low. It was said in town that the Colonel had come to the end of his string, for not only were the doors of capital closed to him in the East, but newcomers had stopped looking for farms at home. There was nothing to do but to sit down and swap jack-knives with other land agents, and as they had taken most of the agencies for the best insurance companies while the Colonel was on dress parade, there was nothing left for him to do but to run for justice of the peace, and, being elected, do what he could to make his tenure for life.

Though he was elected, more out of gratitude for what he had tried to do for the town than because people thought he would make a fair judge, he got no further than his office in popular esteem. He did not seem to wear well with the people in the daily run and jostle of life. During the forty years he has been in our town, he has lived most of the time apart from the people—transacting his business in the East, or locating strangers on new lands. He has not been one of us, and there were stories afloat that his shrewdness had sometimes caused him to thrust a toe over the dead-line of exact honesty. In the town he never helped us to fight for those things of which the town is really proud: our schools, the college, the municipal ownership of electric lights and waterworks, the public library, the abolition of the saloon, and all of the dozen small matters of public interest in which good citizens take a pride. Colonel Morrison was living his grand life, in his tailor-made clothes, while his townsmen were out with their coats off making our town the substantial place it is. So in his latter days he is old Alphabetical Morrison, a man apart from us. We like him well enough, and so long as he cares to be justice of the peace no one will object, for that is his due. But, someway, there is no talk of making him county clerk; and there is a reason in everybody's mind why no party names him to run for county treasurer. He has been trying hard enough for ten years to break through the crust of the common interests that he has so long ignored. One sees him at public meetings—a rather wistful-looking, chubby-faced old man—on the edge of the crowd, ready to be called out for a speech. But no one calls his name; no one cares particularly what old Alphabetical has to say. Long ago he said all that he can say to our people.

The only thing that Alphabetical ever organized that paid was a family. In the early days he managed to get a home clear of indebtedness and was shrewd enough to keep it out of all of his transactions. Tow-headed Morrisons filled the schoolhouse, and twenty years later there were so many of his girls teaching school that the school board had to make a ruling [illegible] square board building at the end of the street. But every day for the past ten years he has been coming to our office for his bundle of old newspapers. These he reads carefully, and sometimes what he reads inspires him to write something for our paper on the future of the Queen City, though much oftener his articles are retrospective. He is the president of the Old Settlers' society, and once or twice a year he brings in an obituary which he has written for the family of some old-timer.

One would think that an idler would be a nuisance in a busy place, but, on the contrary, we all like old Alphabetical around our office. For he is an old man who has not grown sour. His smooth, fat face has not been wrinkled by the vinegar of failure, and the noise that came from his lusty lungs in the old days is subsiding. But he has never forgiven General Durham, of the Statesman, for saying of a fight between Alphabetical and another land agent back in the sixties that "those who heard it pronounced it the most vocal engagement they had ever known." That is why he brings his obituaries to us; that is why he does us the honor of borrowing papers from us; and that is why, on a dull afternoon, he likes to sit in the old sway-back swivel-chair and tell us his theory of the increase in the rainfall, his notion about the influence of trees upon the hot winds, his opinion of the disappearance of the grasshoppers. Also, that is why we always save a circus ticket for old Alphabetical, just as we save one for each of the boys in the office.

One day he came into the office in a bad humor. He picked up a country paper, glanced it over, threw it down, kicked from under his feet a dog that had followed a subscriber into the room, and slammed his hat into the waste-basket with considerable feeling as he picked up a New York paper.

"Well—well, what's the matter with the judiciary this morning?" someone asked the old man.

He did not reply at once, but turned his paper over and over, apparently looking for something to interest him. Gradually the revolutions of his paper became slower and slower, and finally he stopped turning the paper and began reading. It was ten or fifteen minutes before he spoke. When he put down the paper his cherubic face was beaming, and he said:

"Oh—I know I'm a fool, but I wish the Lord had sent me to live in a town large enough so that every dirty-faced brat on the street wouldn't feel he had a right to call me 'Alphabetical'! Dammit, I've done the best I could! I haven't made any alarming success. I know it. There's no need of rubbing it in on me." He was silent for a time with his hands on his knees and his head thrown back, looking at the ceiling. Almost imperceptibly a smile began to crack his features, and, when he turned his eyes to the man at the desk, they were dancing with merriment, as he said: "Just been reading a piece here in the Sun about the influence of climate on human endeavor. It says that in northern latitudes there is more oxygen in the air and folks breathe faster, and their blood flows faster, and that keeps their liver going. Trouble with me has always been climate—sluggish liver. If I had just a little more oxygen floating round in my system, the woolen mill would still be running, the street cars would be going, and this town would have had forty thousand inhabitants. My fatal mistake was one of latitude. But"—and he drawled out the word mockingly—"but I guess if the Lord had wanted me to make a town here He would have given me a different kind of liver!" He slapped his knees as he sighed: "This is a funny world, and the more you see of it the funnier it gets." The old man [illegible]

Terrible Force of Habit.

As an illustration of the terrible force of habit, there is the story of the man who had been visiting at the home of a millionaire. When he returned to his boarding house he absent-mindedly left his shoes outside his door to be shined by the butler. When he looked for the shoes the next morning one of the other boarders had made away with them.

Yes, but Did She?

Martha Ann's dignity was ruffled when her mother, tray in hand, unceremoniously bumped into her. Following her mother to the kitchen, she blurted out:

"When the ladies is gone, I'll stick out my tongue at you, mother."

Martha Ann was very sorry a moment later.

ASSEMBLY PLANS ARE OUTLINED

M'Cray Meets Republican Members of the House of Representatives.

STRESS ON THE REFORMATORY

Governor Is Warned by Callers That the $1,000,000 Appropriation Will Be Opposed by Democrats and Some Republicans.

Indianapolis.—Governor McCray outlined his legislative program to the Republican members of the house of representatives at a conference in the house chamber in the statehouse the other day. The governor repeated what he told the Republican state senators a week ago, laying particular stress on the necessity of completing the new reformatory at Pendleton.

Fight on Reformatory.

In informal talks Governor McCray had with assemblymen before the conference, he was warned that his request for a $1,000,000 appropriation for the new institution will meet with opposition in the house, particularly from the Democrats. The opinion was expressed by most of the legislators who saw the governor that the Republicans will line up behind his program, but some of the members of the majority asserted that some opposition may be encountered on the Republican side.

Probably no other matter that is to come before the legislature is so important to the governor as the completion of the reformatory project. He is aware that the Democrats expect to open fire on the appropriations to be asked and for that reason he is especially anxious to win the solid support of the Republican house delegation.

Aside from the reformatory matter Governor McCray took a stand for new legislation that will increase the license fees for automobiles, trucks and busses and also advocated the imposition of a gasoline tax. All this additional money the governor is desirous of seeing in the state highway commission fund for use of the construction and maintenance of roads.

Taxation of Securities.

He urged the enactment of legislation that will permit the taxation of securities at present exempted, warned against tampering with the tax law and recommended amendments to the state board of agriculture law, whereby it would be empowered to issue bonds for the rehabilitation of buildings at the state fairground.

Of far more interest, apparently, to the representatives is the contest for speakership. Eight active candidates are in the field. Those who are avowed aspirants for the place are L. A. Pittenger, of Selma; Raymond C. Morgan of Knightstown; William R. Phillips, of Glenwood; Oscar A. Ahlgren, of Whiting; James I. Day, of East Chicago; J. Glen Harris, of Gary; Luke W. Duffey, and Asa J. Smith, of Indianapolis. It was reported that Albert J. Wedekins, of Dale, also is seeking the place.

Trend of Sentiment.

Discussion among the representatives led to the impression that the race now centers around Mr. Pittenger, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Harris. Mr. Pittenger and Mr. Morgan are farmers, and are counted especially strong contestants because of the large number of farmers in the house. Their opponents, however, believe that the apparent advantage gained by virtue of their farm connections is more than offset by the fact that the two probably will split the agricultural vote.

State News in Brief.

Anderson.—Clarence Griffith, superintendent of the municipal light and water plants, has resigned. Griffith and the board of public works disagreed, it was reported, over the board dismissing some employees in Griffith's departments.

Gary.—The Lake County Automotive Trade association elected the following officers: Paul Hood, Gary, president; August Nuenfeldt, Crown Point, vice president; Ed Bowen, Hammond, secretary, and Harry Claussen, Crown Point, treasurer.

Greensburg.—W. N. Boyl's prize hen, Pathfinder, is dead. The hen, a red bantam, was fourteen years old and for twelve consecutive years had taken first prize at the state fair.

Jeffersonville.—Contract was let by the board of county commissioners to Carl Lutz for the [illegible] road, 2.27 miles in length, for $[illegible].

Huntington.—Huntington banks distributed $[illegible] among the members of Christmas saving clubs.

Wabash.—Gordon L. W[illegible] has been named commander of the [illegible] post of the American Legion. [illegible]

Jeffersonville.—Lawrence Capehart post No. 35, American Legion, has elected officers for 1923 and will install them on New Year's night, when an open meeting will be held and the new clubrooms of the post will be dedicated. The officers are: Ralph Conway Swartz, commander; William B. Harold, first vice commander; Earl Stevenson, second vice commander; Benjamin L. Bell, adjutant; Raymond Keigwin, finance officer, and Rev. J. T. Scull, chaplain.

Rushville.—Claude Sears, of Mays, won the five-acre corn contest in Rush county with an average yield of 107.8 bushels an acre a report on the contest received from Purdue university shows. Ten farmers entered the contest and their yields averaged 96.1 bushels an acre. The winner and W. L. Booth, whose average was 100.3 bushels, each received gold medals; five received silver medals and three bronze medals. A silver cup also will go to Mr. Sears.

Vincennes.—Roy Chambers of Bicknell, who recently was elected sheriff of Knox county, has appointed Henry Mack, riding bailiff; Martin Dreiman, jailor, and W. E. Chadwick, office deputy. Mack and Dreiman were candidates in the primary election, opposing Chambers for the Democratic nomination for sheriff.

Shelbyville.—One hundred and fifty-two pupils of the Shelbyville high school, 58 boys and 94 girls, gained places on the school roll of honor for the second six weeks' period of the present semester. One hundred and fifty-six pupils of the junior high school gained places on the roll of honor.

Crawfordsville.—Michael E. Foley, attorney, of Indianapolis, formerly a Crawfordsville resident, addressed a meeting in the high school auditorium in the interest of the Near East Relief. Melvel L. Claypool is chairman of the Near East Relief committee of Montgomery county.

Sullivan.—Plans and specifications for the new sewerage system that is being planned for Sullivan have been submitted by Frank Kattman, engineer, of Terre Haute. The plans also call for the construction of a new sewerage disposal plant. The estimated cost of the proposed improvement is $150,000.

Indianapolis.—A new state normal school at Michigan City will be proposed to the legislature next month by Claude Steele, state senator from Laporte and Starke counties. Steele said that Michigan City offers many advantages for a normal school.

South Bend.—"Clean up the city at once or resign from the police force," is the ultimatum of Mayor W. W. Dodge, of Mishawaka, to the members of the police department. Gambling and "bootlegging" is said to be prevalent in the city.

Warsaw.—For the fourth time within 14 months Mrs. Susan A. Nine brought suit for divorce against Dan Nine, alleging cruelty and nonsupport. On previous occasions Mrs. Nine withdrew the action after it had been pending a few weeks.

Wabash.—The Wabash Ministerial association elected Rev. Ira Dawes president and Rev. E. S. Parr secretary-treasurer. The association plans to conduct revival services in all churches represented in the association, starting January 21.

Anderson.—John P. McCardle, chairman of the Indiana public service commission, was the principal speaker at the semi-annual dinner of the Union Traction company, attended by committees of employees and officials at Anderson.

Madison.—Charles C. Dibler, the present auditor of Jefferson county was elected county school superintendent at a meeting of the township trustees. Mr. Dibler's term as auditor will expire December 31, when he will take up his new duties.

Muncie.—On complaint of a creditor, a receiver was appointed for the Cox-Williamson Candy company. Charles Cox, president of the company, in an answer filed to the complaint, admitted that the company was in danger of insolvency.

Logansport.—The Logansport Dental society has provided for free dental examination of teeth in the Logansport schools, and dentists have been assigned to each of the buildings. The work is under the direction of Miss Mary Crist, school nurse.

Fowler.—John M. Lugar, who was defeated for trustee of Bolivar township by seven votes, alleges that eleven illegal votes were cast for L. W. Burns his Democratic opponent. A hearing by the county commissioners will be held.

Winimac.—I. J. Matthews, agricultural agent for Pulaski county, has resigned, his resignation to take effect February 1. A successor will be employed.

Jeffersonville.—Three banks sent out $17[illegible] to nearly [illegible] depositors [illegible] Christmas savings clubs. [illegible]

PESSIMIST LIFTS HIS VOICE

World Surely Is in a Bad Way, or This Writer's Liver Is Out of Order.

Strike and the world strikes with you, work and you work alone; our souls are ablaze with the apathy craze, the wildest ever was known.

Groan and there'll be a chorus. Smile and you make no hit, for we've grown long hair and we preach despair and show you a daily fit.

Spend and the gang will cheer you, save and you have no friend, for we throw our bucks to birds and ducks and borrow from all who'll lend.

Knock and you'll be a winner. Boost and you'll be a frost; for the old sane ways of the pre-war days are now from the program lost.

Strike and the world strikes with you, work and you work alone, for we'd rather yell and raise blue h—l than strive for an honest bone—Roy K. Moulton in the New York Evening Mail.

The housewife smiles with satisfaction as she looks at the basket of clear, white clothes and thanks Red Cross Ball Blue. At all grocers.—Advertisement.

HAD GOOD REASON TO WAIL

Traveler Surely Was in a Predicament That Afforded Cause for Mournfulness.

The conductor on the California Limited between Chicago and Los Angeles noticed that one of the passengers sat in his section hour after hour and sobbed. The first night out of Chicago the conductor was tempted to ask what the trouble was but having learned from previous experiences that one is better off minding one's own business he did not do so. On the second day, as the passenger continued to weep and wail, he was even more strongly tempted to go to the man's aid, but still he refrained. On the third day, however, the sobs of the traveler were so great that he could not resist any longer and he approached him politely with the question:

"Please tell me what is the trouble?"

"Oi, oi, oi," sobbed the passenger. "I've been on the wrong train for three days."—Exchange.

Warning Came Too Late.

Mother was in the kitchen hurrying to get dinner. At the busiest minute I saw the minister coming down the street. Knowing there was a drive to collect money, I knew the object of his visit and that it was apt to be a long one.

I announced to mother who was coming, and she, annoyed at the inopportune time for such a call, said, "Oh, tell him I'm not at home."

I went to the door and told him mother was out; he expressed his regret. Mother not realizing he had arrived so soon, came in from the kitchen, calling: "Rose, you'd better not tell him a lie. I'll come in and see him."

The next few moments were such a muddle neither mother nor I knows what was said.—Chicago Tribune.

The Irene Byron Tuberculosis Patients of DeKalb County, wish to take this means of telling the people to buy Christmas Seals so as to stamp out Tuberculosis.

The selling of seals for funds is the only means the Anti-Tuberculosis Society has to finance this good work, so our appeal to you is to buy seals, and buy them until it hurts. Don't mail a package or letter from now on until Christmas unless it carries the Stamp of Health.

The sale of these seals not only helps those that have this disease, but also helps you from contracting same.

Tuberculosis is a curable infectious disease and can be erased from this earth, through education, clinics, etc. So our plea is to help your County in this fight by saving lives, by reducing the economic waste which caused a $10,000,000 loss last year, by making your local campaign more effective.

Buy Christmas Seals. Stamp out Tuberculosis.

CLASS NOTES

FRESHMEN:

A class meeting was held last Friday afternoon. It was decided that the class colors should be blue and gold and the class flower should be the American Beauty rose.

We thougnt that it must be the end of the world when Mr. Maxwell announced that there would be no Civics Class.

We shall have a test in Civics next Tuesday. W. E. B

SOPHOMORE:

The old saying is that Friday the 13th, is an unlucky day but we think Tuesday the 19th is more so. We are to have three tests on that day and among them is our dear old friend, "Ceasar."

One of the members of our class has a pair of "tweezers" at school which he uses quite extravagantly, even going so far as to cut some of his eye lashes. We wish that he would go down just a little farther and cut of some off his nose.

H. M.

SENIOR:

We again have our original number of twelve, and we hope to keep this number to the end. Mildred Murphy has returned to school and expects to finish her High School work.

A Senior class meeting was held last Friday. It was decided at that meeting that we should have charge of the Christmas decorations for the following Friday's entertainment. We are planning to have a Christmas tree. R.A.W.

M. P. Church Notes

The Christmas program will be given Friday evening at 7:00 o'clock. This is a splendid program and the committee has been working over time in preparing it. You will miss a splendid service if you are absent.

Sabbath School 9:30
Morning Worship 10:45

The Christmas Story will be the thought of the service.

Concord Christmas Entertainment will be Given Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock. A Christmas tree and program will be the main feature of the evening.

Obituary

Blanch (Ervin) Dailey, daughter of James and Ella Ervin, was born June 18th, 1891, and died December 11th, 1922. She was 31 years, 5 months and 23 days old at the date of her death.

When she was six years old her mother died. The father became the part of mother to her and her younger sister and raised them to womanhood.

She was united in marriage to Samuel G. Daily, January 8th, 1913, She and her husband went to the home of her childhood to make their home and they remained there until her death.

On September 11th, 1916, a little babe came to brighten the home. She went deep into the black shadows of death when Keith came, but after a long struggle she came back to enjoy her home and child. But not for long. She took ill a little over two weeks ago and all that loving hands and medical skill could do, she was claimed by death at 2:50 Monday morning.

She leaves a family very sad because of her death. The immediate relatives are her husband and son, father and sister and the parents of the husband.

As the morning light was breaking her spirit went back to the God who gave it, for it was Hiss will.

On January 5th, 103 she joined the Concord M. P. church. She has been a member of the St. Joe Valley Rebeckah lodge for several years

Funeral services were held from the Concord church on Wednesday at 11 o'clock a. m., and the body was laid to rest in Riverside cemetery. Rev. C. H. Havens conducted the services, with E. R. Kinsey funeral director.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of thanking the friends and neighbors for their kind expression of sympathy in our bereavement, and also for the many beautiful flowers.

The family.

Mrs. Lena Meek is recovering from her recent illness.

Miss Edna Jackson was a Sunday dinner guest of Miss Melba Andress.

Mrs. Wall Miller of Fort Wayne, spent over Sunday with her daughter, Mrs. Ora Wilmot and family.

Mr. and Mrs. B. V. Widney and Mrs. Alice Copp spent Monday in Fort Wayne.

Joseph Koch played basket ball with the Hicksville team at Sherwood Tuesday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Benninghoff left Monday morning to spend the winter at Jacksonville, Florida, and other Southern points.

Mrs. Ella Patterson left Saturday morning for Springfield, Ohio, to visit her children for an indefinite time.

Mrs. Georgia Van Wagner of Auburn, came Monday morning for a couple of days visit with the Ridgway and Curie families.

Dear Santa and Grandma Santa:

Will you bring me some pretty desses for my doll and a fountain pen? Will you bring a bed for my doll also? When you come down the chimney there is a crooked place in the chimney, don't get fast.

Bring my daddy a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes. Now don't come to my house if you think I am too big for all of this, but please bring my daddy a suit of clothes. Give the candy to poor boys and girls. Remember me and my daddy. Mother needs a new coat. Bring Grandma Santa Claus along Come at 12 o'clock and come up stairs and let Grandma and you sleep in the bed to your left if you are cold enough. I live 1½ miles from St. Joe, Indiana. Don't get stuck in the snow.

American Farm Bureau

Delivering Rice to the Mill, a Typical Fall Scene.

A section of country in Arkansas has been almost wholly neglected and undeveloped—that was often referred to as the "Cattlemen's Paradise"—with a very limited and scattered population, has been transformed, since the discovery that the soil was especially and peculiarly adapted to the raising of a particularly fine quality of rice. It is now producing a yield far above the average and has grown and developed and prospered until the population in the towns, as well as the rural communities, has doubled and, in some places, even trebled within a brief score of years. These people have gotten together about 80 per cent of all the rice growers of that state and have organized the Arkansas Rice Growers' Co-operative association.

The section is fairly buzzing with prosperity. Everybody has money and lots of it. Store after store has sprung up in the towns. Towns themselves have become regular beehives of activity. Almost as if by magic, this country was, in the course of a few years, transformed from a sparsely settled and almost entirely undeveloped section into a rich, productive, prosperous country, with an investment and equipment running upwards into the thirty millions of dollars. Rice mills have sprung up throughout the section, representing another two and one-half million investment.

Crop Was Overlooked.

The rice farmers of Arkansas had never given much thought to what happened to their product after they had threshed it and sold it "in the rough" (the natural state) to the mills, which proceeded to mill it and get it in shape for the ultimate consumer. As had been previously stated, a big investment was put into mills in Arkansas, following the establishment of the industry in that state; and, while prices were good, the rice farmers did not bother themselves about the fortunes that others made from the handling of their product. The result was a very elaborate system of handling the product, after it had left the farmers' hands; which necessarily took a heavy toll from the profits in the product. There was a long, expensive list of rice buyers, rice graders, millers, and so on; and these all had to be taken care of in handsome style, whether the farmer made money, or lost money, or whatever happened to him. Almost without exception, the rice growers had the habit of making their crops each year on borrowed money; and when the rice industry faced the financial situation of the latter part of 1920 there was a panic in all circles in the rice sections.

At this point the farm bureau came into Arkansas and abruptly told the rice farmers of Arkansas, surrounded as they were by the wreck and ruins of their industry, that with a proper system the rice industry of Arkansas, and of the whole country, could be revived, rebuilt and put on a real foundation—a structure that would abide through the years. That system, said the farm bureau, was "Co-operative Commodity Marketing." It was thus that the Arkansas Rice Growers' Co-operative association of Stuttgart, Ark., was born, under the most depressed, the most unfavorable, the most difficult conditions that ever faced any men anywhere.

Membership Doubled.

The membership of the Arkansas Rice Growers' Co-operative association has doubled itself in the course of the first season, and they are a well-pleased set of men who make up the association. These rice farmers are finding use for their organized strength and they are demonstrating the fact that they have the ability to be their own business managers—that the reason they have gotten so very little of the consumer's dollar is because the handling of the "business end" of their business has been in the hands of others than their own.

The Arkansas rice industry has been restored by this co-operative association, which has re-established it on a solid, substantial basis, and blazed the trail for the salvation of the American rice industry. The first year of organization for the co-operative marketing of the rice has resulted in better prices to growers. Prospects for the second year are better still, and the future holds promise of fulfillment through the organization of every hope and dream of the rice growers.

LONG STAPLE COTTON IN SHORT SHIPMENTS

Experts Unearth 142 Bales, Representing Additional $4,890 to Growers.

Through expert grading the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton association has found 142 bales of long staple cotton in the shipments of short cotton handled to date by the organization this season. Based on quotations of October 5, this represents an additional $4,890 to the cotton growers.

Out of 19,462 bales graded this fall only 1,835 are below middling in grade. Heretofore, before the advent market this season. Cotton has been picked and baled more rapidly this season than at any time in the last 14 years. Also there has been the constant threat of war in Europe this fall. Despite these influences, the price has held and appears to have an upward tendency.

The Alabama Farm Bureau has bought an additional 8,000 tons of nitrate, bringing the total to 10,000 tons, representing an investment of more than $500,000. This saves the farmer several dollars a ton on fertilizers.

LEGHORN HENS AS 'DODGERS'

Mayor King of Carson, Iowa, Doesn't Favor Heavy Breeds Where Traffic Is Heavy.

W. W. King, mayor of Carson, Iowa, and well-known farmer and chicken fancier, believes that the Leghorn chicken is the best "dodger" in the chicken family. He says that if farmers living along the main traveled highways will keep the small active egg-producing breeds of poultry instead of the large types that are so common, the losses due to the rush of the automobile traffic will be practically eliminated. Mr. King's homestead is along the Iowa Short line where many autos run. Never but once in his knowledge did he lose one of his chickens beneath the wheels of an automobile, but all along he has seen dead poultry before other farm houses. The heaviest losses occur where the clumsy, rather inactive hen is kept.

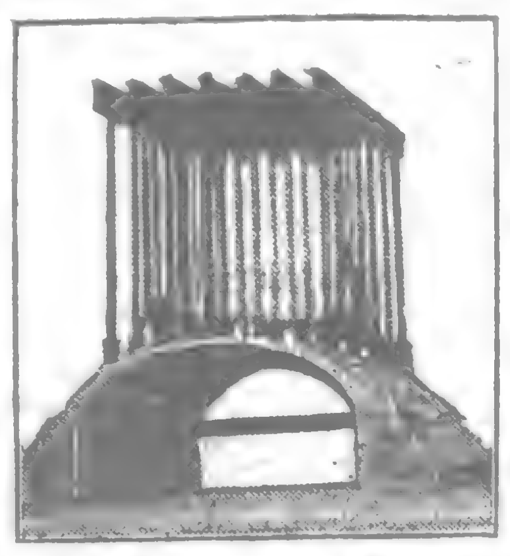
TESTING SKEW-ARCH BRIDGE

Reinforced Concrete Structure Erected to Find Means for Strengthening the Arch.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A reinforced concrete skew-arch bridge one-fourth the size of a full-size bridge has been built by the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture and is being "tested to destruction" to gain information that will make possible the building of stronger structures of this type.

There are many locations where it is necessary to carry a highway diagonally across a stream, engineers explain. Under such conditions it is customary to build what is known as a skew bridge, and when that bridge is an arch, the arch is known as a skew arch, the abutments or supports not being at right angles with the roadway. When the abutments are at right angles to the axis of the arch the structure is known as a right arch. Engineers can design right arches very economically, but there is a great difference of opinion with regard to the economical design of the so-called skew arch.



Testing a Skew-Arch Bridge.

The principal difference of opinion among engineers is with regard to the manner in which the load is transmitted to the abutments. In the right arch the load on the abutments is the same for each foot of length, but on the skew arch this probably is not the case, and the important question to be settled is the distribution of the load from one end of the abutments to the other.

It was with this object in view that a series of tests has been started on skew arches by the bureau of public roads. At the present time the bureau has under way at its Arlington experiment station a test on a skew arch designed to be one-quarter the size of an actual structure. The arch being tested is 7 feet in span, 4½ feet in width from face to face, and 4 feet in height above the base of the abutments. The crown or midpoint is 2 inches in thickness and the barrel of the arch is reinforced with ¼-inch bars bent very carefully into the correct shape.

The arch is being tested with a uniform load and this loading is being accomplished in a unique manner, as follows: Forty-two spiral springs, each capable of carrying a load of 1,500 pounds, are placed at uniform intervals on top of the arch and each spring supports a 2-inch pipe, which in turn bears against a solid overhead structure. By adjusting the lengths of these pipes the springs are deflected and the amount of load applied to the arch may be controlled by the amount the springs are compressed. In this way it is possible to obtain fine adjustments in the amount of load applied without the necessity for piling on heavy weights. As the load is increased on the arch it deflects and the concrete and steel are deformed or strained, and the engineer wants to know how these strains are distributed.

For the measurement of strains in the concrete a device known as a strain guage is being used. With this device it is possible to detect strains with an accuracy of .0002 of an inch. By carefully measuring the strains throughout the arch it is possible to determine the manner in which the stress is distributed, and it is believed that through a series of such tests enough information will be obtained to enable the engineer to formulate rules for the economical design of skew arches.

In addition to determining the strains in the arch, the observations include measurements of deflection of the arch under load as well as a measurement of the stress in the tie rods between the abutments.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 24

A LESSON IN TRUST AND PREPAREDNESS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 12:13-40.

GOLDEN TEXT—The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. —Luke 12:23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of a Foolish Rich Man.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Foolish Rich Man.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC —Rich Toward God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC —True Riches.

Since on October 8 we had a lesson on the birth and childhood of Jesus, many will doubtless prefer to have this new lesson instead of the Christmas lesson.

I. A Warning Against Covetousness (vv. 13-21).

1. The Occasion (vv. 13-15). One of the company requested Jesus to be umpire in a disputed estate. Two brothers were in trouble over an inheritance. Christ refused to enter the sphere of the civil law and warned against the spirit of avarice. Christ's mission was preeminently spiritual.

2. Enforcement of the Warning (vv. 16-21). The parable of the rich man shows clearly that to be concerned with earthly riches while neglecting God is the height of folly. The Lord's warning is of great importance today; for many are seeking gold and forgetting God. Note (1) his increase in goods (v. 16). His riches were rightly obtained, for the ground brought forth plentifully. This shows that a man may be rich because of the Lord's blessing upon him. (2) His perplexity (v. 17). His land was producing more than his barns would hold. He did not want it to go to waste. If he had possessed the right views of life and a sense of stewardship before God, he would have seen that his barns at least had enough for his personal needs and that he could have distributed his surplus to the needy and for benevolent purposes. (3) The fatal choice (vv. 18, 19). He chose to enlarge his barns and give up his life to ease and luxury. It ought to be a delightful task for men whom God has made rich to devote their time and energy to the distribution of their possessions to benevolent purposes. (4) The awful indictment (vv. 20, 21). God calls him a fool.

II. The Certain Cure for Anxiety (vv. 32-34).

Having shown the folly of the rich man who gained gold but lost God, He now urged the disciples to trust God and dismiss all anxious care. He assured them that they need not be anxious even for the necessities of life. Note:

1. The Argument (vv. 22, 23). This is summed up in one brief sentence: "The life is more than food, and the body is more than raiment." The God who gave the life and made the body should be trusted to provide food and clothing.

2. The Illustrations (vv. 24-28). (1) God's care for the fowls (vv. 24-26). The ravens do not sow nor reap—they have not storehouse or barn, yet they live, for God feeds them. If God does not forget the fowls, certainly He would do more for His children. (2) God's care for the flowers of the field (vv. 27, 28). If God is so careful of those flowers which appear but for a day, how much more will He clothe His children!

3. The Exhortations (vv. 29-34). (1) Make not the getting of food and clothes your chief concern. Trust God to provide them. (2) Seek the kingdom of God (v. 31). Those who make God's kingdom first shall have all their needs supplied (Phil. 4:19). (3) Be not afraid (v. 32). God's good pleasure is upon His own, and all good things will He give them. (4) Practice self-denial in order to be able to give gifts to those in need (vv. 33, 34). The doing of such deeds will tend to lift the thoughts upward to God—to trust Him.

III. Be Ready for the Coming of the Lord (vv. 35-40).

Having warned the disciples against the acquisition of worldly goods while forgetting God, and shown them the needlessness of anxiety for food and clothes, He shows them the blessedness of being in a state of readiness when the Lord shall come. Conviction as to the certainty of the Lord's coming is the sure cure for worldliness and anxious care. This attitude of heart He made clear by two parables—that of the returning of the Lord and that of the thief. The Lord will be so pleased with those who are waiting for Him that He will [illegible] at the banquet with them, and [illegible] them. [illegible] the Lord's coming [illegible]

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

MOTHER OCEAN'S MEMORIES.

It was cold in the part of the world where Mother Ocean was talking.

Further down South it was warm and people were going in swimming, but along this coast of which I'm speaking the water was very, very cold.

No one went in swimming. No, not a single person and it amused Mother Ocean very much.

"How well I remember," she said to Prince Foam, "those days last summer.

"Oh my, wasn't I popular!

"They came down to see me in hundreds and thousands. Oh, they all came, men and women and children and babies, too. Some of the babies—or rather all of the babies—just rested beside me to get some of my cool breezes and my fresh salt air.

"They seemed to know that I was Mother Ocean, too, and that I would refresh them.

"All the others came in to see me and splashed and smiled and laughed and shouted their happiness because of me.

"My Wave Children gave them lots of fun. The Breaker Boys had the jolliest of times, and how the people did enjoy them.

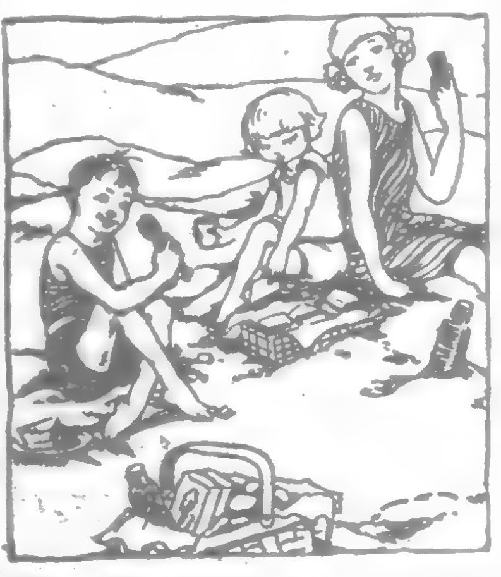
"'There comes a huge one,' they'd shout. Oh, it was all so joyful.

"The people sometimes lived quite a distance from me. They would come down to see me on Saturdays and on Sundays and on holidays.

"They would bring their lunches and eat them right before my very face.

"But that was all right. I wouldn't have wanted to have had anything offered to me.

"For does Mother Ocean care about sandwiches and milk and bananas and such things? Not in the least bit."



"They Would Bring Their Lunches."

"Not in the least bit," agreed Prince Foam.

"I used to notice that all along the sand there were so many, many people—the beaches were covered with them, as I've said.

"There were thin ones and fat ones and medium ones, and some were big and some were small, some were little and some were tall.

"That was the way one of my verses went. Would you like to hear several of my verses, Prince Foam?"

Prince Foam was a gallant prince, and too, he knew it was never right to refuse to hear the verses any one had made up.

So he listened very politely after he had said how charmed and delighted he would be to hear the verses.

So Mother Ocean began:

In the summer when it was hot
People came to see me a lot.
There were people fat, and people thin
And oh, they made such an awful din,
But I thought the noise was lots of fun
And so did good old Mr. Sun.
In fact he liked it such a lot
That he looked straight down and became quite hot
So the people were warmed after calling on me
And cooled off again when too hot did he Become yet again. Oh, he burned them all right
He really made them look a sight.
But they loved their day down by Mother Ocean
With the Waves and Breakers in constant motion.
Oh yes, some people were big and some were small,
Some were little and some were tall,
But all of them loved me and told me so.
But now they're not near me, for so old did I grow,
As now it's winter and it is really cold,
And people are not so brave and bold.

"Noble verses," said Prince Foam, "or at least, even if they're not noble they have lots of truth to them. Yes, the truth is in every line!"

"Well," said Mother Ocean, "many a truthful person would not be able to make a good poet, but you said the best you could under the circumstances, and I'm grateful."

"Oh yes, it does amuse me to see how lonely I am now, and in the summer I was the life of the party, as you might say. Why, they even regretted they could not carry my cool breezes and my refreshing ways back to their warm homes with them. But I understand, oh yes, I understand!"

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

A Real Punishment.

At a well-known co-educational school, the girls are supposed to learn a certain number of college songs. If they do not learn they have their faces painted by the other girls. One of the college boys who goes out with them a great deal says that this is the wrong way to punish them. He suggests that a real punishment would be to make them take some of the paint off their faces instead of putting more on.

WAR ON TUBERCULOSIS IN CATTLE

John T. Bowen of the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and the apparatus that he designed for controlling atmospheric conditions in the manufacture of medical tablets for fighting tuberculosis in cattle. The government, by use of this moisture-regulating device, can manufacture "cow pills" 12 months in the year whereas formerly only 28 days were suitable.

NOXIOUS WEED SEEDS IN THRASHED WHEAT

One Bushel of Dockage to Every 22 Bushels of Grain.

Foreign Material Commonly Found in Government Investigations Consisted of Wild Oats, Buckwheat, Mustard, Etc.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thrashed spring wheat usually contains much foreign material, consisting almost entirely of noxious weed seeds. Investigations conducted by R. H. Block and C. R. Haller of the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, show that in the 1920-21 crop there was approximately one bushel of foreign material, or "dockage," in every 22 bushels of spring wheat thrashed. This represents over 9,500,000 bushels of dockage for the spring wheat crop.

More than 200 kinds of weed seeds are found in spring wheat, but less than 20 of these appear commonly. The foreign seeds most commonly found in the department's investigations, named in the order of their frequency, were wild oats, wild buckwheat, cultivated oats, mustard, lamb's-quarter, barley, green foxtail, hare's-ear mustard, flax, rye, cow cockle, pigweed, yellow foxtail, sunflower, corn cockle, wild rose, kinghead, and wild pea (vetch). Wild oats appeared in over 99.0 per cent of the lots of wheat examined. Grain inspection statistics show that the percentage of dockage found in spring wheat is gradually increasing.

Several factors tend to increase the foreign material in spring wheat, the more important of which are the sowing of wheat on land that is already foul with weed seeds, and the use of seed wheat contaminated with weed seeds. Both of these practices are common in the main spring wheat area.

Foreign material in wheat is objectionable because it is an economic waste, says the department. The growing of weed seeds with the wheat reduces the yield of wheat and increases the cost of harvesting and thrashing. Foreign material occupies valuable space in wagons and freight cars in country and terminal elevators and mills, and it often has a bad effect on the milling and baking qualities of the wheat. That clean seed combined with good cultural methods will produce clean wheat is being demonstrated constantly on many farms, and that the marketing of only clean wheat is profitable, there can be no doubt. The farm is the logical place to clean wheat, preferably as part of the thrashing operation. When the cleaning is done on the farm, the cleaned wheat will bring a better price on the market, the freight on the dockage will be saved, and the screenings will be available for feed, and when finely ground can be substituted for the higher priced feeds, such as oats, corn, and commercial [illegible].

Two methods of cleaning wheat are common. One method uses sieves and air blasts for separating the foreign material from the wheat, and the other method separates the grain according to the size and shape of the kernels. [illegible]

TOAD IS USEFUL IN CURBING FEW PESTS

Little Creatures Not of Great Economic Importance.

While They Assist in Combating Abnormal Increase of Local Pests, Their Influence Is Not Always Strongly Felt.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Toads have been reputed to aid in curbing the numbers of injurious insects and other similar pests. To ascertain the facts in the case the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture has analyzed the contents of the stomachs of 562 common toads, and reports that while the findings regarding the choice of food are of interest they thus far fail to demonstrate that toads are of great economic importance. Toads go constantly about their own work of gaining a livelihood, and so undoubtedly fill their proper place in nature. They are never very numerous in one locality, however, and as they cannot adopt the methods of birds and traverse wide stretches of land to aid in combating abnormal local increases of crop and garden pests, their influence is not strongly felt. The investigation shows that a certain portion of the toad's food is made up of injurious insects and other pests of growing plants, and that the toad performs some service in such places as greenhouses, gardens, fields of small grain, and golf courses. Any harm that toads do in the consumption of beneficial beetles and other insects useful to man is of little economic importance and does not warrant their indiscriminate destruction.

CLOVER AND GRASS MIXTURE

Alfalfa, Red and Alsike Clover, Timothy, Red Top and Fescues Are Recommended.

There has been considerable breaking away from old [illegible] in the matter of seeding for pastures and meadows, and in many instances with very conspicuous success. Clovers are subject to so many vicissitudes that good stands are no longer obtainable on many farms. On the other hand, just those conditions which may be adverse to clovers may be very favorable to certain kinds of grasses, and this has led to the sowing of mixtures of several clovers and grasses, in which grasses predominate.

The common notion is that clover and timothy is the only useful mixture, but clover quickly [illegible] and timothy does [illegible] [illegible] these finer grasses come in and a durable and palatable pasture is assured all through the season.

RADIO

CONDENSER ACTS AS STORAGE TANK

How the Fixed and Variable Types Are Constructed and What They Do.

A condenser in a radio circuit is a storage tank for electrical charges. This storage unit may be either fixed or variable. The fixed condenser, which consists principally of a few sheets of metal foil, intersectioned between paraffined paper or mica and bound tightly together, and which, unlike the variable condenser, does not cost very much either to buy or build, is the one generally used on the receiving circuit of the vacuum tube.

When connected across the terminals of the receiver, the fixed condenser has the property of discharging with great violence across these terminals and setting up stronger currents to act upon the magnet coils of the receiver. If the condenser were left out of the circuit the receivers would still respond to the impulses of the detector's rectified currents, but when they are added to the circuit, these currents build up a voltage in the condenser so great that when it is discharged it does so with violence. This discharge occurs at each impulse in the voice of the speaker. The voice impulses set up in the condenser are forced to discharge immediately, in order to leave room for the next charge and to prevent the condenser's becoming overloaded. Just imagine a reservoir of water filling slowly until the water were up to brim, and then flood gates opened so that the water all ran out. This is a good example of the manner in which the condenser is charged and discharged. However, the radio impulses come so fast that the condenser charges and discharges almost instantly.

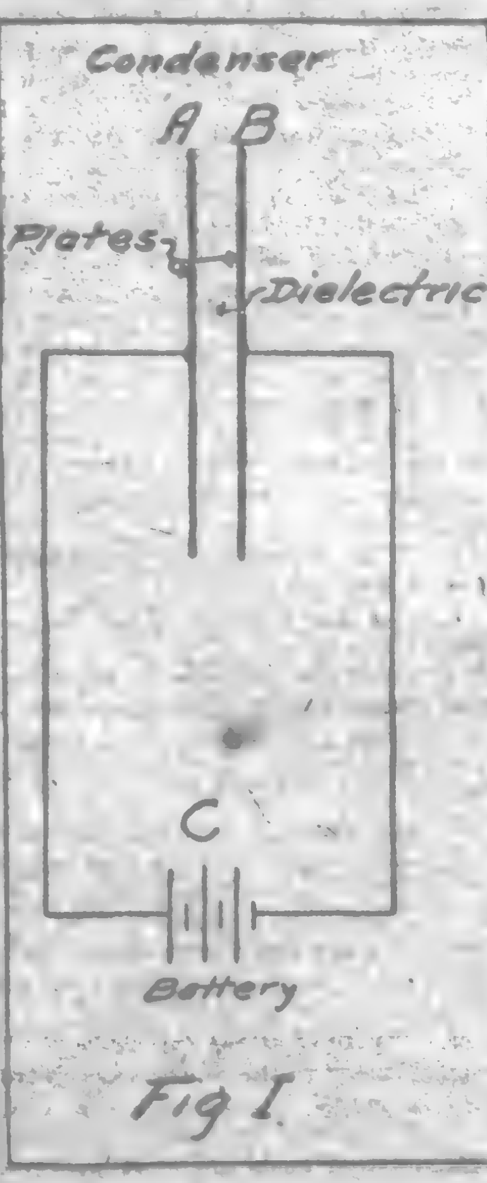

Fig I.

The low capacity fixed condenser in the grid circuit of the vacuum tube detector functions as a checking condenser for the radio currents to the plate of the tube and is generally about 0.0005 microfarads. Without this condenser in the tube circuit the signals will be much weaker and the bulb may have a tendency to choke up so that no plate circuit will flow through the circuit. Fixed condensers must be made of the best grade of materials possible; that is they must possess high insulating qualities so that the charges will not leak off through poor insulation. Condensers made of pure mica and copper foil are to be preferred over paper and tinfoil condensers, as they will build up their charges to the highest point without leaking before they suddenly discharge.

[illegible] metal washers [illegible] generally give more satisfaction than other types. Experience has proved that they keep their plates separated without scraping and the number of plates can be increased or decreased at will.

A variable condenser inserted in series with the antenna and tuner decreases the wave length of the antenna circuit as it is varied. When the plates are separated the wave length is the shortest, and even when the plates are intermeshed the wave length is shorter than if the condenser were out of the circuit. A variable condenser in shunt with the secondary or the tuning coil will increase the wave length of the circuit, depending upon the number of plates that are inserted in the condenser as it is varied from 180 degrees to zero.

By reason of this characteristic the variable condenser allows for very close tuning.

A condenser consists of two electrical conductors separated by an insulator. The electrical conductors are called the plates and the insulating medium separating the plates is called the dielectric.

In Fig. 1 is shown a simple condenser consisting of two plates, A and B, with air between two plates acting as the dielectric. If now a battery C is connected to the two condenser plates, the positive side of the battery to one plate and the negative side to the other plate, a current will flow. This current that flows from the battery terminals when the battery is connected to the plates of the condenser is called the charging current. During the process of charging a condenser an electric displacement takes place in the dielectric. This electric displacement gives rise to an electromotive force which tends to oppose the applied electromotive force from the battery C. Finally a point is reached where the back e. m. f. and the charging current become zero.

If the battery C be disconnected from the condenser a potential difference will exist between the two condenser plates that will just be equal to the potential of the battery C. Short-circuiting the condenser plates will cause the condenser to discharge, a condition that will exist until the potential difference between the plates has been reduced to zero or until the dielectric has again resumed its normal state.

The charge that can be placed on a static condenser depends upon three factors. First, the area of the condenser plates; second, the thickness and composition of the dielectric, and third, the potential difference applied to the plates by the battery C.

RADIO FLASHES

It is now the thing for social clubs to have "radio committees."

Some youngster is becoming a popular idol every day in a small town by being the one to install the first radio set.

An eastern institution for the blind has installed radio for its boys. The boys receive lessons in the code and learn to copy commercial messages.

Dry cells cannot successfully be used for the filament supply of vacuum tubes. The batteries will hold up for about five minutes, and then they will slowly die down, until nothing at all can be heard.

Radio waves from Queenstown, Ireland, were amplified in New York with such success that they disturbed the proceedings of the Supreme court in a building opposite the receiving station.

At present France has the most powerful radio station in the world in the American built Lafayette towers near Bordeaux. The station now being erected at Port Jefferson, Long Island, will by the end of the year take first place.

Dr. H. W. Nichols, an eminent electrical engineer, announces that the ether is not only not of use in radio transmission, but that it is an interference. Dr. Nichols believes that much can be done to remedy the static disturbance by a means of sharper tuning.

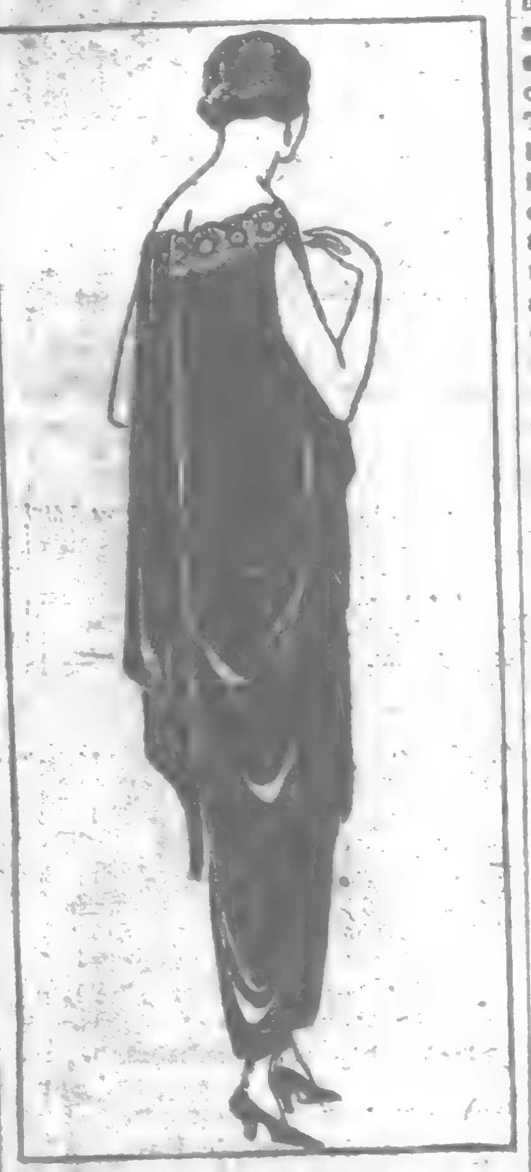
Radio outfits have become so numerous in the apartment houses in New York that it has become a problem to find space for the antennae on the roofs. A scheme is being developed to have community service rendered to tenants over the house [illegible] wires.

Dr. [illegible] is reported as saying that radio will result in the junking of the ocean cables. [illegible] says Marconi "[illegible] his hat." It seems to us that neither could be called a [illegible] witness. [illegible] to Marconi, however, to say that it is doubtful [illegible] as a means of [illegible] the ether is too [illegible]

New Styles Are Given Approval

Fashion for a new season is always a bit vague and sketchy until the season is really upon us. We know that certain things may be worn, that certain others are taboo, but just exactly what will be the ways of the new gowns, practically speaking, is something which never can be wholly anticipated.

Recently, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times, we have begun to see real, tangible fashions. Everywhere one goes there is a distinct change in the look of the women's dress. Waists are long and fitted, skirts are long and full. There is a medieval look about women as a whole. And the beauty of the thing is the way in which they have stepped into the picture with ease and grace, as though each one had said: "I am dressed now as I should be dressed. I feel this part and I know that I look well."



Gold Lace Forms Band Across Shoulders of Handsome Black Velvet Evening Gown.

We are forced to forget, as we look at them, the way they protested at the thought of new styles, saying they never would give up short skirts and the easy, comfortable fashions to which they had become so accustomed. After their one long, concentrated protest they have yielded so sweetly that they never could be suspected of having been temperamental. They have the look of having brought about this change themselves, of having organized to do it. Perhaps that is so in truth, considering their desire to always look their best. Isn't it much more interesting to be different in the end? That, at least, is the way women have argued since the beginning of time, and there seems no immediate danger that they will go back on their traditions.

Dress of Black Satin.

At one restaurant the other evening there was a dress made of black satin, most lovely to behold. The waist was fitted into the figure in a charming manner; there was plenty of fullness at the sides of the skirt, and the front and sides were left plain. Directly in front, where the circular skirt joined the waist, there was a long medallion of brilliantly colored beads. That was all the trimming for the gown, but the sleeves were long and tight with flaring cuffs which extended in fanlike arrangement over the hands. These cuffs, to add another touch of brilliance, were lined with a flaming red chiffon. That is an example of many of the newer dresses built for semi-dress wear and designed, it would seem, to set off the charms of the American women to their final and most perfect fulfillment.

Cuffs are distinguishing features of the newer frocks. They are just the little touch that brings the designs into a modern atmosphere and add to the general change that is evident throughout the array of dresses. Someone has asked what becomes of them under a coat. When it is remembered that the sleeves of most of the coats are quite as flaring as the sleeves of the dresses, the problem has solved itself.

One girl had a black velvet dress trimmed [illegible] fur. [illegible] showed linings of silver cloth and edges of the soft, gray fur. When the dress was tucked under the covering [illegible] thing to do. It "snaps up" a dark dress remarkably. It brings a coat out of the ordinary run and even on evening dresses it has a distinctive place that makes known the gown's claim to smart society. Gray fur combined with silver cloth is a success, especially when the combination is posed against a black surface.

Another suit, of black silk duvetine, has all of the grace and softness which that sort of material can give to a suit. The lines are graceful and becoming, to begin with, and when the artistically arranged bands of gray astrakhan were added the original charm of the cut was accentuated. The coat of this street suit has that long-waisted effect which seems to be inevitable, emphasized by a tight band of a belt edged at top and bottom with the fur. The tight collar hugs about the throat and the little bands of fur are arranged in designs at the sides of the skirt and also used for an edging along the uneven skirt line. The little hat that caps the climax is made of the same fur. It is nothing but the tightest of little turbans with a wide band for a brim and a snug little round section for a crown.

Altogether this suit makes a becoming winter garment, extremely dressy, designed for wear at afternoon receptions and other sorts of daytime affairs where more than the usual plain suit is needed. It takes the place of a dress and constitutes a wrap at the same time, in this way compensating for its rather more lavish appearance.

Draping Very Popular.

The coat is an example of many made along these lines and worn with more and more zeal as the days go by. Practical women who are always finding fault with the serviceability of their clothes, are murmuring that, perhaps, these garments will not be any too warm, but the fact is they are warm enough for the usual occasion—warmer than a coat suit. It was interesting to see just how smart the short coats looked. There could be no better choice for the woman to whom that sort of coat is becoming.

Short women, as a rule, do not look so well in the short coat as the taller, more statuesque women, who have the lines to withstand that cutting off of the figure which the shorter jacket naturally brings in its wake. However, when the jacket and skirt are of one and the same color, they can be more readily conformed to the lines of the shorter stature, even when the figure is inclined to be plump.

Draping, and still more draping, is the order of the day. Morning dresses are draped as well as the afternoon sort, and for evening there is nothing but drapery. It is impressive to see how many ways there are of arranging the drapings for different types of women. And it is no less impressive to see how many women are adopting these clothes to their own particular styles.

The draped gown is one of the really beautiful evening frocks of the season. It is of black velvet, but any color of velvet or brocade would lend itself to the making of this gown in a [illegible] than usually interesting manner. [illegible] is that band of [illegible] swing across [illegible] only by fall of draping over the left shoulder.

Yuletide Greetings

PATTERSON-FLETCHER CO.
"The Store That Does Things"
Fort Wayne, Ind.

Mrs. Alice Copp entertained the Culture Club Wednesday evening. There were eighteen present who responded at roll call. A Christmas exchange was enjoyed after which the hostess served delightful refreshments.

Mrs. A. J. Flynn, Mrs. Lee Smith of Portsmouth, Ohio, and their mother, Mrs. S. S. Davis of this place, left Saturday for the former's home in Chicago. Mrs. Smith to remain for a short visit, their mother to spend the winter there.

LOCAL HAPPENINGS

Mrs. Clay Coburn spent Wednesday in Fort Wayne.

Mrs. Virgil Freeburn is suffering from a nervous breakdown.

For good glasses see Griest at American Building Hicksville, Ohio.

Harvey Lindley and wife were Tuesday guests of Mrs. Virginia Lawson.

The Chickenpox is quite bad among the children of Coburn's Corners neighborhood.

S. L. Widney was an over Sunday guest of his son, O. L. Widney and family at Hicksville.

Thermometer read as low as 16 degrees below zero last Saturday morning, and on Monday the next coldest morning, 6 degrees below.

Substantial railing has been erected along each side of the grade south of town where several autos have recently been ditched. That doesn't mean that you have a right to speed through there now. You may take the railing over with you.

M. J. Shull and son, Arthur, and their wives were Sunday guests in the home of F. B. Leighty and wife.

William Quance and wife spent Saturday night and Sunday with J. O. Quance and family of Fort Wayne.

The extreme cold snap effects the train service to a great extent. Mail comes anywhere from ten minutes to four hours late.

Will Maxwell is doing carpenter work at Daytonia Beach, Florida, having left for that place some two weeks ago.

Mrs. Jane Coburn received word Monday morning from Quincy, Massachusetts, of the death of Mrs. Katheryn Coburn, wife of Harlan Coburn, her son.

John H. Bass of Foat Wayne, founder of the Bass Foundry and Machine Works and dean of Fort Wayne pioneer manufacturers and business men, died at his country home Sunday morning at the age of 87 years.

Mrs. Susan Catherine Hoffman, 88 years old, generally recognized as the first woman notary public in the United States, died at her home in Fort Wayne, Saturday afternoon.

The Coburn's Corners Ladies Aid held a fine meeting with Mrs. Will Maxwell last Thursday. Three comforts were made and a sumptious dinner was served to the fifteen who partook of the day's enjoyment.

John Timmerman of Spencerville a brother of Mrs. Anna Koch and Mrs. Nan Lysher of this place underwent an operation for Hernia at the Souder hospital at Auburn Monday.

Ora Dale White, 21, farmer near St. Joe, and Miss Bonnie Mae Cooley, 18, of near Butler, received their marriage license of the clerk of the DeKalb Circuit court on Saturday December 16, and were married the same day by Justice of the Peace, L. C. Ford of Auburn.

Coburn's Corners congregation enjoyed a fine sermon by Rev. Benjamin last Sunday morning. He will be present next Sunday morning and preach the Christmas sermon. The Christmas program will be given in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Timmerman of Leo, and Mrs Lloyd Belden of Fort Wayne, accompanied by Mrs. Anna Koch, Mrs. Nan Lysher and son, Edgar, of this place spent Sunday afternoon with Mrs. Mary Timmerman at the Charles Jackson home at Concord.

Mr. and Mrs Abner Trestel entertained the Clyde Hart Sunday School class in a fine social way Sunday. The potluck dinner was enjoyed and the afternoon devoted to business duties, music and animated conversation.

Grover Curie and wife, Mrs. Belle Ridgway, Dr. C. S. Johnson and son Robert, Rev. and Mrs C. H. Havens and little daughter, Jean, Mrs. F. B. Leighty, Mrs. H. G. Hursh and Mrs F. D. Kissey and son Gerald, were among the Fort Wayne visitors, Tuesday.

Oscar Willing, an 18 year old lad of near Edgerton, Ohio, was instantly killed Saturday afternoon near Butler, when a train smashed into the milk truck which he was driving to Butler. The body was carried about 100 feet and was badly mangled.

The appointment of postmastership of Auburn has gone to M. E. Garrett of Auburn, instead of H. C. Hathaway as formerly reported. The latter came close to the job, but was finally defeated by his oponet.

Mr. and Mrs. John Slants of South Haven, Michigan, are here spending several days with the latter's brother, John Hull, and other relatives in this vicinity. Will Hull and wife of Auburn, accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Slants here on Monday morning and returned in the evening.

DO YOU WANT your friends to avoid you? They will certainly do so when your breath is bad. There is no excuse for anyone having a bad breath. It is caused by disorders of the stomach which can be corrected by taking Chamberlain's Tablets. Many have been permanently cured of stomach troubles by the use of these tablets after years of suffering. Price 25 cents per bottle.

VOL. XXXVII. ST. JOE D[illegible]ALB COUNTY, INDIAN[illegible] [illegible] JANUARY 4, 1923

Begin Anew

We are now fairly on the journey of 1923.

The first thing necessary to success is to forget the troubles of 1922. Remember that when you start traveling, there is no need to pack any troubles. You can get them as you go along, and you may be able to avoid the new ones if you have cleared he track of all the old ones.

Following this suggestion will mean a much better business condition for next year.

C. C. Club News

Members of the C. C. Club were most pleasantly entertained on Friday at the home of Mrs. M. J. Silberg in an all day meeting. In the afternoon a delicious pot luck dinner was served in cafateria style. A business meeting was called and the following officers were elected to serve for the next six months: President, Mrs. F. A. Deam; Vice-President, Miss Aminta Steward; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Lucy Beams; Assistant, Mrs. Steffey; Flower committee, Mrs. Maude Beams and Mrs. Ethel Bowser. The following guests were present: Mrs. Katherine Steward and children, Miss Vera Silberg of Garrett, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Bronson, Miss Ada Bowser and William Steward.

Ford Turns Turtle

Seven young people from St. Joe were considerably shaken up Sunday evening at 7:30, when the Ford car in which they were riding, turned turtle on the level road near the Leighty orchards. None were seriously injured but each carry a mark to remember the occasion.

The members of the party were Viola Coburn, Lucile Curie, Velma Kinsey, Walter Brown, Russell Rearones, Frank Shull and Robert Morr. The latter was driving. They were going to the home of Robert Morr to attend a watch party and were driving north from town when the radius rod of the car broke and threw the car to the side. This caused the right front wheel to break off and the car jumped back in the center of the road and it flopped [illegible] on the top. The top, windshie[illegible], and fenders were badly damaged.

Walter Brown and two or three of the others were injured to the extent that a doctor's aid was necessary and Monday morning found them unable to attend school.

Ida M. Traxler has been appointed as executrix of the will of the late Henry J. Herrick. The estate consists of $9,000 in personal property. The heirs are Mrs. Traxler and her husband, Elmer E. Traxler, no relatives of the deceased but who are the people he had lived with for years; and a nephew Lyle G. Herrick, of Farmer City, Illinois.

New Officers Installed

DeKalb County started out Monday in the New Year under almost a new staff of officers. None of the old officials of the nine major officers succeeded themselves. Eight of the new leaders are democrats and one a republican, and they are as follows:

Milo J. Thomas of Corunna, democrat, State Representative,

Frank P. Shook, of Grant township, democrat, county auditor,

Mrs. Carrie P. Weaver of Auburn republican, county treasurer,

William G. Morr, of Auburn, democrat, county Sheriff,

Calvin [illegible] Kain, of Newville township, dem[illegible]at, county surveyor,

Francis M. Wiltrout, of Corduna, democrat, county assessor,

Samuel F. Morr of Fairfield township, democrat, county recorder,

Howard A. Hinklin, of Garrett, democrat, coroner,

Marion Clark, of Smithfield township county commissioner.

One county councilman succeeded himself. This is Edward Kelham of Altona, a democrat. Of the six new councilman five are democrats and one a republican.

Not all the deputies have yet been appointed.

The changes in the township trustees were effective Monday also. Only one of the fifteen succeeced himself and this was Jesse W. Camp of Smithfield township, democrat. Nine of the new trustees are democrats and six are republicans.

Frank L. Milliman, re[illegible], who succeeds Frank F. Bowman, also a republican, as trustee of Concord township, will conduct his office at his home two miles north west of St. Joe.

Contracts Let

The county commissioners awarded contracts for the construction of five new bridges in DeKalb county last Friday. Merritt Butler of Spencerville received the contract for three of these, the Sponhour bridge in Jackson township, the Points bridge in Spencer township and the Goldsmith bridge in Jackson township. The Elkhart Bridge and Iron Company recieved the other two contracts, one for the Black Creek bridge in Butler township and the other, the Little Cedar Creek bridge in the same township.

Don P. Hindman was also a bidder on these jobs. His bids to compare with Butler's are as follows:

Sponhour bridge, Hindman $1,285, Butler $875.

Points bridge, Hindman, $993, Butler $754.

Goldsmith bridge, Hindman $1,[illegible], Butler $736.50.

St. Joe Couple Married

Donald Keller, Son of Mr. and Mrs Dan Keller of 4 miles north of St. Joe, and Miss Lazearn Sailer, daughter of Mr and Mrs C. H. Sailer of St. Joe, were married at Auburn on Tuesday, January 2.

The groom is a mechanic and holds a position at Harlan. Both bride and groom are highly respected young people among their friends at St. Joe, and the News joins these friends in wishing them a lifetime of happiness together

Mr. and Mrs. Keller expect to start housekeeping at Harlan as soon as they can get a house

THE ROSE MAID

NOPSIS—The time is the late or early '70s and the scene a amboat on the Mississippi river. the types of the period are resent and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace gets his mind off his mission by entering into deck sports in which he exhibits an unusual athletic prowess. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitta, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman.

With an awkward gesture Liberty stretched forth a hand, caught Drace's and wrung it warmly. "You're like—like Hamlet!" he exclaimed. "I'll do my best to help you, Hamlet. Let me be your Horatio as well as your slave."

Drace returned the fervent handclasp. "My Horatio!" he agreed. And then, solemn again, he added: "It's a worthy cause, Liberty. It's not alone my private vengeance, but the wrongs of a whole community that the ordinary machinery of justice can never right. Why, Liberty, dozens of men were murdered by those drunken fiends; little children were trodden under the hoofs of their horses, and women— Near our house, Liberty, an old couple live in poverty. At the time of Stepho's raid their son and his young wife lived next door to them; they were well-to-do and prosperous. The day of the raid the son had received ten thousand dollars from the sale of some lands. When rumor of the raiders came, he hurriedly hid the money somewhere in the neighborhood, scribbled on a piece of paper the location of that treasure and gave it to his wife before he went out with the other men to fight. Next morning he had been shot; and the young wife had been carried off by those devils—her child with her, after the Indian custom, to keep her from suicide. No one knows what became of her. Nor has that money ever been found. Liberty, if I could find Stepho, get him in my power, I believe I could at least learn what became of that poor young woman—possibly find that paper and learn where to find the money those poor people so sorely need; for once, some years ago, a mysterious fellow was caught digging about their yard. . . . But I've talked enough, Liberty. Action! Do you know any more about La Vitte?"

"Not much," replied Liberty. "I believe he is often seen up the River, and sometimes down on the coast. He has his friends, and nearly everybody else is afraid of him. So you—we—must keep dark till we get our chance. And you mustn't show your feelings in your face. Remember, master, you're just a young man out to see the world. H'm—here comes Colonel Josh. Suppose we talk to him. He was a mule-buyer in the war and may know something about Stepho."

The door was darkened. In came Joshua Mortimer, the man whom Miss Lucy had plied with questions concerning Drace. He had dodged in for a smoke, he said, when Shottle had introduced him to his master, and it was evident that it was his aim to impress Drace with his military bearing. He had not been actually in the army, but had acquired the title of colonel from his adventurous work of buying mules for the Confederate government. The Colonel "took it" that Drace was from the North.

"Yes, but some of my people were from the South."

"Ah! I congratulate you, sir. I have a match, thank you."

Drace had offered him a light. He filled his pipe with tobacco crumbs dug out of his breeches pocket, and, long legs crossed, sat back to enjoy himself.

"Well, sir, Mr. Drace, the war has been ended some years; and if we forget an evil as easily as a virtue, sir, it will soon be only a dim memory. I had enough of it."

"But you were not really in the army, Colonel Josh," the slave spoke up.

The Colonel pulled at his pipe, stretched his neck and appeared to fish for something down in his collar.

"Liberty, my duty was scouting and the incidental picking up of mules, as the records of the War Department will be pleased to exhibit, sir."

After a few minutes' more conversation the Colonel rose. "I will now go back to the ballroom," he declared himself. "Liberty, I came aboard tonight with your third cousin, Miss Lucy Sanders."

"That so? Come down, Marse Drace, and I'll introduce you to her."

"I think, sir, that she has retired," the Colonel was quick to in[illegible], realizing that he had thoughtlessly suggested an in[illegible] of his own territory.

for in that brief gaze he had carried away a master's painting of her, easeled in his mind. So he was quick to hasten below with Shottle, the Colonel panting behind them.

Miss Lucy had just left off dancing. No, she was not the thrilling barbarian, but Drace swallowed his disappointment dry, like a swamp man taking quinine. Shottle might have reflected that never before had his kinswoman been so glad to see him. On his arm she hung as she cooed, but her eyes were on Drace, and he listened, not to her words, but to the music of her accent, soft as the notes of a dove. Like a frost-bitten Shanghai, the Colonel stood first on one foot and then on the other. Drace politely asked Miss Lucy to dance with him, and the Colonel dropped onto a chair. Shottle sat beside him.

"She takes to him like a duck to water," said the slave, looking after his master and his third cousin.

The Colonel sighed. "Liberty Shottle," he said, "I am going to tell you something."

"Out with it."

"It is not a matter to be spoken of so lightly, sir."

"All right; go ahead."

"Liberty Shottle, it is this: I am deeply in love with your cousin, and before the dawn of another day I shall pop the question to her."

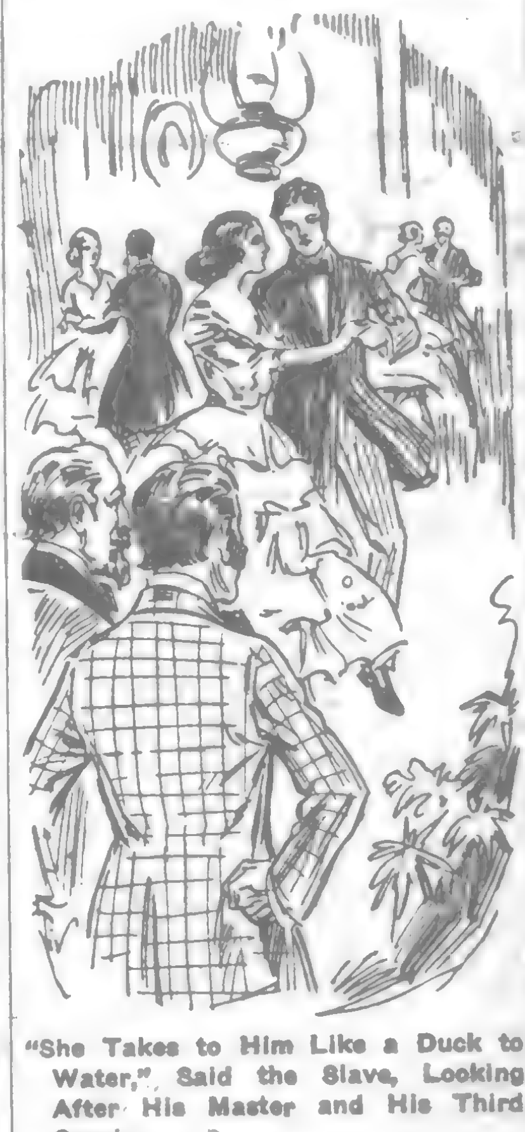
"Pop the deuce! Lend me ten dollars."

"You shock me, sir."

"Tell you what I'll do," persisted Shottle. "Let me have ten, and I'll make her a speech in your favor that will kink her hair."

"Shottle!"

"And I can do it. They've got my speech on the Periclean Age hung up right now at the university. The governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina, just after making his historic remark about its being a long time between drinks, that it was the most powerful speech he ever heard."



"She Takes to Him Like a Duck to Water," Said the Slave, Looking After His Master and His Third Cousin.

The Colonel scowled, and swore his refusal to enter into any financial transaction involving his heart; and Shottle, realizing that his efforts were vain, sank down into melancholy silence. Miss Lucy, meanwhile, was introducing Drace to some of her friends, not to young women, but to men and to ladies well advanced along the path. Drace soon realized that this society was far from the caricature that Shottle and Colonel Josh might reflect; for the most part it was composed of ladies of exquisite refinement, and men strong in the dignity of medicine or the law.

"You have not chosen an opportune time to visit New Orleans," an old judge remarked to Drace. "We are forced to live under the infamy of a carpetbag government, sir. Political scoundrels, who in the North could never attain to even the meanest office, come down here where we are disfranchised and elect themselves legislators, governors—representatives of parishes that they have never seen. Heavy taxes are levied, and they pocket the money. The governor was not elected, but named by a gang of freebooters. The real citizens of the state have no vote. Their former slaves and the crooks who now manage them control the ballot-box. This is the true state of affairs. What do you see New Orleans, sir."

This talk was too serious for Miss Lucy. She plucked Drace away to walk with her, and she hung [illegible] on his arm as everywhere he had searched for the girl [illegible] in vain! And presently he [illegible] self and went disconsolately to bed.

CHAPTER III

Next day the [illegible] Orleans. To Drace [illegible] the commencement of [illegible] was a [illegible] [illegible]

the charm of this half-lazy delta life began to reveal itself to him. The town was ruled like a true French city, it sang. Paris minuetted in the terror of the Revolution, and her youngest daughter in America, singed with powder, and with bloodstains on her dainty feet, danced to the music of her own improvised gayety. Drace saw the carpetbag governor driving through the street, surrounded by an escort of black and mulatto cavalry. From a balcony came a gunshot, and an enormous negro in white gloves, sitting beside his political master, tumbled out upon the ground but the carriage did not halt in its speed, and the hoofs of the cavalry beat upon the murdered wretch. In a doorway an old man sat fiddling for his grandchildren to dance on the flagstones.

"Oh, you'll find drama enough here that hasn't been rehearsed," said Shottle as they turned toward the old St. Charles.

"They appear to have set the stage for us," Drace answered him, wondering if ever again he should find the girl with the torch of roses.

In connecting rooms and amidst the luxury of old French furnishings they were quartered.

Leaving Drace writing a letter, Shottle went out, but he soon returned with more of light than usually beamed from the sad stretch of his countenance.

"Well, sir," he cried with astonishing enthusiasm, "I want to tell you that life is not composed entirely of ingratitude. Last year when I was down here I saw an old fellow about to get into trouble with a Mexican roustabout on the levee. I wasn't in any particular hurry, so I stopped, took up a piece of scantling and knocked the Mexican down. It was no particular trouble on my part, but the old man took it as a favor and urged me to eat dinner with him, which I did, being broke at the time. Now what does he do? I met him out there, and he gives me two tickets for the French ball at the St. Louis tonight."

"All right; we'll take it in."

"I should say we will! Why, there's likely to be a half dozen duels arranged for. We can see them bursting into bloom. But you'll have to liven up, you know. You are just a trifle stern, it strikes me. There is too much of—of your mission showing in your face. I don't know of anything better calculated to correct it than an hour at the roulette wheel. Suppose we go over and give it a whirl."

"Hope springs infernal in the human breast," Drace paraphrased the poet. "Just as well curb yourself, old fellow. I'm not going to feed your passion."

A tap at the door and Colonel Josh announced himself from the outside. Invited to enter, he came in with a sweeping bow, his beard and mustache waxed, his hair darkened with dye, giving to it a tinge of blue. He bore, and with ceremonious hesitancy, an invitation from Miss Lucy. She was at the delightful old home of a relative where choice guests would assemble that evening to hear Prof. L. Bannock Pettigrew read a paper on the origin and character of the ancient Scythians.

"Im very sorry, Colonel," Drace cheerfully lied, "but we have another engagement."

The Colonel gleefully replied that he was put into a position of deep regret. He knew that Captain Drace would so much enjoy the professor; his paper would not take up more than three hours of the evening. He would impart to Miss Lucy that Captain Drace found it impossible to come. The Captain assured him that such was the true situation and brightening, the Colonel gladdened himself out of the room.

The ballroom which Drace entered that night was as fantastic as a gypsy's vision. It seemed that all civilization had lifted the lids of its worm-eaten chests to array in whimsic reminder of its former self. There was evident poverty making itself neat in old linen, and war victims proud in threadbare coats. In rags there is history, but no ancestry attached to cloth fresh from the mill. No unfriendly eye was supposed to look upon this gathering, no antagonistic politics permitted to view it. The walls were draped in the colors of France, and [illegible] in a corner was a Confederate banner, its staff splintered, its [illegible] with sacred blood.

[illegible] the hope of raising a speculative table-stake, he bent himself to the less interesting life of the dance. [illegible] not without mishap! CRYSTAL JARRING CAN BE PREVENTED

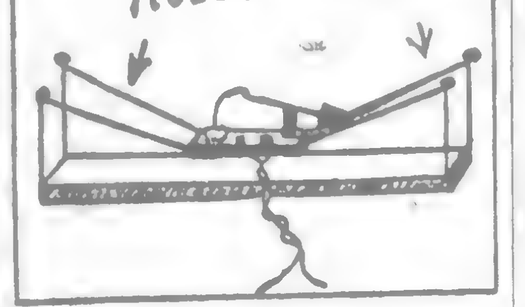
Simple Shock Absorber That Was Devised by Operator on a Transoceanic Vessel.

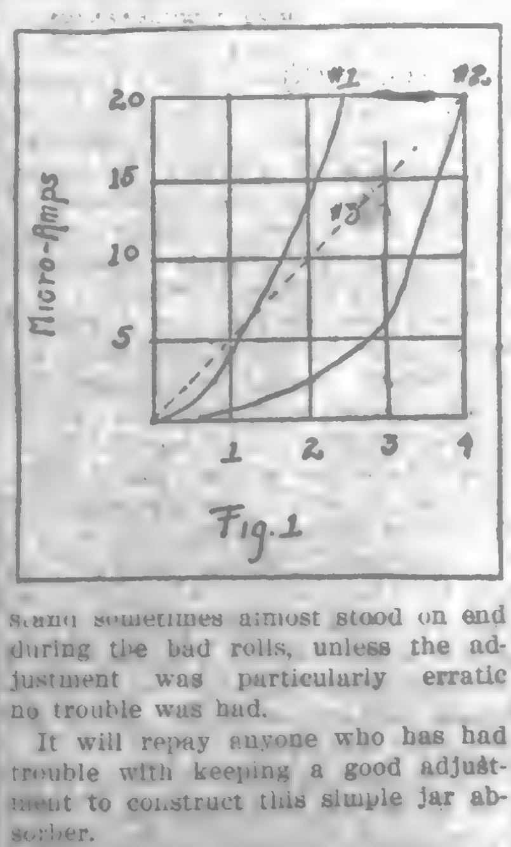
One of the worst irritations suffered by the crystal detector operator is the frequent jarring out of good adjustment. Often the slightest vibration caused by a heavy footfall, slamming of a door or someone brushing against the table is sufficient to disturb the good point. The process of the readjustment has to be gone through again. This happens with such regularity that numerous schemes to avoid jarring the detector stand have been devised. Most of these were failures, and the phrase "Don't Jar Out Detector," became a standard joke. There is one scheme which will protect the adjustment from almost anything short of an earthquake.



This idea was first encountered on a shipping board vessel. The vibration on a ship is great, and for this reason galena cannot ordinarily be kept in adjustment, and is rarely used. However, on a vessel in transoceanic service the crystal, unless the very best possible, will not bring in a signal for days at a time when the ship is near mid-ocean, far from any land stations. This operator had rigged up a shock absorber for his galena detector as shown in the figure. Little explanation is necessary. A block of wood a foot square or smaller supports four large nails or wood posts between which are stretched rubber bands as shown. These bands support the detector stand. If the stand is heavy with a small base it will be top heavy; and the stand had better be mounted on a larger base. The rubbers should be only heavy enough to keep the stand from touching the block, so that there is plenty of flexibility to absorb all vibration.

Use a flexible cord for connecting the detector into the circuit so that it can be taken off the shock absorber and adjusted on the table. When a good adjustment is obtained, carefully replace the detector on the shock absorber and it will stay in adjustment almost indefinitely unless of course disturbed by the heavy signals or static.

In the case mentioned the detector would hold an adjustment through an entire watch, though the vibration from the engine was pronounced and in a heavy sea there were strong tremors and jumps. This ship rolled considerably, but although the detector stand sometimes almost stood on end during the bad rolls, unless the adjustment was particularly erratic no trouble was had.



It will repay anyone who has had trouble with keeping a good adjustment to construct this simple jar absorber.

The detector is used to rectify alternating current of radio frequency. Oscillations of radio frequency are inaudible, the ear being able to distinguish only up to a frequency of [illegible] per second at the very highest. The longest radio frequency waves are about 20,000 meters wave length, or 15,000 oscillations per second, which is well above audibility, a[illegible] range of [illegible] The tren[illegible] [illegible] without the counteraction of the opposite half of the wave.

The more perfect the rectification the louder the signal will be in the phones, because the resultant audible current is the difference between the two halves of the cycle. The crystal is not a perfect rectifier. It is merely a resistance which does not follow Ohm's law. It offers more resistance to a current flowing in one direction than the other. Suppose the positive half of the current is to be utilized, partially neutralize the positive current, reducing the strength of the signal.

A curve for a galena crystal is shown as curve No. 1, in Fig. 1. The curve will vary for every adjustment on the crystal. This graph represents a very good adjustment. The best signal will be obtained when the sharpest bend in the curve is at the working point. In the case of the galena crystal this point would be at zero potential. At this point the rectification will be the highest.

Some crystals require a local battery and potentiometer to bring the working point to the proper point on the curve. Curve No. 2 is for a carborundum crystal. To work this crystal most effectively the potentiometer would have to be adjusted to give a positive potential of about three volts The dotted line for No. 3 is for an ordinary, and is a straight line.

Longer Life for Your Tubes.

For storage battery economy and longer life of the vacuum tube, it is always best to employ the minimum filament brilliancy consistent with adequate audibility of the signals being received. Nothing is gained by burning the filament above the temperature necessary for maximum regeneration, and white heat is seldom necessary to accomplish this, according to Radio Broadcast. By resorting to a two-stage amplifier in receiving from distant broadcasting stations, ample audibility can be obtained without excessive filament brilliancy. As a matter of fact, signal strength may well be sacrificed to purity of tone in voice and music, for after all it is faithful reproduction of sound rather than maximum noise which makes radiophone reception enjoyable.

Radio School for Army Flyers.

A new army radio school for training air service radio operators and electricians has been established at Chanute Field, Illinois. The school was removed from Post Field, Oklahoma, and new classes for radio instruction are being formed. It will be equipped with all the latest radio devices, including apparatus for aerial work in both heavier and lighter-than-air craft. Enlistments for training in radio for the army air service are now being accepted at Chanute Field.

Vatican Uses Radio to U. S.

The first use of radio by the Vatican was the recent transmission to the United States of a message from Pope Pius XI., through Mgr. F. Morgongini Daca, papal pro-secretary of Extraordinary ecclesiastical affairs, to James A. Flaherty of Philadelphia, supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus. The radio carried the formal approbation of Pope Pius of the Knights of Columbus, million-dollar American welfare campaign in Italy.

Big Chinese Program.

The new radio program in China calls for the construction of four wireless stations. One in Shanghai is to be larger than any now in existence in this country. Completion of this station will mean direct communication between the United States and China.

"I enjoyed Christmas this time with more pleasure than I had in years," remarked W. L. Mahone, 410 Charlottesville, Va., the other day, in telling of the benefits he has derived from the use of Tanlac. Mr. Mahone has been a railroad conductor for nineteen years. He runs on the Chesapeake & Ohio from Charlottesville to Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va.

"My stomach and digestion had been bad so long that I can hardly remember the time I could eat without suffering afterwards. I gradually grew weaker until I was often having to lay off from my run. In this run-down condition I contracted pneumonia in both lungs and came near losing my life.

"After this spell my stomach troubled me worse than ever and I remained almost as weak and helpless as a baby. While sitting around reading the papers I was attracted by the statements about Tanlac, which had such a sincere ring that I was led to believe the medicine might help me up the hill, and it pulled me clean up to the top. My appetite never fails, stomach misery is all gone, and I have gained thirty-five pounds in weight. Tanlac keeps me feeling 'spick and span,' too, so I can make my runs and still feel fine."

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness, are often times symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—Information intended to show that the Indiana Bell Telephone company has declared no dividends on stock held by the American Telephone and Telegraph company, and that the earnings of the Indiana company have not been sufficient to pay interest accrued on bonds held by the parent company, since the incorporation of the Indiana Bell Telephone company in 1920, was submitted to the public service commission by W. H. Thompson, attorney for the Indiana Bell Telephone company in the consolidated rate case now before the commission in the statehouse.

Terre Haute.—The fourth of a series of Vigo county teachers' institutes was held at the Normal Training school. Miss Staples, of the Normal Training school, had charge of the primary work; Miss Anna Sherwood, Ennis Shirley and Mrs. A. Darnell directed the intermediate work, and Walter Harvey, Arvel Jones, Mary May and Jesse Woolford conducted the high school work. The extension program occupied the afternoon session, with Frank Bogardus and E. L. Abel, of the Indiana State Normal school in charge.

Rushville.—The city of Rushville was made defendant in two suits filed in Circuit court each demanding $4,350 damages. The plaintiffs are Patrick Carroll and William O. and Katherine Morgan, who allege that the city had abandoned pipelines in the western part of the city, and that failure to plug the lines properly caused two gas wells owned by them to become worthless.

Brazil—Farmers of Jackson township, Clay county, have formed an organization for the purpose of erecting a community house in the center of the township. Lewis McNutt is president; J. C. Dutell, vice president; D. D. Dierdorf, secretary, and Hannibal Fisher, treasurer of the organization. These officers, with H. H. Boyd and Joseph Acree, form the board of directors.

Columbus.—Two hours after he had been arrested on a charge of entering and robbing a store, Edward Joplin, age thirty, colored, was on the way to Michigan City to serve a sentence of two to fourteen years in the Indiana State prison. He pleaded guilty in Circuit court to stealing $29.45 from the cash register and taking cigars and tobacco valued at $15 at the store of Wallace Bowman.

Greencastle.—Col. Harry S. Rethers, of the United States army, who organized the department which had charge of returning the bodies of American soldiers who died in the service in Europe during the war, spoke in the Presbyterian church. He said that about 47,000 bodies were returned home for burial and about 30,000 remain in Europe in well kept cemeteries.

Evansville.—The civil service examination for the office of postmaster at Evansville will be held January 23. The salary of the office is $4,500 a year. Among candidates for the job are Charles G. Covert, former postmaster and former mayor of Evansville; Al G. Slade, assistant postmaster; Orin Norcross, World war veteran, and W. A. Vaughn, railway mail clerk.

Versailles.—The officers elected for the Kenneth L. Diner Post No. 337, American Legion, of Sunman, are: Roy Stephens, commander; Thomas Ward, first vice commander; Earl Wetzler, second vice commander; Leonard Beer, adjutant; Elmer Luhring, treasurer; Gilbert Sieg, chaplain, and Edward Endres, sergeant at arms.

Shelbyville.—Fred Kennedy, president of the Kennedy Car Liner and Bag company, says the company will begin immediately the construction of an addition 60 by 219 feet, to its factory. It will be used for the office and printing establishment. The estimated cost of the structure is $40,000.

Terre Haute.—George Brown, age seventy, colored, charged with the murder of Wesley Evans, age twenty-three, also colored, entered a plea of not guilty and was bound over to the grand jury by Judge Irwin, judge of the City court.

South Bend.—Knights of Pythias of the Thirteenth congressional district met at Rochester. Among the state officers who were present were Ralph W. Gaylor, Mishawaka, grand chancellor, and Carl R. Mitchell, Indianapolis, grand keeper of records.

Laporte.—Because his wife refused to withdraw her suit for divorce, it is said, A. Robert Fawley, [illegible] porte horseman, commi[illegible] drinking acid.

Terre Haute.—Arrang[illegible] der way for the entertainment of members of the Indiana Sheet Metal Contractors' association in Terre Haute February 21 and 22, when the annual state convention will be held. A meeting of the committee in charge of the arrangements has been held. The business sessions of the convention will be devoted to the discussion of matters which pertain strictly to the sheet metal and furnace business. Terre Haute contractors on the general committee are A. W. Dudley, James F. O'Connell, August Hartman and S. L. Fenner.

Greencastle.—The suit of Mrs. Olivia Thomas, of St. Louis, against Tulla Crabbs, of Crawfordsville, for $10,000 damages, was compromised in the Circuit court. In the settlement the plaintiff was paid $1,000 and the defendant paid the costs. The case was sent here from Crawfordsville. Mrs. Thomas, who was riding in the Crabbs' automobile, when it struck a rough spot in the road, was thrown against the top of the car. She alleged she was injured permanently, and that Mr. Crabbs drove his automobile at a dangerous rate of speed.

Shelbyville.—Directors of the Shelby County Farmers' association at a meeting adopted a resolution asking that Russell G. East, county agricultural agent, be reappointed for another year. The resolution was addressed to T. A. Coleman, county agent leader at Purdue university, and to the 14 members of the Shelby county board of education. Mr. East came to Shelby county as agricultural agent five years ago.

Indianapolis.—Mrs. Samuel H. Ralston, wife of the Democratic senator-elect from Indiana, is one of the most beloved women of the state, and for several reasons. One is that she combines all the homely virtues which people like to idealize in a wife and mother, and, another, that no matter how occupied she may be with her own affairs she is never too busy to go into the kitchen and bake hot biscuits.

Gary.—Additional improvements to cost $10,000 have been outlined for next year for Gary's new lake front park by the park board. The erection of a permanent building on the south shore of the Calumet lagoon which will be used for a restaurant during the summer and a dancing hall and meeting place in the winter is included in the plans. A band stand will also be built.

Terre Haute.—The general store of W. H. Voelkee & Son at Standford, 12 miles northwest of Terre Haute, was robbed of merchandise and groceries valued at $40. The safe door was broken off but the robbers were unable to force the inner door of the safe. Some of the articles stolen were found by deputy sheriffs in a corn field near the town.

Anderson.—Jesse Stafford, who accidentally threw three $5 bank notes into a kitchen stove and recovered bits of them which he sent with a letter of explanation to the United States Treasury Department, has received word from Albert H. Vesta, representative of the Eighth Indiana district in the congress, that he probably will recover the full amount of his loss.

Franklin.—Tuns Ramsdell has been chosen commander of the Franklin post of the American Legion for the coming year. Other officers are Claude Barnum, vice commander; Lowell Griffin, second vice commander; Rhiel Vandiver, adjutant; Rollin Ott, treasurer; William Shuck, sergeant at arms; Robert Todd and Malcolm Halliday, members county Legion council.

Shelbyville.—James Wells, of Fairland, entered pleas of guilty in police court to charges of being intoxicated and driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor. Fines and costs in the two cases amounted to $16.20. Wells went to jail in default of payment. The charges against him were filed by Charles Reynolds.

Shelbyville.—Knights of Pythias lodges of Shelby county held their annual county meeting at Fountaintown. Delegates from all lodges took part in the election of a county deputy. Shelby county lodges are working for the selection of a site for the proposed Knights of Pythias orphanage.

Princeton.—J. Wesley Stewart, of this city, was elected commander of Princeton Post No. 25, American Legion. Other officers elected are: Ernest Bryant, first vice commander; Hooker Wallace, treasurer, and T. M. McDonald, chaplain.

Versailles.—A Parent-Teacher club with 40 members was organized. The officers are: Eva M. [illegible], president; Mrs. Charles [illegible], vice president; Miss [illegible], secretary, and Irving [illegible], treasurer.

Do You Feel Old and Stiff and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!

ARE winter months your backache months? Does every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you lame, achy and all worn out? Does your back throb and ache until it seems you just can't keep going another day?

Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills throw a heavy strain on the kidneys. They overload the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys have to filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold finds you suffering with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.

Don't wait! Delay may lead to serious or chronic kidney sickness. Realize that your kidneys have weakened in fighting the cold-created poisons and give them the help they need. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills today. Doan's have helped thousands at such times and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

MRS. JAMES BRADY, 301 Sycamore St., La Grange, Ind., says: Doan's Kidney Pills have done me more good than anything I have ever used. My kidneys were always weak and when I took cold, it settled in these organs. My back ached so I could hardly keep on my feet to do my work and my kidneys acted irregularly, too. I used Doan's Kidney Pills for these attacks and they never failed to help me right away, strengthening my back and kidneys."

M. O. FISHER, 206 Division St., La Porte, Ind., says: "In the spring when I caught cold, my kidneys became disordered. My back was lame and weak. I also felt tired. Doan's Kidney Pills always put my kidneys in good condition and relieved me of the symptoms of kidney complaint."

OVER THREE YEARS LATER Mr. Fisher said: "I am sure Doan's have absolutely cured me of all kidney trouble."

Moses Really Not Entirely to Blame for His Lapse From the Path of Virtue.

Moses was before the court for stealing a turkey. The judge kindly asked him: "Moses, why did you steal a turkey?"

"I don't know, yo' honeh."

"That is strange, Moses, that you don't know why. But do you know if it tasted good?"

"It shu did, yo' honeh."

"Now, Moses, how can a man enjoy stolen turkey?"

Moses in humility bowed his head.

The judge continued: "Remember the commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal.' Don't you know, Moses, you have two spirits watching you every day—the good spirit to your right, the evil spirit to your left? Tell me, how could you offend your good spirit?"

"Yo' makes it clear, yo' honeh. I see now de real cause, fo' I is left-handed.'—Judge.

What Are Parties For?

"Well, Frank, so you went to your first party today," said the boy's father, drawing his young son to him. "Where was it; at Billy Mason's? I suppose you had a great time, didn't you?"

Frank nodded vigorously.

"What games did you play?"

Frank gave a detailed account.

"What did you have to eat?"

The boy looked at his father in amazement. "What did I have to eat?" he replied. "Why, dad, I didn't have to eat anything. I wanted to!"—Youth's Companion.

For hours they had been together on her front porch. The moon cast its tender gleam down on the young and handsome couple who sat strangely far apart. He sighed. She sighed. Finally:

"I wish I had money, dear," he said. "I'd travel."

Impulsively, she slipped her hand into his; then, rising swiftly, she sped in the house. Aghast, he looked at his hand. In his palm lay a nickel.—Harvard Lampoon.

Absent-Minded Man's Ingenious Reason for Making Use of Profane Combination for Safe.

E. Fornier d'Albe is the inventor of the optophone, a machine which, by transforming print into light rays and thence into musical sounds, permits the blind to read.

Professor l'Albe said, modestly in an interview in New York:

"Yes, my optophone is rather ingenious. It is almost as ingenious as your American business man who used for the combination of his safe the queer words, 'Oh, hell.'

"A lady asked him why he used such a queer combination as that. He answered:

"'I have a very poor memory, and so, you see, ma'am, whenever I forget the combination it comes to me.'"

Lots of people imagine that they are not talked about, simply because they do not hear it.

New Year's Message

Rev. R. B. Daily, pastor of the local Christian Church brought the following message to his congregation last Sunday evening.

Heb. 6: 9. But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation.

This is a text for the present day. It gives us the backward look and the forward focus at New Year. There is pull in the words, "we are persuaded better things of you." Soul of mine, I call you to witness this day. Is it true?

New Year's Day is witness Day. The old saints and servants of God in their journeyings, when they reached a milestone or turning-point, stood by to erect an altar, and thereupon, thanking God and taking courage, they vowed vows of new meaning and went forward. Therefore we stand as witnesses through all these days.

These days, many days, are memorial days with us, and days of convocation, Among these is New Year's Day. The milestone of the year is past; marked and observed, to be sure, by generations before, but now come to be with us the day for an invoice of life, for individual stock taking of character. It is a time when we should lift our ideals and improve our conduct and character.

A great many folks turn over a new leaf on New Year's day. It is not turning a new leaf that we want. It is Jesus.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Matt. 7: 20. An apple, an orange, a hickory nut. What kind of a tree did this nut grow on? A hickory tree. And on what sort of a tree did the apple grow? An apple tree, of course. How did you guess so quickly? Because the fruit a tree bears always tells what sort of a tree it is.

It is equally true that you can tell what sort of characters people have by the actions and words their lives bring forth. Words and actions are as sure to show what kind of lives we live as the fruit is sure to show what sort of tree bears it.

Many people would like to have their lives make a good show of fine words and actions, but they do not try to be true and right at heart. And so, in spite of themselves, there is bad fruit, because the tree is bad.

Step by step, God leads us. God always works his miracles at just the right time. He does not define our way for a year or a month or a week ahead, but promises only to guide us step by step. It was as the women drew near the empty sepulcher that the stone was rolled away. It was not until the Hebrew youths were cast into the fiery furnace that one like unto the Son of God appeared to stand by them. It was not until Daniel was cast into the den of lions that the mouths of the lions were shut. The waters divided when the soles of the feet of the priests touched the waters of the Jordan.

David said, "set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth." What is a watch for? Yes, to tell the time. Can a watch talk? Then, how can it "tell" without talking? The way its hands point. That is correct. Do we need to tell that we are christians in order for people to find it out? If a watch should not have a clean face it might deceive us as to the correct time. Sin will show in the face. How do we keep watches running? Do christians ever need to wind up? Yes. By prayer, reading the bible, attending Sunday School and church. Suppose this watch should not keep good time—should run awhile then stop—what would be necessary to do? If we could find the man who made it, he would know how to fix it. Jesus knows all about us and he can fix us up so we will run right all the year. When watches do not run correctly the trouble is usually on the inside.

Happy New Year, blessed gift of God, who giveth bountifully, even more than is deserved. Truly our times are in his hand; he doeth all things well—but hold, not so fast—if our time is in his hand, it is not [o]urs after all, but His. But this [s]eason is not without meanings, [illegible]h on the one side, Life on the [illegible] the narrow defile between.

[illegible]sistency of man's nature, [illegible] a nature, cries out [illegible] The gospel scheme of [illegible] full and final [illegible]ns of man's [illegible] sin with a [illegible]

High School Notes

GENERAL:

The Semester examinations are to be given on Thursday and Friday of this week.

The teachers of Spencer and Concord townships will be in attendance at Institute at St. Joe next Saturday.

Frank Miser is the one person of the entire school who has a perfect spelling record, he having received 100 for the whole semester.

SOPHOMORE:

As a good start for the New Year Mr. Maxwell gave us three chapters of Caesar. As an additional punishment we were allowed to recite before the entire school.

L. E. K.

SENIOR:

We are back at school again after a week and two days vacation. Everyone seems to be very happy and we suppose it is because of the generosity of Santa. R.A.W.

JUNIOR:

It has been arranged that the Junior girls are to continue the Domestic Science work which they had started last year.

"Who shall roll away the stone" and "Who will proclaim our year of release.

There is no deliverance possible apart from the Christ of God and the blood of His cross. Release is signed, sealed and delivered in the New Testament Scriptures. He who is attested by many great proofs to be Lord of all is our Saviour from sin.

He gave Himself to heal the world's hurts, to change unhappiness to happiness, and if we have the love of Christ we will be trying to help and encourage some one on to a better life.

A little boy seeing two small birds peeking at each other, asked his elder brother what they were doing. They are quarreling, was the answer. "No" replied the child, that cannot be, they are brothers. If ever the universal brotherhood is reached, it will be due to the mind of Christ

On this New Year's day, at this beginning time, the time of the new year's birth, may we all be persuaded by the persuation of our Lord that he will keep that which we have committed unto Him against that great and final day, and in His way, the way of the cross and the blood, may we walk.

INTERESTING FACTS

106,327 Ford Cars and Trucks Retailed in November

Approximately the same number scheduled for delivery this month

What Does This Mean?

This volume of deliveries to actual owners is entiely unprecedented for this time of the year—

It has taxed the manufacturing ability of the Ford plants working at full capacity—

It indicates a volume of business during the rapidly approaching months of "heavy demand" which will be far beyond the maximum production schedule which the Ford Motor Company has set—

And that means a Ford shortage even more acute than the one which existed last Spring and Summer.

Dealers' stocks all over the country are low—there are no reserves to draw upon to meet the demands for delivery---

There is no way in which dealer reserves can be built up, as deliveries have been made to customers as fast as Cars could be manufactured since last April.

The only way you can protect your desire to obtain prompt delivery of a Ford even at this time is to place your order immediately.

This emphasizes more strongly than anything we could possibly say the necessity of your making prompt arrangements with a Ford Dealer for the listing of your order, particularly if you are contemplating the purchase of a Ford Car or Truck for use this Spring and Summer.

We believe you are entitled to know these facts as they actually exist.

American Farm Bureau

Mrs. Laura Tapp of Clay County, Missouri.

Where is the oldest member of the farm bureau? Clay County, Missouri, thinks perhaps she's there in the person of Mrs. Laura Tapp of the Estes school district.

Mrs. Tapp is eighty years old, and a part of the living present. She has read of the farm bureau and is interested in the problems of the farmers. She gives thought as to the best way to solve them and wants for herself a share in the business of bettering the conditions of agriculture.

When Mrs. Tapp heard that the Clay county membership campaign was under way, she called up R. R. Nickerson, one of the solicitors, asking him to come to the house and sign up her membership. Now she holds membership card No. 397 in her county.

Mrs. Tapp finds hogs testify to an intelligent interest in the care and feeding of live stock, and her beautiful garden, with its flowers tended by her own hands, is evidence of her interest in the farm home and its surroundings. But her active mind and interest reach beyond the confines of her own, and she's an integral part of the wider farm bureau movement.

LEGISLATION URGED FOR CREDIT RELIEF

Bernard Baruch Pleads for Measures That Will Put Farmers on Equal Basis.

Bernard M. Baruch, financier and formerly chairman of the war industries board, recently appeared before the senate finance committee of the farm bloc, consisting of Senator Arthur Capper, chairman, and Senators Charles L. McNary, W. L. Jones, E. F. Ladd, C. A. Swanson, J. A. Kendrick and Pat Harrison, and urged them to enact legislation "that will put the farmers on a credit equality with other lines of business." He told them that it makes little difference what particular rural credit bill is enacted to bring that condition about, for the bill can be amended later on if need be.

Mr. Baruch gave it as his opinion that any of the four bills now before congress would give a substantial measure of relief, but was of the opinion that the measure finally decided upon should provide three sorts of loans and correspondingly three sorts of short-time debentures from the sale of which would be obtained the funds for carrying the loans (which might amount to many times the capital of the proposed institution) viz.: (1) loans for facilitating the marketing of agricultural products in an orderly manner and at discretion, (2) live stock loans, and (3) loans for production purposes. The last, he thought, should be based on the united credit of local associations of farmers, so that all the members of the group would indorse the notes of each. He was confident that there would be a wide and ready market for debentures or notes running from six months to three years, because the security would be unsurpassed. Not only would the money centers readily absorb such instruments, but he was convinced that there would be a wide market for them in the rural communities themselves. Regarding the proposed federal reserve act amendments Mr. Baruch, while favoring some of them, said he thought it would be unwise to give farm paper a longer maturity period than six months, which is the present limit. Accommodations beyond six months could come from debenture funds.

IOWA GIRL MARKETS HIGH-PRICED STEER

An eleven-year-old Iowa girl now holds the record of marketing the highest priced steer sold on the Omaha market this year, says the Journal-Stockman. She is Mildred Saunders, daughter of "Chuck" Saunders, and granddaughter of the famous breeder who founded the well-known Saunders herd of Shorthorns at Manilla, Ia. The record-priced shipment consisted of one eighteen-months-old purebred Shorthorn steer weighing 1,260 pounds and the price it brought, $12, is 15 cents higher than the highest previous sale made at Omaha since December, 1920. The steer was given to its youthful owner to feed in January, this year, and buyers here had not a single fault to find with her work, the animal being without doubt one of the finest seen on the market in many a day. It was brought in with a carload of mixed cattle from the Saunders farm, the shipment including two other Shorthorn steers that averaged 1,140 pounds and were good enough to bring $11.50. Charles Saunders, grandfather of the market-topping lassie, brought in the consignment, which also included a load of hogs, 64 sows that raised a total of 467 pigs last spring.

GLENN WINDOM IS WINNER

The photograph shows Glenn Windom, Nodaway, Ia., and his champion baby beef steer, winner at the Iowa State fair, 1922. It was sold at auction for 20 cents per pound. Three hundred and sixty calves were exhibited, making the greatest baby beef show ever held. Two hundred and seventy-five of these were sold at auction and Glenn's calf topped the sale. Shorthorns made the high average selling price at the sale.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 7

JESUS HEALING ON THE SABBATH

LESSON TEXT—Luke 13:10-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day.—Matt. 12:12.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Ex. 20:8-11; Isa. 35; 56:11-8; Mark 2:23:3-5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Doing Good.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Healing a Helpless Woman.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Right Use of the Lord's Day.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Right Use of the Lord's Day.

What Jesus did on the Sabbath frequently brought him into serious conflict with the Pharisees. Through the petty rules and regulations they had made this holy day, which God designed as a day of rest and the doing of deeds of mercy, a day of burden and hardship. Jesus did not disregard the Sabbath, but broke away from their traditions and showed that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Religious rites and ceremonies should not be hardened into fetters to bind the worshiper.

I. Jesus Teaching on the Sabbath Day (v. 10).

It was the Lord's custom to go to the place of worship on the Sabbath day. His disciples will imitate Him in this. At the place of worship there is opportunity to be nearest to God, to worship Him, and to show mercy and kindness to our fellow-man.

II. Jesus Healing on the Sabbath (vv. 11-13).

1. A Woman in Need (v. 11). This poor woman's back was bowed down with eighteen years of great suffering. Though thus afflicted she found her way to the place of worship. Men and women are in great need today. Their bodies may not be bowed down with physical suffering, but there are many bowed down with the burden of sin and sorrow.

2. Called to Jesus (v. 12). He is always quick to discern those who are burdened. He spoke a word of healing to her. How welcome must have been His words. He is calling today to the many who are weighed down with guilty consciences to come to Him.

3. Laid His Hands Upon Her (v. 13). At His touch she was made straight and glorified God. It was not enough to teach. He showed His sympathy by coming into touch with the suffering woman. Christ's followers are to imitate Him in teaching, and also in coming into direct touch with the needy, sinful, and burdened world.

III. The Indignation of the Ruler of the Synagogue (v. 14).

Under the pious pretense of loyalty to God he showed that ritual is of more importance than mercy and love. It was not primarily concern for ritual, but hatred for Jesus that moved him to indignation. He was too cowardly to attack the Lord directly, so turned to the people and hit at Him over their backs. He pretended great concern for the healing of the people but advised that they come in the six days, and not thus have the Sabbath profaned by such a sacrilegious act as the healing of this poor woman. This man is the type of the many hypocrites among us today.

IV. The Lord's Reply to the Ruler (vv. 15, 16).

Jesus removes the mask of hypocrisy from the ruler as He points out their own custom as a condemnation of their pious pretense. He argues from the lesser to the greater. If it was right to take animals which had only been tied for a few hours, to water on the Sabbath day, certainly it was right to bring relief to this woman who had been bowed for eighteen years. Human beings are of more value than animals. This woman was a daughter of Abraham and not a sinner of low-down character. The principle which Jesus set forth restored the Sabbath to its true purpose.

V. Shamed Adversaries and Rejoicing People (v. 17).

The tide was now turned. Their exposure was so great that their consciences smote them. The arguments against morals and the church are of the same type today.

The Family Altar.

With the home resting on the family altar, a new religious life will come to the world; wholesome, unwavering. The world will learn by experience to rely on prayer. We shall believe that there is more good in the world than evil; more truth than falsehood; more love, mercy and forgiveness in God, than condemnation and punishment. We shall realize that prayer is the only weapon with which the world can overcome evil.

Defense.

For wisdom is a defense and money is a defense. [illegible]

MAKE UNPROFITABLE ORCHARDS PAY

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Measured by the abundance and regularity of the crops of high-grade fruit produced, there are many apple orchards of bearing age that are not successful. Because a large number of these unprofitable orchards can be made to yield good crops of high-quality fruit by special treatment, the United States Department of Agriculture has prepared Farmers' Bulletin 1284, Apple-Orchard Renovation, by H. P. Gould, which discusses the principal practices found useful in bringing neglected trees back into profit-producing condition.

Orchards in need of renovating are found only in sections where the home orchard or fruit garden is the prevailing type of fruit growing, and in regions where orchards of considerable size occur only occasionally, but also in the recognized commerical apple-growing districts. Some orchards are many commerical plantings much damage may be done by insect pests and diseases that have their source in badly infected trees. In some states a neglected orchard is practically declared by law to be a public nuisance and is treated accordingly. If the owner will not clean it up, public officials do it and the expense becomes a lien on the property until paid.

As a rule, says the author of the bulletin, a much-neglected orchard does not justify its existence. If an orchard is worth keeping it is worth giving good attention; otherwise, the trees merely encumber the ground and interfere with its use for other purposes. If an apple tree is not of value for fruit production it may be worth converting into tool handles, plane blocks, and other useful things.

Persons interested in renovating orchards or those who wish to decide whether or not a certain orchard is worth the attempt should get the bulletin, which may be obtained without cost from the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

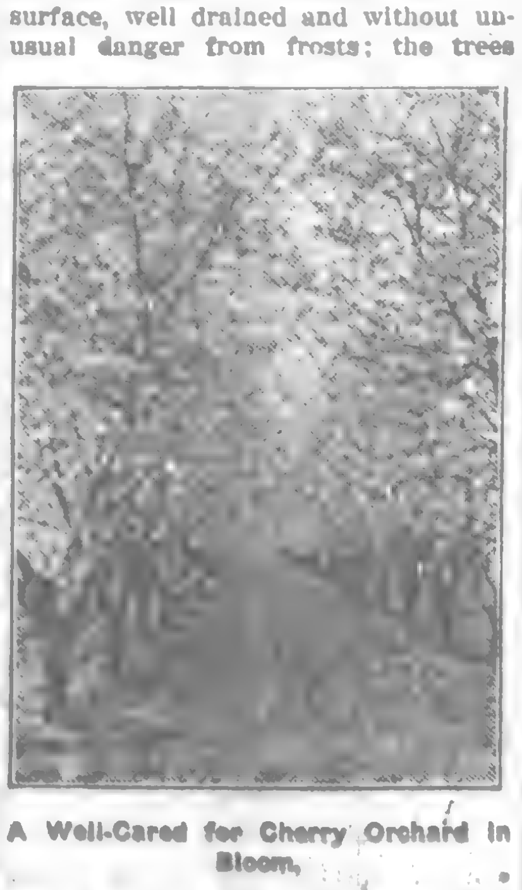
are not worth the time and expense necessary to renovate them. In deciding what is to be done the following factors need to be considered: The orchard must be on a good site with no rock ledges or hardpan near the surface, well drained and without unusual danger from frosts; the trees must have good vitality, without decayed trunks, cankers that girdle the limbs, or weakness that would make good growth impossible; and, finally, the varieties must be good unless it is practicable to top-graft the trees.



A Well-Cared for Cherry Orchard in Bloom.

A neglected orchard is always a menace to other orchards in the neighborhood and in sections where there

In working over neglected apple orchards, the trees will be of such varying types that it will be impossible to work toward any particular form of top, but it is well for the orchard owner to have in mind a certain desirable form; inexperienced persons will find it worth while to study some well-formed trees or pictures of them such as are used to illustrate the bulletin. The right sort of top has a large bearing surface, is low-headed, and has a fairly open top that will permit light to enter to the interior of the tree.

Big Things Needed.

Soil renovation, pruning, and spraying are some of the principal things needed in practically any orchard that is being brought back into producing condition. Just what is to be done depends on the age and vigor of the trees, the condition of the soil and other local factors. Various conditions and the necessary treatment are discussed in the bulletin, and the tools and other equipment are described.

When trees are otherwise good, but the varieties are not desirable, it sometimes pays to top-graft the trees. This work is not difficult, but must be done carefully. As a rule the cleft method of grafting is best suited to old apple orchards. Details of this method are to be found in Farmers' Bulletin 157, The Propagation of Plants. The time to do the work is in the spring just before growth starts or just as it is starting. The scions, however, must be perfectly dormant.

COW-TESTING ASSOCIATIONS

Over 194,000 Animals Entered Last Year to Determine Standing as Producers.

Farmers last year entered over 194,000 cows in cow-testing associations to determine their standing as butterfat producers through demonstrations by agricultural extension workers, according to reports to the United States Department of Agricultural.

DESTROY GARDEN BUG PESTS

After Crops Have Been Harvested Rake Up All the Old Stalks and Burn Them.

After the garden crops are harvested it often pays to rake up the old stalks and burn them. This may destroy insect pests and fungous spores which would cause losses next year. If any weeds have developed seeds they can also be burned.

The term "wireworm" is applied to numerous forms of elongated wire-like creatures, the larvae of snapping or click beetles and the name was given to them on account of their firm texture, which is much different from that of most insect larvae.

It is a well-known fact that the lady-bird beetles are very beneficial, and this is proven in many ways. One scientist records where these insects have eaten 50 to 60 aphis in a single day and there are several records where they have eaten a hundred in the same length of time.

Butter Produced in 1921.

Nearly two-thirds of the butter produced in the United States in 1921 was made in creameries, according to a report to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Potato Storage House.

A good potato storage house should protect potatoes from extremes of heat and cold, shut out light, provide good ventilation and drainage, and furnish enough moisture to prevent wilting.

MRS. G. W. HALL SICK FOR YEARS

Wants Women to Know How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lima, Ohio.—"Indeed, your medicine is all you say it is! I had very severe troubles such as women often have, and could do no heavy work. I was sick for several years, and from reading your ads. I finally decided to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am now doing my own washing, which I haven't done for several years, and can walk long distances without those dragging pains and weak feelings. The Vegetable Compound is fine, and I never forget to say a good word for it to other women when they say they need something."—Mrs. G. W. HALL, 539 Hazel Avenue, Lima, Ohio.

There are many women who find their household duties almost unbearable owing to some weakness or derangement. The trouble may be slight, yet cause such annoying symptoms as dragging pains, weakness and a run-down feeling. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for such conditions. It has in many cases relieved those symptoms by removing the cause of them. Mrs. Hall's experience is but one of many.

A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician, but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. [illegible]

And Yet a Fool

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

THE exchanges that come to a country newspaper like ours become familiar friends as the years pass. One who reads these papers regularly comes to know them even in their wrappers, though to an unpracticed eye the wrappers seem much alike. But when he has been poking his thumb through the paper husks in a certain pile every morning for a score of years, he knows by some sort of prescience when a new paper appears; and, when the pile looks odd to him, he goes hunting for the stranger and is not happy until he has found it.

One morning this spring the stranger stuck its head from the bottom of the exchange pile, and when we glanced at the handwriting of the address and at the one-cent stamp on the cover we knew it had been mailed to us by someone besides the publisher. For the newspaper "hand" is as definite a form of writing as the legal hand or the doctor's. The paper proved to be an Arizona newspaper full of saloon advertising, restaurant cards, church and school meeting notices, local items about the sawmill and the woman's club, land notices and paid items from wool dealers. On the local page in the midst of a circle of red ink was the announcement of the death of Horace P. Sampson. Every month we get notices like this, of the deaths of old settlers who have gone to the ends of the earth, but this notice was peculiar in that it said:

"One year ago our lamented townsman deposited with the firm of Cross & Kurtz, the popular undertakers and dealers in Indian goods and general merchandise, $100 to cover his funeral expenses, and another hundred to provide that a huge boulder be rolled over his grave on which he desired the following unusual inscription: 'Horace P. Sampson, Born Dec. 6, 1840, and died ——. And is not this a rare fellow, my lord? He's good at anything and yet a fool.'"

We handed the paper to Alphabetical Morrison, who happened to be in the office at the time, pawing through the discarded exchanges in the wastebasket, looking for his New York Sun, and, after Colonel Morrison had read the item, he began drumming with his fingernails on the chair seat between his knees. His eyes were full of dreams and no one disturbed him as he looked off into space. Finally he sighed:

"And yet a fool—a motley fool! Poor old Samp—kept it up to the end! I take it from the guarded way the paper refers to his faults, 'as who of us have not,' that he died of the tremens or something like that." The colonel paused and smiled just perceptibly, and went on: "Yet I see that he was a good fellow to the end. I notice that the Shriners and the Elks and the Eagles and the Hoo-hoos buried him. Nary an insurance order in his! Poor old Samp; he certainly went all the gaits!"

We suggested that Colonel Morrison write something about the deceased for the paper, but though the colonel admitted that he knew Sampson "like a book," there was no persuading Morrison to write the obituary.

"After some urging and by way of compromise," he said, "I'm perfectly willing to give you fellows the facts and let you fix up what you please."

Because the reporters were both busy we called the stenographer, and had the colonel's story taken down as he told it—to be rewritten into an obituary later. And it is what he said and not what we printed about Sampson that is worth putting down here. The colonel took the big leather chair, locked his hands behind his head, and began:

"Let me see. Samp was born, as he says, December 6, 1840, in Wisconsin, and came out to Kansas right after the war closed. He was going to college up there, and at the second call for troops he led the whole senior class into forming a company, and enlisted before graduation and fought from that time on till the close of the war. He was a captain, I think, but you never heard him called that. When he came here he'd been admitted to the bar and was a good lawyer—a mighty good lawyer for that time—and had more business 'n a bird pup with a gum-shoe. He was just a boy then, and, like all boys, he enjoyed a good time. He drank more or less in the army—they all did 's far as that goes, but he kept it up in a desultory way after he came here, as a sort of accessory to his main business of life, which was being a good fellow.

"And he was a good fellow—an awful good fellow. We were all young then; there wasn't an old man on the town site as I remember it. We used to load up the whole bunch and go hunting—closing up the stores and taking the girls along—and did not show up till midnight. Samp would always have a little something to take under his buggy seat, and we would wet up and sing coming home.

"He made a lot of money and blew it in at Jim Thomas' saloon, buying drinks, playing stud poker, betting on quarter horses, and lending it out to fellows who helped him forget they'd borrowed it. And—say in two or three years, after the chicken hunting set had married off, and begun in a way to settle down—Samp took up with the next set coming on; he married and got the prettiest girl in town. We always thought that he married only because he wanted to be a good fellow and did not wish to be impolite to the girl he'd paired off with in the first crowd. Still he didn't stay home nights, and once or twice a year—say, election or Fourth of July—he and a lot of other young fellows would go out and tip over all the board sidewalks in town, and paint funny signs on the store buildings and stack beer bottles on the preacher's front porch, and raise Ned generally. And the fellows of his age, who owned the stores and were in nights, would say to Samp when they saw him coming down about noon the next day:

"'Go it when you're young, Samp, for when you're old you can't.' And he would wink at 'em, give 'em ten dollars apiece for their damages and jolly his way down the street to his office.

"Now, you mustn't get the idea that Samp was the town drunkard, for he never was. He was just a good fellow. When the second set of young fellows outgrew him and settled down, he picked up with the third, and his wife's brown alpaca began to be noticed more or less among the women. But Samp's practice didn't seem to fall off—it only changed. He didn't have so much real estate lawing and got more criminal practice. Gradually he became a criminal lawyer, and his fame for wit and eloquence extended over all the state.

Colonel Morrison chuckled and crossed his fat legs at the ankles as he continued, after lighting the cigar we gave him:

"Well, along in the late seventies we fellows that he started out with got to owning our own homes and getting on in the world. That was the time when Samp should have been grubbing at his law books, but nary a grub for him. He was playing horse for dear life. And right there the fellows all left him behind. Some were buying real estate for speculation; some running for office; some starting a bank; and others lending money at two per cent a month, and leading in the prayer meeting. So Samp kind of hitched up his ambition and took the slack out of his habits for a few months and went to the legislature. They say that he certainly did have a good time, though, when he got there. They remember that session yet up there, and call it the year of the great flood, for the nights, they were filled with music, as the poet says, and from the best accounts we could get the days were devoid of ease also, and how Mrs. Sampson stood it we never could find out, for, of course, she must have known all about it; though he wouldn't let her come near Topeka. He began to get pursy and red faced, and was clicking it off with his fifth set of young fellows. It took a big slug of whisky to set off his oratory, but when he got it wound up he surely could pull the feathers out of the bird of freedom to beat scandalous. But as a stump speaker you weren't always sure he'd fill the engagement. He could make a jury blubber and clench his fist at the prosecuting attorney, yet he didn't claim to know much law, and he did turn over all the work in the Supreme court to his partner, Charley Hedrick. Then, when Charley was practicing before the Supreme court and wasn't here to hold him down, Samp would get out and whoop it up with the boys, quote Shakespeare and make stump speeches on dry goods boxes at midnight.

"Where was I?" asked Colonel Morrison of the stenographer when she had finished sharpening her pencil. "Oh, yes, along in the eighties came the boom, and Samp tried to get in it and make some money. He seems to have tried to catch up with us fellows of his age, and he began to plunge. He got in debt, and, when the boom broke, he was still living in a rented house with the rent ten months behind; his partnership was gone and his practice was cut down to joint keepers, gamblers, and the farmers who hadn't heard the stories of his financial irregularities that were floating around town.

"Yet his wife stuck to him, forever explaining to my wife that he would be all right when he settled down. But he continued to soak up a little—not much, but a little. He never was drunk in the daytime, but I remember there used to be mornings when his office smelled pretty sour. I had an office next to his for a while and he used to come in and talk to me a good deal. The young fellows around town whom he would like to run with were beginning to find him stupid, and the old fellows—except me—were busy and he had no one to loaf with. He decided, I remember, several times to brace up, and once he kept white shirts, cuffs and collars on for nearly a year. But when Harrison was elected, he filled up from his shoes to his hat and didn't go home for three days. One day after that, when he had gone back to his flannel shirts and dirty collars, he was sitting in my office looking at the fire in the box stove when he broke out with:

"'Alphabetical—what's the matter with me anyway? This town sends men to congress; it makes Supreme court judges of others. It sends fellows to Kansas City as rich bankers. It makes big merchants out of grocery clerks. Fortune just naturally flirts with everyone in town, but never a wink do I get. I know and you know I'm smarter than those jays. I can teach your congressman economics, and your Supreme judge law. I can think up more schemes than the banker, and can beat the merchant in any kind of a game he'll name. I don't lie and I don't steal and I ain't stuck up. What's the matter with me, anyway?'

"And of course," mused Colonel Morrison as he relighted the butt of his cigar, "of course I had to lie to him and say I didn't know. But I did. We all knew. He was too much of a good fellow. His failure to get on bothered him a good deal, and one day he got roaring full and went up and down town telling people how smart he was. Then his pride left him, and he let his whiskers grow frowsy and used his vest for a spittoon, and his eyes watered too easily for a man still in his forties.

"He went West a dozen years ago, about the time of Cleveland's second election, expecting to get a job in Arizona and grow up with the country. His wife was mighty happy, and she told our folks and the rest of the women that when Horace got away from his old associates in this town she knew that he would be all right. Poor Myrtle Kenwick, the prettiest girl you ever saw along in the sixties—and she was through here not long ago and stayed with my wife and the girls—a broken old woman, going back to her kinfolk in Iowa after she left him. Poor Myrtle! I wonder where she is. I see this Arizona paper doesn't say anything about her."

Colonel Morrison read over the item again, and smiled as he proceeded:

"But it does say that he occupied many places of honor and trust in his former home in Kansas, which seems to indicate that whisky made old Samp a liar as well as a loafer at last. My, my!" sighed the colonel as he rose and put the paper on the desk. "My, my! What a treacherous serpent it is! It gave him a good time—literally a hell of a good time. And he was a good fellow—literally a damned good fellow—'damned from here to eternity,' as your man Kipling says. God gave him every talent. He might have been a respected, useful citizen; no honor was beyond him; but he put aside fame and worth and happiness to play with whisky. My Lord, just think of it!" exclaimed the colonel as he reached for his hat and put up his glasses. "And this is how whisky served him: brought him to shame, wrecked his home, made his name a by-word, and lured him on and on to utter ruin by holding before him the phantom of a good time. What a pitiful, heartbreaking mocker it is!" He sighed a long sigh as he stood in the door looking up at the sky with his hands clasped behind him, and said half audibly as he went down the steps: "And whoso is deceived thereby is not wise—not wise. 'He's good at anything—and yet a fool!'"

That was what Colonel Morrison gave the stenographer. What we made for the paper is entirely uninteresting and need not be printed here.

GOOD HIGHWAYS

MONEY FOR IMPROVED ROADS

West Virginia Votes Favorably on Proposition to Raise $60,000,000 for Improvements.

Sixty million dollars for a system of state-wide highways.

Last year the taxpayers of West Virginia authorized by an overwhelming popular referendum, the sale of bonds to raise this huge sum in order that the vast natural resources of their mountains might find an open route to market. During 1922 the state legislature authorized the appropriation of $15,000,000 for construction of new concrete roads through the worst of the rock counties and it is probable that in 1923 the assembly will vote to spend at least $20,000,000 additional for new construction of hard surface highways.

Concrete Road Along Tug River With 9-Foot Slab at Center of Roadway.

Rich in coal, oil, natural gas and attendant industries such as glass manufacturing and foundries, West Virginia has never been in a position to gain the best results from its stored wealth through its lack of good roads system and the virtual isolation of many of its richest counties from the outside world save through industrial rail connection.

Travelers in the hills often were forced to ride twenty and thirty miles from one town to another on horseback, while some communities were able to buy clothing and provisions only once or twice a year. The rock strewn mud bottom roads in the central section of the state were impassable during the winter and early spring and many tragic deaths have been charged against their treacherous footing.

The first step was taken along the Tug river, near the Kentucky line, where the greatest coal producing mines are in operation. At Welch and in other McDowell county towns, the scenes of many of West Virginia's bitterest mine battles, the first all concrete link was laid. Engineers faced terrific problems of construction and in the service of supplies, but the first year's program was put through on schedule despite handicaps. The pits of McDowell county now have an easy means of access to the low country and production at the mines is increasing every month since the new system was placed in operation.

It is planned to make the roads interlock at points not served by regular freight and passenger trains at first and to follow up this original net work with a complete system of trade routes in succeeding years. Work will be concentrated on the central and western end of the state at first.

CONSTRUCT 18-FOOT BRIDGES

Some of 12 and 16 Feet Have Been Built to Economize, but Proven Short-Sighted.

Few highway bridges with a width of roadway less than 18 feet are now being constructed on improved roads, according to engineers of the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. In the past some of 12 feet and a good many of 16-foot width have been constructed in an effort to economize, but it has proved short-sighted economy. Only one line of traffic can pass over a 12-foot roadway and 16 feet of width will not accommodate two lines in safety. Many of the states such as Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, and Massachusetts have found it adviseable in replacing old bridges on important roads to make them wide enough to accommodate three and four lines of traffic.

FALL FRESHENING IN FAVOR

Cows Not Only Lead in Production of Milk and Butterfat, but Also Produce More.

Cows that freshen in the fall not only lead in production of milk and butterfat, but also produce more income over cost of feed than cows freshening at any other time of the year, according to Horace M. Jones, extension dairy specialist at South Dakota state college.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

THE FOXES

Daddy Fox was devoted to Mother Fox. He had brought her food and had seen that she had eaten it at the time when her mind was on the little baby foxes.

When the little baby foxes were very, very young, Mother Fox was along with them because she wanted to be quite alone with them at first so she could whisper to them some mother fox secrets.

Mother Fox had three dear small children and was very proud of them. They had been born in the good old homestead in a hollow tree.

They were quite blind when they were born and they were black in color.

But their helplessness only made them more appealing and wonderful to Mother Fox.

"You will grow up to be such beautiful foxes," Mother Fox said to them as they dreamed and slept.

She did not want them to become conceited, but she liked to talk to them and tell them how she loved them, and they could tell by the sound of her voice and by her sweet ways with them that she loved them.

Mother Fox believed in telling her little ones how much she cared for them because she thought it would make them want to be worthy of all those splendid things she thought of them.

"You Will Be Good to Each Other."

And their daddy thought the same way, too.

"Yes, and you will want to go hunting for mice and other small, delicious animals.

"You will enjoy insects, too.

"And once in awhile you will have a poultry banquet which will make people very angry.

"But you needn't think of people, for people and their wishes are not so important as foxes and their wishes.

"Your family name is that of Gray Fox. But you have many cousins.

"There is the Red Fox family. They are far more clever than we are, but in many ways they are like us. They, too, care devotedly for their little ones just as we do.

"The Daddy and Mother Red Foxes love each other all their lives and have so much happiness by being so devoted and fond of each other.

"The Red Fox family care more about having a superior home than we do.

"They often keep the same home for years and years and years. They have more than one entrance to their home, too, so that if they're surprised at one entrance they get away out of another.

"There are the Alaska Red Foxes, too. They dig nice homes with different entrances for safety, and they, too, make lovely mates and devoted and loving parents.

"In the winter time it is hard for them for they live far North where they have to hunt under difficulties for their food.

"Oh yes, they do not have it so easily.

"Then we have the Silver Fox cousins and the Desert Fox cousins and the Cross Fox cousins.

"And none of us are stupid. We are all very bright, though the Desert Fox family is not nearly so bright as the rest of us.

"Ah, my little Foxes, grow up to be fine strong, beautiful foxes and you will hunt and be happy, and though you may be considered crafty and sly by people, you will be good to each other.

"For such are the ways of foxes. Ah, yes, such are the ways of foxes!"

And Mother Fox called Daddy Fox and asked him if he didn't think the children were very beautiful.

And I think you may be able to guess the answer that Daddy Fox gave!

No Wonder He Ran.

Turning a corner at full speed, the boy collided with the minister. "Where are you running to, my little man?" asked the minister, when he had regained his breath. "Home!" panted the boy. "Ma's going to spank me." "What!" gasped the astonished minister. "Are you so eager to have your mother spank you that you have to run home so fast?" "No," shouted the boy over his shoulder, as he resumed his homeward flight, "but if I don't get there before pa, he'll do it!"

Obituary

CHARLES WARREN ABEL

Charles Warren Abel, son of George and Sarah Ann Abel, was born in Concord township, DeKalb county, Indiana, November 4, 1853. He resided in this locality until the Fall of 1879, when he removed to Newaygo county, Michigan, near White Cloud, and remained a citizen of that community until his death, which occurred December 28, 1922. He was married to Emma Scholes, and to this union one child was born, Gertrude, now Mrs. Arthur Woodcox. Mrs. bel died in May, 1922.

Mr. bel was a carpenter contractor and wac active in that pursuit until within the past two or three years when his health beganto fail. The fatal attack came on Wednesday, December 27, and the next morning at 1 o'clock death came. He was 69 years, 1 month and 24 days of age. The fatal malady was diagnosed as arterio-sclerosis.

Mr. Abel is survived by his aged mother, Mrs. S. A. Abel, now past ninety; two brothers, J. C. F. and Wallace E., and five grandchildren, Blaine, Mildred, Earl, Wilbur and the baby. Many other relatives and friends also mourn his departure.

A funeral service was held at White Cloud at 8:30 a. m., Saturday, December 30, conducted by Rev. Van Wingerden, of the Methodist church, and the body was brought to St. Joe, and lay in state at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. F. Abel, where a brief service was held at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon prior to the interment at Alton cemetery. E. R. Kinsey had charge of the burial.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our thanks and appreciation to the friends and neighbors for their sympathic assistance during the death and burial of our brother.

J. C. F. and W. E. Abel.

Christian Church Notes

Reports from various departments of church and Sunday School have been asked for to be given next Sunday.

The pastor, R. B. Daily, will begin a series of sermons on "Lazarus," the first to be given next Lord's day morning on "Lazarus the Good Man." The entire membership is urged to be present.

A new teachers training class will begin next Sunday morning with about twelve members, Mrs. Bassett to be teacher. All those holding the books "Training for Service," will kindly bring them for the use of this class. That is those books which the Sunday School purchased last year.

Vernon Woodcox and wife entertained the Delta Alpha class, Monday evening, seventeen members being present. At the business session held the following officers were elected to serve during the year. President, Mrs. Alma Woodcox; Vice president, Mrs. Florence Smith; Secretary, Doris Keesler; Assistant, Virginia Lawson; Treasurer, Charles Bassett; Assistant, Louetta Daily; Teacher, Mrs. Anna Koch. The class will meet the first Monday night in each month.

We Misinformed You

Paul Krise has requested that the News correct its statements in regard to his accident which occurred on Saturday evening, December 23rd. We are sorry we did not obtain our information from Paul. What we got was from one of the occupants at the time of the accident.

Paul advises that he was not speeding, but was driving about 25 miles an hour in a fog near the curve. Also that he did not go into the ditch but to the side of the road and into the fence, and that his car was not completely demolished but that he, a mechanic that he is, repaired it himself at an expense of only $26.

Paul seemed to feel hurt that the people obtained false information through our columns.

VOL. XXXVII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1923 No. 2

Young People's Council

Concord Township

The Young People of Concord Township between the ages of 14 and 24 will meet at the school building on Saturday afternoon and evening, January 13th. The object is to organise this division of the Sunday School work under state and county standards.

The county superintendent and officials will be present, also the local ministers, who will give us talks. In the evening there will be a good time meeting.

Any adult who finds this work interesting is doubly welcome.

"COME" and help raise the standard of your township,

Lutheran Church Notes

We have been encouraged by the attendance and interest manifested to continue the series of sermons on "the condition of the soul after death." The third sermon of the series will be preached next Sunday evening at the Lutheran church at 7:00 p. m. The subject this time will be, "Shall We Pray for the Dead? Is There A Purgatory?"

You are cordially invited.

Rev. Steffey, pastor.

The World Moves Onward

"With the sickle of the year 1800 A. D., one man could cut one-half an acre of wheat a day.

"With the cradle of 1831, one man could harvest 2½ acres a day. But it took a man of iron muscle to do it.

"With the reaper of 1840, he could cut six acres a day.

"With the binder of 1880, he could cut 20 acres a day.

"With the tractor of 1921, and two binders, he can cut forty acres a day."

No man who thinks can deny the truth of these few paragraphs. Surely the merchant knows how true they are.

While this advancement has been made in the method of reaping the harvest, do you suppose that the farmer has stood still in many other respects? Not in the least, he has shot ahead and broadened out with the rest of the world.

The merchant who fails to recognize this is likely to find himself in need of the farmers' trade, for the farmers of today must be reckoned with and rated as among the best and most desirable of our business men and producers.

Rest assured, they want to see and know that your store has made the same sort of progress that they have made on the farm. Has there been as much improvement in general storekeeping in the state of Indiana as there has been in the methods of farming? It is a fair question, Mr. Merchant, answer it for yourself.

In our opinion, there is a lot of room for improvement in both parties, but the merchants are farthest behind.—Business Chat.

Obituary

Mrs. Cavlin B. Jackson

Mrs. Calvin B. Jackson (Etha D. Rickett) was the only child of Thomas A. and Catherine Rickett and was born in Wilmington township, DeKalb County, Indiana, May 6, 1876; died Sunday morning, January 7, 1923; aged 46 years, 8 months, 1 day.

When she was yet a baby her parents moved to Concord, Concord township, this county, where she grew to womanhood.

On July 6, 1892, she was married to Calvin B. Jackson, the Rev. John J. Fred, of the M. E. church of Spencerville, performing the ceremony. To this union one child was born, Edna Murel.

Her entire life has been spent in this vicinity, at Concord, later at Auburn Junction, and for the last eleven years at St. Joe. She united with the Concord Methodist Protestant church at the age of 12, under the ministry of Rev. W. W. Lineberry, and on removing to St. Joe her membership was transferred to the M. P. church at St. Joe, in which she was an active and consistant worker until her death.

She was a Pythian Sister, a member of Azelea Lodge, No. 153, and has filled every office once and again.

Her health had been failing for months, but she kept bravely at her post of duty, and none apprehended the near approach of death. If she had permonitions, she kept them to herself. She had been troubled with a cold, but the symptoms were not considered alarming.

She arose early Sunday morning and began her household preparations, but immediately she felt that the hand of death was upon her. Husband, daughter and mother quickly responded to her call; the doctor was summoned; neighbors came in, and all did everything that could be done to baffle death, but in vain.

From the moment she arose from her bed she knew that death was imminent. Gathering her loved ones about her she told them that her time was short. She talked to them as she looked death full in the face and there was no fear. Calmly she spoke her last requests and bidding each a last farewell, her spirit took its flight to the realm immortal. In one conscious moment she seemed to have caught a vision of the spirit world and spoke of going to join her father in the heavenly home.

Elsie (Gill) Bleeks

Elsie (Gill) Bleeks was born in Concord township, DeKalb county Indiana, on February 20. 1863, Her parents were the late John and Sarah Gill.

On December 24, 1881 she was united in marriage to William C. Bleeks. To this union 4 children were born, Ora F., Walter, Charles H., and Carrie Edith, all of whom survive.

She lived in Concord township practically all her life and has been a member of the St. Joe Methodist Protestant church since 1885. She was also a member of the Rebekah Logde and the Pythian Sisters.

She departed this life on January 5, at 8 o'clock at the family home, aged 59 years 10 months and 15 days. She leaves to mourn their loss besides the four children, 12 grandchildren, 2 sisters, Mrs. Mary Ulm of St. Joe, Mrs. Josephus Shilling of St. Joe, and one brother Charles Gill of Auburn

One sister, Mrs. Lib Kline passed away several years ago and a brother, John R. Gill, died a few months ago.

The funeral was held from the Concord M. P. church, conducted by Rev C. H. Havens. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

BASKET BALL TOURNAMENT SCHEDULED

St. Joe Will Not Play

The schedules for the annual DeKalb county high school basket ball tournament was drawn out last Friday evening in the office of County Superintendent Green. Mrs. Green, Assistant County superintendent, drew lots and the schedule resulted as follows:

Friday evening at 8 p. m., Waterloo plays Ashley.

Friday evening at 9 p. m., Auburn plays Garrett.

Saturday morning at 8:30, Corunna plays the winner of the 8 o'clock game of Friday night.

Saturday morning at 9:30, Butler plays Spencerville.

Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock the winner of the 9 o'clock game of Friday night will play the winner of the 9:30 game Saturday morning.

Saturday evening the finals will be played.

St. Joe is to take no part in this contest, due to the fact that it has no team this year. The Rural Housewives Club met Thursday afternoon with Mrs. H. A. Coburn. There were twelve members and three guests, Mrs. Alice Hart, Mrs. Elmer Volgert and son present

The hostess being president also, presided at both the business and social hours. In the New Years Day contest Mrs. Stella Baker won the prize which was a combination glass, lemon squeezer and dish. The hostess then conducted a little volunteer meeting playlet with the assistance of several guests which produced much laughter

Luncheon of sandwiches, pickles, peach salad, cake and coffee was enjoyed by those present. The meeting adjourned to meet in two weeks with Edith Widney.

Narrow Escape on Grade

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Randall narrowly averted a serious accident Sunday evening when driving home from Mrs. Jane Coburn's home, east of town. The lights of the machine were not working but Mr. Randall thought he could drive the short distance home without them. As they neared the creek bridge the road being narrow the machine slipped over the edge of the grade but did not tip but seemed to just slide down the bank and lean on its side on the bank. Another machine came along and helped them into the road again but it was necessary to tow them home. They were very grateful to the young men who came to their aid.

DOCTORS WANTED TO OPERATE

Mrs. Quillon Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her from an Operation

Muskegon, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different physicians without any relief at all, they said at last that medicine would not reach my case and I should have an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and often saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and give it all the praise."—Mrs. NELLIE QUILLON, 17 Morris St., Muskegon, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a persistent and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to help.

"NADINE LA VITTE!"

SYNOPSIS—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace gets his mind off his mission by entering into deck sports in which he exhibits an unusual athletic prowess. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat.

"That's what comes to a horse that wanders from his stable-lot out on the frozen pond," said Shottle as Drace came up to laugh at him.

"You've made a rip in the skirt of the ball sure enough," Drace replied, taking him by the arm. And then suddenly he halted, for he caught sight of a girl coming toward him. A moment before, there had been numerous young women in the room, but now there was only one—the barbaric rose maid, the girl who had touched his heart with a torch.

With her walked a tall, handsome and well-dressed young man. Her hand rested upon his arm, and she seemed to listen with pleasure to his evidently ardent wooing. She looked at Drace, one glance, and then turned her eyes back to her cavalier and passed on. And a flame of jealousy was added to the turmoil that already held possession of him.

"Who is she, Shottle?" demanded Drace.

"I don't know, but I'll find out. Lord, but she is a fetcher."

He moved off, dodging the dancers here and there, while Drace sat alone in a window, waiting.

The orchestra struck up the supper-march, and Shottle, stalking his prey, saw the lady who had so excited Drace's interest seated with her cavalier in an alcove and supping daintily. Possessing himself of a plate and a goodly portion of chicken, Shottle returned and brazenly seated himself near them, listening with all his ears.

"Nadine," the cavalier was saying, "you wrong me in thinking I seek to influence you through my friendship with your father. It is true he owes me much; and it is true that if I were to become a member of his family I would forget that. But I want to make you care for me for myself. If—"

"Hush, Mr. Boyce," said the girl. "There are people near—this is no place to discuss such things."

The young man lowered his voice, and Shottle could hear no more. He calmly finished his chicken and then sought out Drace, whom he found pacing up and down impatiently.

"Well?" demanded Drace.

"His name," announced Shottle, "is Boyce. Frederick Boyce, probably—or maybe John. It would be John, I'd think."

"Hang his name!" exclaimed Drace. "Did you find out hers?"

"Nadine," replied Shottle with a triumphant air.

"Nadine," repeated Drace, and caressed the name with his lips. "But what's her last name?"

"Brown probably, or maybe Jones. Or it might even be Smith."

Drace scowled his wrath at such flippancy. "Look here, Lib," he said. "I'll give you twenty-five dollars to find out her full name and where she lives. I'll give you a hundred if you'll find somebody who'll introduce me to her."

"It's a bet," said Shottle. "But I must warn you you're late. Boyce wants her to marry him, and he's got a hold on her father. But she stood him off."

"H'm—she stood him off? My offer stands, Lib. She couldn't possibly throw herself away on a low-looking fellow like that."

Shottle asked for the twenty-five in advance, was denied and took himself off, grumbling. He found Boyce and the girl called Nadine just leaving the little alcove, and stopped them, bowing low. "Sir," he said, addressing Boyce, "I have been directed to inform this lady that she has been awarded a prize as the best waltzer in the room. If you will be so good as to give me her name and address in order that it may be delivered to her?"

Boyce regarded Shottle suspiciously. "Well!" he exclaimed. "I didn't know they did that sort of thing here. What is the prize and who is giving it?"

"The prize," replied Shottle [illegible] "is a—[illegible] [illegible]"

[illegible] Nadine la Vitte, and the address—"

She broke off, and flushed a little. Shottle's jaw had dropped; then he gulped with an extraordinary contortion of his face in the endeavor to mask his astonishment. "And the address?" he pursued.

The girl and Boyce exchanged a troubled look. "I think," interposed Boyce, "it would be better to take the —the fowl home tonight. Perhaps you would be good enough to deliver it to our carriage. It is ordered for one o'clock—Number 297." Bowing with pelican grace, Shottle departed, but he delayed some ten minutes in dark thought before he sought Drace again. For Shottle wanted the hundred dollars, and if he were to tell Drace that her name was La Vitte! Could it be possible that she was Stepho's daughter?

He presented himself before Drace at length. "Master," he announced, "her name is Nadine Brown and her address is Carriage Number 297."

"Carriage Number Two— But that is no address. And—"

"Listen, Master," went on Shottle hurriedly. "I have a scheme—a magnificent scheme. Not only shall you be introduced to this lady, but you shall be presented to her in the role of a protector and rescuer."

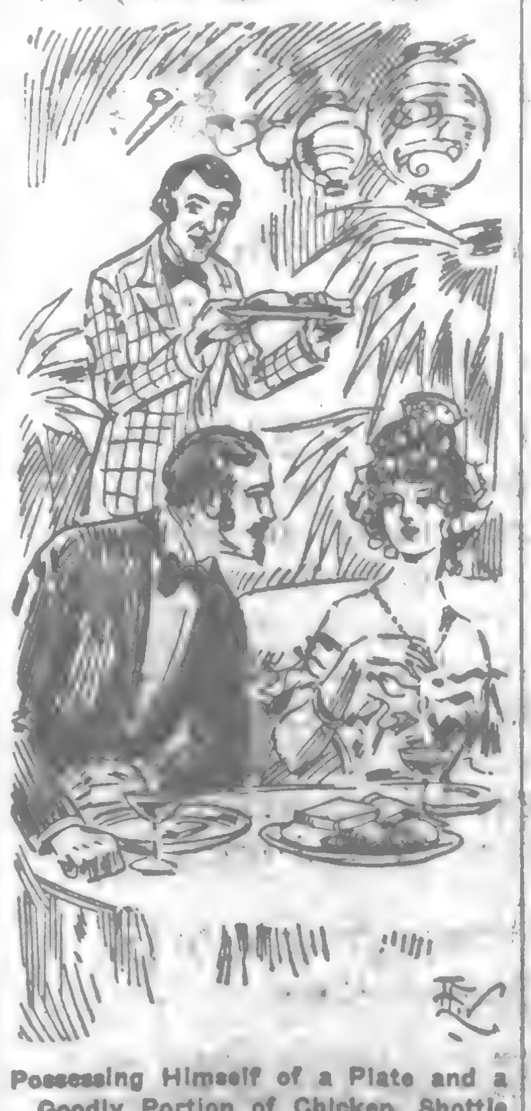
"How in the world will you manage that?"

"Very simple. At ten minutes past one, you are to be standing on Blank street just beyond the lamp at the corner of X street. Carriage 297 will drive past. From out the shadow of a garden wall two men will spring out and stop the carriage—attempt to rob this Boyce fellow and that girl. You will rush up with a cane—a cane, Virgil, no pistol—and drive off the robbers! You are a hero—the lady thanks you. Tableau!"

"But—but—"

"Leave it all to me—but give me that twenty-five dollars. I know fellows who'd hold up the devil himself for five."

At ten minutes past one o'clock Virgil Drace was standing in the shadow of a tree near the street-crossing decided upon, cursing himself for a hair-brained fool and Shottle for an addle-pated rogue. A rattle of wheels came to his ears, and a cab approached him. As it came under the lamp at the corner, Virgil was sure he recognized the flamingo neck of Liberty Shottle rising from the turned-up collar of the cabby on the box.



Possessing Himself of a Plate and a Goodly Portion of Chicken, Shottle Returned and Brazenly Seated Himself Near Them.

"Good Lord!" gasped Drace. "He's done it. Pray heaven Boyce carries no pistol."

The cab passed him. And then from the shadow of a wall a hundred yards or so distant two dark figures darted out. There came a hoarse command, a stifled scream, a [illegible]. Drace ran forward and found Boyce, Nadine and the supposed cabman standing with uplifted hands beside the vehicle while a masked [illegible] threatened them with a pistol and a second robber demanded their valuables.

Now Drace played his part right gallantly, rushing upon the robbers with uplifted cane. [illegible] the pistol fired [illegible] a blow on the wrist from [illegible] sent the weapon flying. [illegible]

[illegible] lighted with gratitude. She held forth her hand. With a grace that would not have mocked a Highlander who, schooled in France, had followed home the Queen of Scots, he bent over it and reverently touched it with his lips. Wild was her nature, this half-barbaric maid, and she snatched her hand away, but repenting instantly, smiled and spoke.

"I thank you much. You are brave. You are like one on the stage, the hero."

Her words came freely, and with just enough of accent to convince that they were sweeter than if there were none. Drace asked her if she remembered him, and her black velvet eyes flashed dark in astonishment.

"How could I when never have I seen you? You must mistake me. No."

"I saw you on the boat, at the ball at the St. Louis," Drace said. "But come to think of it, I know that it would be vanity on my part to believe that you have seen me."

"No, it would not be vanity," pleasantly she contradicted him, shaking her head, her cloud of hair. "The brave do not be vain, but I did not see you. I am so sorry. You sorry, too, ha?"

She laughed, and Drace thought that never till that moment had he heard music in its sweetest purity. Then Boyce and Shottle returned, panting—Shottle to disappear again in pursuit of his vanished vehicle.

"Sir, I thank you most heartily for your assistance," said Boyce, grasping Drace's hand. "My name is Boyce—Rupert Boyce. May I—"

"Mine, sir, is Virgil Drace," responded that young man. "I am only too glad to have been of help. I'm afraid, however, you'll have to finish your journey on foot. May I have the pleasure of walking with you?"

This suggestion, however, Boyce declined. And although Drace insisted as far as the bounds of courtesy would permit, both Boyce and the girl evaded consent. And they left him standing thunderstruck on the street corner —for the girl had said, giving him her hand again in parting: "I thank you once more for your help, Mr. Drace. I hope I may see you again some time. My name is Nadine la Vitte, and I am often in New Orleans."

Drace passed an uneasy night, his mind torn by his suspicion that Nadine la Vitte was the daughter of old Stepho. And when Liberty came to his room next morning, eager for praise and reward, the truth came out. Nadine was indeed the daughter of old Stepho; Liberty had overheard enough while disguised as the cabman to confirm that. But where she lived in New Orleans, Liberty had failed to learn; he had planned to drive them home, but the runaway of the cab horse had sent that plan agley.

CHAPTER IV

Now more than ever was Drace resolved to find where the girl lived, to find old Stepho, to— What would he do when he found them? He was bent on revenge upon his father's murderers, on solving the secret of that buried money; yet he was in love with that arch-scoundrel's daughter. Or was he? He must find her, make sure. And he said as much to Shottle.

"There are some things that can't be done by mere determination," said Shottle, his mind on filling a flush.

"No, but judgment ought to be the master and director of determination. I tell you what we'll do. This afternoon we'll take the French quarter by streets and knock at every door."

That afternoon they set out on their quest. But the scheme of knocking at every door soon seemed foolish and impertinent. They decided to halt only in front of habitations that seemed to invite inquiry, consult their instinct; but as repeated failure blunts instinct dull, hope became a critic, without creative adventure, and advised a return to the hotel. Then they thought that night would be a fitter time. They might catch sight of the girl or Boyce at the theater.

"I am Colonel Shottle, sir, and not Lib!"

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Versailles.—Miss Emily Hopkins, county school nurse, began her work in Ripley county. The members of the nurse committee are: L. A. Burns and Mrs. D. Robinson, Sunman; Mrs. Mary Johnson, New Marian; Mrs. J. S. Bilby, Dr. L. T. Cox, Vernon Vayhinger, Peter Holzer and Miss Carrie Smith, Osgoood; Mrs. Link Dean, Milan; Mrs. Minnie E. Wycoff, Batesville; O. P. Shook and Dr. C. E. Holton, Holton; William Meyers, Dillsboro, and Mrs. Mona Royce, Versailles.

Anderson.—In his annual report which was submitted to the commissioners of Madison county, A. P. Jones, superintendent of highways, shows that Madison county now has more than 70 miles of hard-surface roads, of which more than 62 miles are paved with cement. The report shows 853.47 miles of gravel roads. The cost of upkeep of the county highways for the year was slightly more than $100 a mile.

Indianapolis.—The body of Cortland Van Camp III, nineteen-year-old member of the millionaire family of canned goods manufacturers, was taken from beneath the wreckage of his automobile in Fall creek, near Indianapolis, and police are searching for the bodies of his two girl companions and another youth, members of a party terminated by death. None of Van Camp's three companions has as yet been identified.

Anderson.—A remonstrance against an issue of bonds for paving the Kemp road in Jackson township, Madison county, was filed with the county commissioners and was forwarded to the state tax board, which a year ago disapproved of a bond issue for the same road. A remonstrance against the paving of the Cather road, which connects with the Kemp road, also is being circulated.

Laporte.—Laporte county will furnish the only political excitement in northern Indiana in 1923. Announcement was made by a number of candidates for mayor of Michigan City, the only municipality in Indiana having the city manager form of government. It is the opinion of politicians that return will be made to the old form of city government.

Marion.—At a meeting of the farmers of Washington township the county board of education was commended for its appointment of a county agent. Indorsement was given the proposed tax on gasoline for road improvements, with the provision that such a tax should be returned to the county where it was collected.

Noblesville.—The suit of Robert Herron against Claude D. Torr, sent here from Marion county, was compromised and dismissed, after a jury had been called to try the case. Herron was struck by an automobile of the defendant on Washington street, in Indianapolis, two years ago. He received $500 damages.

Jeffersonville.—Mrs. Ethel Stoner Quinn, who was deputy recorder and later deputy auditor, assumed her duties as deputy in the office of Charles K. Zollman, clerk of the Clark Circuit court. The office virtually is in charge of a bonding company which is on Zollman's bond.

Indianapolis.—The state of Indiana is richer by $110,000 because of the increase by the Standard Oil company of its stock from $140,000,000 to $250,000,000. P. H. Wolfard, assistant secretary of state, collected the huge state fee for the stock increase permission.

Crawfordsville.—Harry Davis of Brown township was chosen president of the Montgomery county farm bureau at the annual election of officers of the bureau. Enos Thomas of Coal Creek township was named vice president and Oscar Swank of Coal Creek township, secretary-treasurer.

Indianapolis.—Jesse E. Eschbach, chief examiner of the state board of accounts, denied rumors that he will resign as soon as he has completed the state budget for presentation to the legislature.

Terre Haute.—A financial campaign for the support of the Terre Haute council of the boy scouts will be conducted February 8 to 14 in connection with the national celebration of scout anniversary week.

Connersville.—For the first time in Fayette county a woman has been selected for grand jury duty. The name of Mrs. Sarah A. Ludwick has been drawn.

Valparaiso.—A coal famine is near in Valparaiso. It is said only one dealer has soft coal and he is portioning that out half a ton to a customer. There is no hard coal.

Hartford City.—Money sufficient to finance the milk diet work in the Hartford City schools has been given by clubs and individuals, G. H. Telle, superintendent of the schools, said.

Huntington.—The sale of Christmas seals by the Tuberculosis society and its helpers probably will reach a total of $1,600 in the county.

Marion.—Pledging their support to the Eighteenth amendment, the Grant County Farmers' Institute promised co-operation with the authorities in the enforcement of law. Other resolutions approved the action of the county board of education in the appointment of a county agent and commended Governor [illegible] for his policy of law enforcement and plan of economy in the state.

Warsaw. — The Warsaw Kiwanis club has [illegible] John A. [illegible] president; V. M. [illegible] vice president, and J. H. [illegible] treasurer.

Evansville.—Attorneys in the suit of Mrs. Margaret Gray Patterson to break the will of Allen Gray, millionaire banker, who died several years ago, have until January 4 to file their final pleadings before Elmer Q. Lockyear of the Vanderburg county probate court at Evansville. The date of the trial will be set at that time. A motion of the defense to require Margaret Gray Patterson, the plaintiff, to state additional facts in her complaint was overruled.

Winchester.—The county meeting of the Knights of Pythias, held here, was attended by representatives from Spartansburg, Ridgeville, Union City and Lynn. The rank of page was conferred on a class of candidates. The following persons were elected to office by the Winchester lodge: Ernest L. Harmon, Grant Clevenger, W. B. Lucas, Paul Bailey, Clarence Wilmore, Kemp Leavell, B. F. Boltz, C. E. Reed, H. A. Smith and C. G. Hiatt.

Brownstown.—The interstate public service commission and the Morgan Packing company of Austin have been made the defendants in a suit for $10,000 damages filed in the Jackson Circuit court at Brownstown by George Rider, who alleges that while employed as driver of a truck for the packing company he was struck by an interurban car, and that he suffered permanent injuries.

English.—The new officers of Crawford lodge No. 470, A. F. & A. M., of English, will be installed January 18. They are: Henry W. Mock, master; O. D. Longest, senior warden; Jesse E. Leasor, junior warden; Charles P. Miller, senior deacon; Glenn Austin, junior deacon; John A. Blevins, secretary; A. H. Flanigan, treasurer; J. B. Jones, tyler, and F. G. Hammond, trustee.

Columbus. — Walter Dipper was elected president of Columbus Post No. 24, American Legion. Other officers are: Otha Larkin, J. W. O'Bryan, Webber Daugherty and Homer Golden, vice commanders; Clarence Covert, adjutant; Francis Hull, chaplain; John Geilker, finance officer, and Walter Kinsel, sergeant-at-arms. The post has 120 members.

Evansville.—Fred Heuke, Republican, who assumed the duties of sheriff of Vanderburg county January 1, has appointed Harry Hornbrook as jailer and Charles Schassmer, Sr., and Gilbert Richter as jail alley guards. A. W. Epperson, Sherman Hamsley and Jesse Jones have been appointed members of the "booze" squad for the county.

South Bend.—A contract for the paving of ten and one-half miles of the Dixie highway, connecting South Bend with Marshall county, has been awarded to the George M. Cross company of Laporte. The contract price is $189,263.96. The paving of this link will remove the only unimproved gap on the Dixie highway from Indianapolis to lower Michigan.

Winchester.—The following officers were elected for the Winchester Kiwanis club: A. L. Bales, president; Dr. O. W. Hinshaw, vice president; Carl McCamish, secretary; O. O. Frase, treasurer, and Mr. Bales, B. E. Hinshaw, W. H. Beeson, William Van Wylick, Albert King, W. L. Brenner and Carl McCamish, directors.

Monticello.—G. I. Christy of Purdue university and Mrs. Charles Sewell of Otterbein were the speakers at the dedication of the Round Grove township school. The building has just been completed. It is one of the best-equipped school buildings in the county.

Seymour.—A number of changes in the form of city government took place January 1, when Seymour entered the group of fourth-class cities. The advance from the fifth to fourth class is the result of the tax appraisement this year, which exceeded $7,500,000.

Gary.—M. B. Mehilovitch, vice president of the People's State bank of Gary, has received word that the St. Sava fourth degree decoration has been awarded him by King Alexander of Serbia for his valiant service in the World war.

Elwood.—The building and equipment of the Daily Press, Democratic morning paper, which suspended publication last September, will be offered for sale by Mark E. Winings, receiver, January 10.

Indianapolis.—John R. Jones reported to the police that his automobile was jacked up while it was parked underneath the viaduct in South Pennsylvania street and the right front wheel taken off and carried away.

Crawfordsville.—Isaiah Ham, age fifty-one, committed suicide at his home here by hanging himself to a rafter of the rear porch. Ill health is given as the cause. A widow survives.

Petersburg.—The trustees of the Christian Science church of Petersburg have bought a tract of ground and will erect a church on the site as soon as sufficient money can be obtained.

Laporte.—Fred A. Hausheer, county auditor, who took office January 1, announced that his first assistant would be John Lahey.

Washington, D. C.—President Harding nominated Phineas O. Small to be postmaster at Laporte.

Laporte.—Two suits for a total of $5,800 damages against H. N. Pendleton, were filed in Circuit court by Della M. Harness and Frank J. Wozniak, who were [illegible] in an automobile accident when [illegible] Wozniak was [illegible] with a car driven by [illegible].

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Egyptian Noah's Ark Race.

One of the curious spectacles witnessed by King Edward when, as prince of Wales, he visited Egypt, was a grand Noah's ark race, open to animals and birds. The starters, who were all driven by their nominators, included an ostrich, a turkey, a pelican, a monkey, a pig, a Cairo dog, and a cat. The contest resulted in the ostrich winning in a canter, while the pig came in second, and the dog third. The pelican made play at a good pace, but, sniffing the smell of water, all visions of renown fled from it, and it bolted out of the course. The cat, too, was cruelly treated, puss going capitally till the monkey jumped on her back and put her winning the race entirely out of the question.

Chicago Daily Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

Announces

A BIG REDUCTION IN SUBSCRIPTION RATES

For the Benefit of Readers Receiving The Tribune By Mail

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, realizing that its phenomenal success is due in a large measure to the fact that for seventy-five years it has numbered among its readers a large proportion of the residents of farms and small cities who receive The Tribune by mail, announces for their benefit a big reduction in subscription rates effective January 15th, 1923.

The reduction ranges from 1/3 to 1/2 below former rates

In 1917, as a war measure, Congress passed a bill providing for four annual raises in Postal Rates for newspaper subscriptions. As The Tribune had, for many years before, sold its paper to out-of-town readers at less than cost, it felt compelled to add a portion of these postage increases to its subscription rates.

For the past three years The Chicago Tribune has been leading the fight to obtain a reduction in second-class postage rates so that it could reduce to pre-war prices its subscription rates to residents of farms and small cities.

Although every one of the other [illegible] taxes established by the war revenue act of 1917 has been reduced, Congress has not seen fit as yet to reduce the tax on second-class postage.

At the present Postal Rates it costs The Tribune from [illegible] a year for Postage alone to send the paper to each subscriber in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin. In many instances this is more than The Tribune's entire subscription price—without considering the cost of the product.

Many of our [illegible] that it [illegible] for a year's subscription to The Chicago Daily Tribune. The Tribune is [illegible].

TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THIS OFFER TEAR OFF COUPON and MAIL AT ONCE!

[illegible]

Therefore, without waiting further for Congress to act, The Tribune announces a reduction in subscription rates ranging from ⅓ to ½. This cut in rates will cost The Tribune approximately $200,000.00 each year, but The Tribune will pay the bill in the interest of its many country readers.

New subscriptions to The Chicago Daily Tribune, starting on and after January 15th, 1923, will be accepted at the following rates:

THE CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE
(By Mail, Six Days a Week)

These Rates Apply Only to Subscriptions in States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin. (Cities, Towns and Rural Routes included.)

Period	Old Rate	New Rate
1 Month	$1.00	$ .50
3 Months	2.50	1.25
6 Months	3.75	2.50
12 Months	7.50	5.00

The Chicago Daily Tribune today enjoys the largest circulation in its history and the largest morning circulation in America—averaging over 530,000 copies daily. It will readily be seen, therefore, that the reduction is not made primarily to secure more circulation.

If you wish to receive The Chicago Daily Tribune—with its many wonderful features—regularly, take advantage of these new, low rates now. Mail subscription coupon below. Note that $2.50 will now bring you The Chicago Daily Tribune by mail for six months, or $5.00 for a whole year.

For the benefit of its country readers The Tribune will continue its fight for fairer postage rates.

WISDOM?

Blessed are they into whose dust God never molded the wanderlust. For the sweat of the brow of the men who roam, will turn to gold for the stay at home. And he who goes where the long trail calls will spend his life in overalls. But there are times, I will admit, when all my chores I long to quit and cast aside my heavy load and join the hobo on the road.

"Can't dogs find their way home from a long distance?" asks a citizen. It's according to the dog. If it's one you want to get rid of, he can find his way back home from Alaska. If it's a good one, he's apt to get lost if he goes around the corner.

Oh, Junius, the Office Cat, has come to town to stay,
An' talk about the good folks, and all.
the things they say,
An' look into the scandals and help to spread them too,
An' make folks feel quite awful, just like all old cats do.
So, if you have a skeleton within your

Just take it out and bury it beneath a castiron lid.
For Junius is sneakin' and a pokin'

And the Office Cat will get you
Ef you

An' if you take your sweetheart out an' hug her in the park,
An' if you have a birthday an' then keep it in the dark,
You'd better be real careful, for I

That the Office Cat will get you

FOR BEST RESULTS IN PRODUCING EGGS HENS NEED MUCH EXERCISE

Chickens on Range at Beltsville Government Farm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good results in egg production cannot be obtained when the flock is confined during the entire year, according to tests that have been made by the United States Department of Agriculture. The department has kept a pen of 50 Rhode Island Red pullets and one of 50 White Leghorn pullets confined in poultry houses throughout the year, giving them a good variety of feed, including sprouted oats and alfalfa meal, the latter being used in the mash. These trials have extended over three years and the result has always been the same—lower egg production and excessive mortality.

The Leghorns stood the confinement much better than the Rhode Island Reds, but even in this case the production was too low to be profitable. In the different years the pens averaged from 98 to 108 eggs per hen, while the other hens on the farm, given good yards or free range, produced from 125 to 160 eggs.

Freedom for Hens.

The hens that were confined to the house produced well during the winter months, but in the spring the yield was only fair and during the summer production almost ceased. Many poultrymen keep hens used for egg production confined during the winter months, and this practice is satisfactory if the hens are not used for breeding. Hens kept as breeding stock should be given as much freedom as possible, and it is the policy of the department to let their hens cut every day regardless of the weather.

In these flocks that were kept penned up during the entire year there was a death rate of almost 50 per cent in the case of the Rhode Island Reds, and 25 per cent in the Leghorn flock. Most of this loss occurred during the summer and fall months. Normal mortality in good-sized flocks kept in yards or given free range averages about 10 per cent, according to the department's experience. The mortality is usually higher with general-purpose breeds than with the Leghorns.

Yard Space for Hens.

There is no definite amount of yard space that must be supplied for hens, but the larger the yard the better. More hens can be kept on a certain space on light, sandy soil than on heavy soil because the light soil is more easily cleansed by rain and sunshine. Where only small space is available it is advisable to use the double-yard system so that one yard can be used in growing a crop, while the other is used for the poultry. Alternating the use of these two yards for the hens keeps the soil in good condition and does not endanger the health of the hens.

COMMODITY COUNCIL PLAN GAINING FAVOR

New Way of Handling Certain Big Agricultural Problems.

Specialists in Culture of Crops, in Soils, Pests, Grading and Marketing Each Contribute to Final Recommendations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The Commodity council plan is the name given to a new way of handling certain of the big agricultural problems by the United States Department of Agriculture. In the past different phases of a crop situation, for instance, have been handled separately by the various bureaus and offices. The new plan which recently has been put into operation brings all the various persons interested in the problem together into a council where each may present his views and where a definite inclusive policy may be decided upon.

Already councils have been called to discuss the cotton and potato situations and recommendations have been made for action that would be beneficial in view of present conditions. Department men who are specialists in the culture of the crops, in soils, diseases, pests, grading and marketing each contribute to the final recommendations. From time to time other commodity councils will be called to take up problems that are toubling the producers of various other crops and live stock.

As a result of the Potato council it is expected that the usual waste and loss resulting when a very large crop is raised may be greatly reduced. The per capita consumption of potatoes in the United States is usually about 3.2 bushels, but this year enough potatoes have been produced to supply each person with about four bushels. Because of this situation, which was discouraging to potato raisers, the department, through this council, made recommendations, which were sent out to the principal potato producing states. The council recommended that farmers be advised to carefully grade their crops and ship only the best, suggesting that if all of the crop, including culls, were shipped, food would rot or spoil in the central market or in transit, markets would be glutted and the price forced down to a ruinous level. Such marketing would result in much waste all along the line from the field to the market. The council also made recommendations on the utilization of the poorer potatoes and culls kept on the farm, such as storing for future marketing, feeding to live stock and, in certain localities, selling to starch and flour factories. It was also the advice of the Potato council that fields be picked clean of culls and diseased tubers so as to protect succeeding crops from disease.

Another group of department men was called together by the assistant secretary to take up the problems of [illegible] farmers. These men are [illegible] the [illegible] of what the [illegible] policy shall be for the [illegible] in making recommendations [illegible] the [illegible], the development of [illegible] communities, the growing of a diversity of [illegible]

A plan similar to the community-council plan was used recently when a group of men from various bureaus was brought together to consider the question of the use of peat as a soil improver or fertilizer. As a result of all the information brought together and discussed from various angles the department decided to make a public statement to the effect that peat has a very low fertilizing value, contrary to the claims frequently made by those wishing to sell it for fertilizer.

It is thought that the council plan will result in getting out prompt recommendations in emergencies and farmers and others will be able to get a concise view of the department's stand and the reasons for making recommendations.

POTATOES WITH BLACKHEART

Causes of Development of Dark Brown Areas Are Overheating and Insufficient Air.

Overheating and insufficient ventilation are often the causes of the development of dark brown or black areas in the center of potatoes, commonly known as blackheart. Even potatoes stored in pits out of doors frequently develop blackheart because of lack of ventilation. Potatoes shipped long distances in cold weather may also be affected if a car becomes overheated. University Farm potato men say this disease and others peculiar to the storage season can be avoided by handling and storing the tubers under proper conditions. Ask the Office of Publications, University Farm, St. Paul, for pamphlets on storing.

Hints for Pruning

1. Proper pruning gives more and better fruit.
2. It costs less to spray and pick a well pruned tree.
3. All varieties are not pruned alike.
4. Heavy pruning tends to increase wood growth, and may be used to rejuvenate a run-down tree.
5. Light pruning tends to increase fruit production.
6. The growing habit of a tree varies with age.
7. Watersprouts are usually the result of heavy pruning. Those sprouts near the base of the scaffold limbs may be tipped back and caused to produce fruit.
8. A limb grows more from the tip buds than from the lateral buds.
9. Fruit may be thinned by pruning.
10. Pruning wounds need to be painted in Quebec.
11. Keep the top of tree somewhat open. Light helps to make extra fancy fruit.
12. If the buds on your peach trees have been killed and the fruiting wood is in the upper third of the top "dehorn" your trees back heavily to limbs one inch in [illegible]
13. Learn the principles of pruning, the details will vary with the tree.
14. Common sense and good judgment will help a great deal.

GOOD ROADS

UNLOADING SAND AND GRAVEL

Ingenious California Contractor Invents Labor-Saving Device for Handling Material.

In sections of the country where the supply of sand and crushed stone or gravel for concrete road construction must be shipped by rail, the method of unloading from open-top cars becomes an important item to the contractor.

In the early days of concrete road construction, these materials were usually unloaded by hand. A number of laborers would attack the car with shovels, and so long as wages were low, the expense of this method was not prohibitive. With the advent of motor trucks for hauling concrete materials, the cost of the delay at the car began to be felt.

Of course, the most economical method for handling such materials in large quantities is by means of a derrick or crane equipped with a clam shell bucket. However, it is only where large operations are in prospect that equipment of this kind can be utilized.

The photograph shows how an ingenious contractor in California solved this particular problem. A pit alongside the track was excavated into which the trucks were driven. The bottom of the pit was low enough so that the top of the truck was just about even with the bottom of the gondola car.

Between the pit and the side track he erected a simple gantry crane, which was steadied by guy ropes. The crane was pivoted at the bottom of the legs so that it could swing away from the track when an empty car was being taken away and a full one spotted. The gantry crane supports a shallow hopper, one edge of which hangs on the side of the car and the other is suspended by ropes leading to the top of the crane, and at the outer and lower edge is a tail gate which permits the bin to be dumped into the waiting truck below.

This bin is filled by means of an ordinary slip scraper which operates inside the car. A small gasoline hoisting engine anchored at one side of the track operates a pull line through a pulley in the top of the crane, and thence to the bale of the slip scraper.

Unloading Device in Operation.

In this way two men inside the car can fill the bin over the edge of the car very quickly and with little effort. The filling of this bin is done while an empty truck is being driven into the pit, so that with the arrival of an empty truck there is always a loading waiting for it.

TYPES OF ROAD MATERIALS

There Has Been Great Change in Highways Suitable for All Traffic Conditions.

In the last ten years there has been a great change in the type of road suitable for traffic conditions on main traveled highways, according to engineers of the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. In 1910 plain and surface-treated macadam were considered among the highest types of paving for country roads and a large percentage of the mileage was of the two types. There was a small mileage of brick and concrete and a somewhat greater mileage of bituminous macadam, but the plain and surface-treated macadam were the predominant types of hard-surfaced roads. How great the change has been is shown by figures recently issued by the bureau. On federal-aid roads completed between 1916 and 1920 only 2.9 per cent of the total area paved was plain and surface-treated macadam. The types that formerly constituted such a small part of the mileage were as follows: Bituminous macadam, 3.1 per cent; bituminous concrete, 6.8 per cent; cement concrete, 19.8 per cent. and brick, 4.1 per cent.

Sunday School Lesson

LESSON FOR JANUARY 14

JESUS TEACHING HUMILITY

LESSON TEXT—Luke 14:4-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.—I Peter 5:5.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—John 13:1-17; Phil. 2:5-11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of a Great Dinner.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Teaching Courtesy.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spirit of Christian Service.

I. Jesus Dines With a Pharisee (v. 1). Jesus entered freely into the common social customs of the day. We see Him at a wedding, a dinner party, in the home of sickness, and at a funeral. He was truly a man among men. He was unlike John the Baptist in this respect. The Christian's influence is best when mingling with his fellowmen in all right relations and positions in life, even though selfish and evil-minded persons are found among them. This does not mean that he should be a partaker of their evil deeds. Jesus in thus moving in all circles of human society showed the divine sympathy. While Jesus was in society he was not of it. So should the Christian be. Jesus was in a company outwardly courteous but inwardly hostile. Doubtless the motive of the invitation was to find an occasion against Him. This is implied in the statement "they watched Him."

II. Jesus Healing a Dropsical Man (vv. 2-6).

1. Why This Man Was Present (v.2). There is no way of absolutely determining it, but likely it was part of a plot of the Pharisees to trap Jesus by getting Him to violate the Sabbath rules.

2. Jesus' Question (v. 3). Jesus' question was an answer to the thoughts of the lawyers and Pharisees who were watching Him, for they had not spoken. Before healing this man He submitted the case to their judgment. They were free on the Sabbath day to hold a feast where their selfish pride and vanity could be displayed, but they were horrified that a fellow-man should be healed on the Sabbath. They were silent because their consciences made them ashamed of their heartlessness.

3. Healing the Man (v. 4). While they were in a state of embarrassment Jesus healed the man and let him go.

4. Jesus Rebuked Them (vv. 5, 6). He laid bare their hypocrisy by showing them that their willingness to show mercy to a beast on the Sabbath should induce them to regard as not sinful to relieve a human being of distress on the Sabbath. They were again silent, for they perceived their inconsistency and inhumanity.

III. Jesus Rebukes Selfish Ambition (vv. 7-10).

1. The Occasion (v. 7). He observed that the guests while taking their places at the table chose the best seats for themselves. This is still true of men and women. In the railway cars, hotels, street cars, etc., they scramble for the best places. In the homes even members of the same family will try to get the best food, etc.

2. Instruction Given (vv. 8-11). When bidden to a feast, take the lowest place lest you suffer the humiliation of being asked to take a lower seat. This is more than a lesson on courtesy or table manners; it is a severe rebuke of that selfishness which fills the human heart, causing it to seek to be ministered to instead of ministering to others. Unselfishness will express itself in humbly taking the lowest place, esteeming others better than ourselves. The fundamental principle of the philosophy governing the moral world, Jesus declares to be: "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

IV. The True Motive in Deeds of Charity (vv. 12-14).

Jesus takes advantage of this social occasion to teach a great principle. The Jews, like many of the rich today, made social dinner occasions for display. They invited only those whose wealth would enable them to recompense them by inviting them in return. Jesus took note of the selfishness thus displayed and set forth to them the right principle, namely, that they should extend their hospitality to the poor and afflicted. All charitable deeds should be done with unselfish motives. Jesus assured them that compensation would be made at the resurrection of the just. This does not mean that friends and neighbors of certain rank should never exchange pleasant hospitalities. Wealth should be used to confer blessings upon the poor and needy instead of ministering to the pride and vanity of the possessor.

THE STRANGE BOY

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

THEY had just returned from their work in the Manual and were considering larger matters concerning their coming hike. They were Twelve, Thirteen and Fourteen, and full of the joy that washes into life with the first full tide of youth. At the Manual they had been making things with their hands in wood and iron and stone. Creation seemed good to them. And they talked, making their tomorrow a kind of exalted yesterday, which is the way of youth. An old party of forty-five, sitting near them reading a musty book that had been off the list of best sellers for six long months, closed the book over his finger to mark the place while he listened to the chatter of the boys.

There was talk of a day's walk in the country; of a raft to be made at the river under the scout-master's direction; of fishing tackle to be had at the town's store; where the best rods might be bought; what minnows were worth. Some consideration was given to the various grades of khaki for scouting suits.

They were good scouts of the first and second classes, and much of their chatter was of camp and field.

The boys were lying on a lawn beneath the stone veranda railing whereon his old feet rested. From time to time the youngsters looked up as automobiles went whizzing by and in monosyllables checked off the makers and perhaps the owners of the machines; but the checking did not stay their talk of the glorious tomorrows, silvered and gilded with yesterdays.

"Canned!" sighed the old party. "Canned boys!" he repeated.

The boys looked up and, seeing the feet disappear from the railing, Thirteen rose quickly and said as he appeared:

"Yes, sir. What was it, Father? Did you speak?"

The old party shook his head, and the boys stretched out again on the blue grass. As he opened his book and fumbled for his place, over the page top he saw, coming round the house from the rear, a thin, freckled, barefooted youth, with long trousers rolled up halfway to his knees, showing the flowered calico lining. Suspenders striped the shoulders of the boy's coarse-checked blue-and-white cotton shirt. Twisted into his right suspender was a Y-shaped stick, wound with rubber, whereon a diamond-shaped leather piece dangled from two strings.

"If the marshal sees that he'll arrest you!" said the man; and as the strange boy grinned the old party asked: "Where have you been so long?"

The other boys did not seem to notice the strange boy, who grumbled as he sat down beside them:

"Doing my chores. Old Sooky's calf like to never got her supper out of this bucket. And old Sooky tried to hold up on me. I think they ought to make somebody brush the flies off while I milk. I bet old Sooky hit me in the eye a dozen times with her tail. Say, they's a mangerful of kittens in the south stall."

The other boys looked up when the old party shifted his feet and groaned:

"Oh! These are not real boys—they're canned boys! All the other industries have left the home for the cannery—why not boy-making? Here, boys." The old party lifted his voice sharply.

"Yes, sir!" cried Fourteen, rising agilely and saluting.

"Which one of you knows what wood makes the best arrows? Which one of you ever seasoned a piece of hickory behind the stove over the wood box all winter for your bow? Do you know what bodark is?"

"Yes, sir," replied Thirteen. "It is a corruption of the French words bois d'arc, meaning wood of the arch, and is probably an Indian translation of the French habitant's word describing the tough, springy wood of the Osage orange, or common hedge plant."

The strange boy grinned and the old party answered:

"Oh, grand! Now then, Bud, you tell them about the bodark."

The boys sat down, and the old party took the words from the strange boy's mouth and went on:

"Bodark is a hard brown wood and makes the best bow you ever saw—better than hickory even. Few boys that I know ever had a bodark bow, though all of them knew that the Indians prized bodark highly.

"Say, boys"—the man addressed himself to the youths whose faces beamed cherubically over the rail—"suppose you could have Babe Ruth and Douglas Fairbanks, and the greatest scoutmaster in the world, and the greatest football player, all rolled into one right here in the yard—who would wait in the barn while you—"

"What barn?" cut in precise Thirteen.

"Well, the garage, then"—the man corrected himself and hurried on—"when you went into the house and stole fried cakes for him, and—"

"Stole what?" cut in Twelve.

"Stole fried cakes—doughnuts. Don't you boys eat doughnuts?"

"Oh," humbly returned the old man, drawing his breath. "I forgot you boys are highly sanitary—absolutely pure! You probably never ate sheep sorrel, nor—"

"Nor sucked a grapevine in spring—nor ate rosebuds?"

"Bud," smiled the old party, looking into the blue eyes of the strange boy with fond reminiscence which is the keenest joy of maturity, "do you remember we used to go trailing through the woods, browsing off the young fresh twigs like gods in the elder days?"

"Perhaps we were gods," replied the strange boy.

The old party gazed mutely for a moment across the green carpet of the lawn.

"Yes," he answered softly; "perhaps we were—perhaps we were!"

"Perhaps we were what?" insisted Fourteen. "What are you talking about, Father?"

"Can you make a whistle from a hickory sapling?" replied the old party, ignoring the question. "Can you make a horn from the stem of a pumpkin leaf? Did you ever belong to a band that went trailing out, single file and naked, through a cornfield, and down through the horse-weeds of the tall timber, to a swimming hole."

"Did you have feet like goats, Father?" suggested Twelve timidly.

"Yes, hard, callous, cut, bruised, sore, brown, ugly and adventuring were our feet," answered the old party. "And those were the pipes of Pan—those pumpkin-vine horns, those hickory whistles. Bud! Bud, do you remember that!"

The strange boy's face beamed with delight, and Thirteen cut in:

"How very interesting!" and then asked: "What is a whatnot, Father?"

The old man looked his mild scorn at the question, but only the strange boy saw it, and he chuckled:

"They don't understand! They were never as we were. They are of the higher order."

"I think," mused the man, "when the barn went the half gods went, and these gods appeared. The barn was the temple of earlier gods—they who were neither brutes nor gods, but half of each. The barn was our real abiding place. Why, Bud, when the old barn went and the garage came, I saw each timber go as one bids good-by to an old friend.

"The very rafters were sacred! There our trapeze swung; there the rings dangled on which we turned buzz-wheels; there was our springboard before the haypile in the manger; there we gave our shows; there we played our first casino and seven-up, and there we learned in whispers the great mysteries of life. The barn was the boy's Eden. He entered it in the sweet innocence of childhood and played ghost there and talked with voices there, and held communion with the gods; and when he left it—when the barn no longer held him—its creaking doors banged on him, and he walked past the flaming sword into life, filled with the knowledge of good and evil! What will boys do when there are no more barns?"

"Come on!" said Fourteen, taking his chin from the stone railing. "Father is tired."

The three sprawled on the close-cropped sward—on back or belly as it pleased each; and the talk droned from carburetors and a cynical criticism of the talking movies to the proper weight of tennis rackets, then into the local boy problems in wireless, and on into the mysteries of the new pulmotor over at the engine house of the fire department. But on the veranda the old party and the strange boy were holding forth on the splendors and glories of the Golden Age.

"And yet," returned the strange boy, "what they have—all this large leisure to consider the universe, all these store things, all this machine-made pleasure and formal joy—was what I hoped for, what I longed for most eagerly. They are as I would have had the angels in my heaven. They are the visions I saw of good boys made perfect."

"And you," repeated the old party gently, "you, Bud—you are the dreams I dream!"

"I know," said the strange boy. "I should not be so wise for my age; but living with you has kind of wised me beyond my years. So I'll venture to guess that most of our heavens are behind us—when we pass forty-five."

"You're a nuisance, boy!" laughed the old party. "Some day I'm going to discharge you—fire you—throw you out—get rid of you! I wouldn't keep you round but for one thing, and—"

"And that is—"

"And that is because if it wasn't for you I'd die! You are the cup-bearer who brings me the oil of gladness."

"Ah, but you're a rascal, Bud! You're a rascal; a wool-dyed villain! How slow you work before Sunday school! How long you lie behind the blackberry bushes in the back garden in the shade when your hoeing takes you past this shelter! Ah, Bud, only one old man in all the world ever knew you and loved you—just one old man!"

The strange boy turned away and pretended to be interested in what the youths were saying on the grass below.

"Bud, I've been pretty good to you—haven't I—since you came back, twenty-five years ago?"

"Was it that long ago? Why, I thought it was only—"

"Twenty-five years, Bud! I didn't miss you so much for half a dozen years; and then when you did come back I rather—"

"Yes, you've spoiled me probably, so far as that goes," the strange boy broke in. "Made a pet of me—and a fool, more or less."

"But, Bud, answer me this," said the old party quickly. "What became of you in those years—those beautiful years of youth? Where did you go and why did you go?"

The strange boy stood still and looked at the ground.

"Do you want to know, honest—honest?" asked the strange boy, drumming his fingers on the cool stone.

"Honest to God, Bud!"

"Won't you ever tell—her?"

"Who?" He followed the strange boy's eyes toward the house, and the old party went on with his oath: "Honest to God, Bud! Hope to die! Hope to be any name you call me—cross my heart, and hope to drop dead!"

"Well—! Aw, I'm goin' to do it!"

"Ah, yes! Come on! Why did you leave me so suddenly, and only come back in my dreams? Come on, Bud! Tell a feller something, Bud!"

The boy looked at the open door of the house. He stepped close to the old party.

"Aw—well, it's nothin' much—only she—her in there—that used to live across the alley. Well, you know just as well as I. Aw, I ain't a-goin' to tell!"

The old party looked gently into the strange boy's red, shame-colored face. Tears streaked through the freckles, but he tried to smile.

"Go on, Bud; I'll remember."

"Well, you remember that night she was standing by the fence that June evening when we came home from Pilliken's party? Well, doggone it, and killed me—killed me as dead as a nit, I tell you! She did—she is in the house—she who has been in the house all these years—she killed me, I tell you!"

"How? Why, how, Bud?" exclaimed the old party under his breath, also furtively keeping his eye on the door.

"With that—that—! Oh, you know—with that first awful kiss!"

"Oh—I see!" replied the man. "And so she—"

"Yes," interrupted the strange boy. "She turned me into a dream and you into a man—and we parted."

As the book fell to the floor the old party cried:

"Son! Son, how about that music? Isn't it time for your practicing?"

"Just a minute, daddy!" called back Fourteen. "I'm inventing a new kind of airship, with an armor-plate bottom, for war!" And the young man saw visions.

The old party smiled sadly and sighed as he saw the strange boy dragging himself slowly round the corner to finish his evening chores, limping heavily as he went, and whispered:

"And the old men dream dreams!"

LOS ANGELES MAN SAYS IT NEVER FAILS

"Tanlac is my stand-by, and I wouldn't think of being without it. It has set me on my feet more than once when I had such bad spells of stomach trouble. I thought I couldn't get well." This emphatic statement was made recently by W. C. Wallace, 320 N. Normandy Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

"An acid stomach and indigestion caused me indescribable suffering for more than four years," he said. "Awful pains would strike me soon after eating, and I would be almost doubled up in agony. Often I had to take to my bed, and I would lose much weight with every spell. I was told I had ulcers, enlarged stomach and other ailments, but all my efforts to get relief failed. I kept getting worse, and figured I would have to get something to help me or I couldn't keep going much longer.

"I read in the papers where Tanlac was helping others with stomach troubles, so I began taking it. It never failed to straighten me out, and I gained back my lost weight, too. I am more grateful than I can say for the good this medicine has done me, and I do not hesitate to give it my fullest recommendation."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Mrs. Giles' husband had been very ill. For days he had been gradually getting worse, but at last there came a change for the better.

When the doctor called and had a look at his patient, he announced:

"He is convalescent."

On hearing this, Mrs. Giles regarded the physician suspiciously; and her suspicion increased when he prepared to go without further comment.

"Well, doctor," said Mrs. Giles, "what are you going to do about it?"

"Do?" was the answer. "There ain't nothing to be done."

"Well, you are a doctor, ain't you?" retorted the enraged lady. "Ain't you got no med'cine for this e're convalescence?"

BONEHEAD PLAY OF NOAH'S

Asleep at the Switch When He Had Opportunity to Benefit the Human Race.

Boneheads have been pulled since the dawn of light. The idea that any particular age sees them running wild is a mistake. The first famous bonehead that history records was pulled by no less a personage than old Noah.

Noah simply couldn't see things right; he had no vision and, therefore, missed the "Golden Chance." He had 40 long nights in which to get up and put the two mosquitoes in the world out of business. He could have done it with one smash of his fly swatter. But Noah snored away at the switch and in time the dove appeared with the olive branch and the next day the people walked off the ark onto land—and the mosquitoes went with them.

There are many other famous boneheads that might be here recorded, but none of them equals old Noah's as a work of art, so the committee appointed for the purpose has decided unanimously to place his name in the hall of fame.—Bert Walker in the Topeka Capital.

Railroad Robberies.

French railroads in the past three years have paid a total of 598,500,000 francs indemnity for merchandise stolen in stations and transit, lost, or deteriorated, it was announced recently. All but a few millions of this sum which is considerably greater than the budget voted for France's army this year—covered the work of railroad robbers. No wonder that the French passed legislation increasing greatly the penalties of this type of theft and providing in extreme cases the penalty of hard labor for life.

PUSSY HAD TO COME FIRST

Good Reason Why Impecunious Pair Couldn't Afford to Steal Cat's Provisions.

A certain artist and his wife—who is an artist, too—recall an incident of their early studio days. A friend leaving the city for a few weeks left in their care a large, healthy and hungry looking cat with injunctions to give it good care. The feline's owner left with them sufficient funds to keep the cat in meat.

The artistic pair, not having attained their present success, were the reverse of affluent at the time.

"There we were, not eating regularly ourselves," said the husband the other evening as he consumed the last of a large pork chop, "and we seldom had meat. But we had to sit around and watch the cat eat good liver."

"Why didn't you steal the cat's liver sometimes?" he was asked.

"We wanted to," he answered, "but the animal wasn't fat and we were afraid its ribs would show when its mistress got back."

High School Notes

GENERAL:

The Red Cross nurses have finished their preliminary examination of the grade pupils. They are expecting to begin the medical examination next Sunday. These preliminary examinations have shown serious defects in throat conditions, vision and hearing. In some cases these defects can not be cared for by the parents, and it would be a worthy cause for some local organization to enlist in. In Auburn, Garrett and Ashley organizations of various kinds, are volunteering funds and assistance to the Red Cross in its work among the school children.

Miss Wanda Lee Fast is filling the vacancy made by Miss Nujen. Miss Nujen is now in Angola continuing her college work.

The examinations of last week were not entirely satisfactory. It would be well for the parents to carefully examine the grades of their children. Perhaps a little cooperation between teacher and parents might bring better results.

Books needed for library:

A Message to Garcia	Hubbard
The Crisis	Churchill
The Song of the Cardinal	Porter
The Luck of Roaring Camp	Harte

The Scarlet Letter	Hawthorne

FRESHMEN:

Although some carry marks of the New Year Eve accident, the Freshmen are again in school. The accident is past but not forgotten, especially by a few.

The examination grades were not very encouraging to some.

For some reason, unknown to us, the teachers surprised us this morning by requesting that several of us pack our belongings and move to another desk. We don't think that Frank Shull is very well pleased with his new situation.

No Civics Monday. What a grand and glorious feeling.

SOPHOMORE:

We all feel somewhat relieved since we have received the results from our Latin examination.

The first classic to be studied this semester is Eliot's "Silas Marner." We are sure that we shall enjoy it.

The school is planning a miscellaneous musical program to which the Sophomores are giving their undivided attention.

Juniors consider themselves fortunate in being offered a course in book-keeping and business arithmetic. Although this will necessitate our carrying five subjects, all seem eager to grasp the opportunity.

The Juniors have now completed their course in Plain Geometry. Solid Geometry is offered for the second semester, but only three or four of the pupils are expecting to take it.

R. J.

SENIOR:

The Seniors have the opportunity to take Solid Geometry during the last semester. It doesn't seem to be a very popular course judging from the small number who have decided to take it, but the few of us who have chosen the course, expect it to be a very interesting class.

We expect to start our new schedule, which is a radical change from the old one, in a very few days.

NEWVILLE

Dewey Gole is in the south taking treatment for tuberculosis.

Mrs. Belle Grom and daughter, and Wm. Hensinger and wife returned to Newville last week.

Elmer McDonald of Butler was the guest of the John Miller family Friday night and Saturday.

Rev. P. A. Hubbart is holding a protracted meeting at Mt. Pleasant.

Romeo Cole and family of Oregon are here staying with his father Mack Cole, on the farm.

Mrs. Ethel McCollough was here a part of last week helping to care for her mother, Mrs. Rhoads remains quite poorly.

Mrs. Ophelia Headley went to Edgerton last week to keep house for the Rev. W. D. Denham and family.

The Loyal Sons and Daughters of the Christian Church will hold their class meeting with Bryon Miller on Friday of this week.

The W. C. T. U. will meet Feb. 6 in the afternoon with Mrs. John Miller. A good crowd is desired at this meeting. The Hostess will give a recitation of her own writing at this meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. John Miller and little granddaughter, spent Sunday afternoon at the home of Leroy Kinney family, getting acquainted with the new grandson, little Eugene Miller.

Young Peoples Conference

In an effort to organize the young people's division of the Sunday School work of Concord township under the latest state and county standards, young people between the ages of 14 and 24 met in an initial conference at the High School building last Saturday afternoon.

The county officials, Miss Dora Carnahan of Jackson Center, superintendent; Harcourt Miser, president, and Miss Alice Tustison, vice president, were present and had charg eof the meeting. Miss Carnahan gave an instructive address on the organization of the Young People's division, and Rev. S. D. Steffey, pastor of the local Lutheran church, also gave a talk encouraging young people in this work. The attendance in the afternoon was fair. A fine co-operative spirit was shown throughout the meeting. The business session was postponed to the evening except that the nominating committee was appointed to elect officers.

In the evening they met again at 7:30 o'clock with a emuch larger crowd, twenty-nine in number, including Rev. Havens and F. B. Leighty. The county president presided. After a song service led by Miss Dorothy Scholes, Rev. C. H. Havens, pastor of the M. P. Church, gave a splendid address on the opportunity and calling of young people.

The nominating committee then removed to another room to elect officers. While it was out in session Rev. Havens led in a song service. The committee made its reports as follows:

President, W. S. Quance.

Vice-President, Dorothy Scholes.

Secretary, Mary Armstrong.

The remainder of the meeting was conducted in an informal way. Everyone gathered around the piano and practiced certain serenade songs which were later used on the streets down town. Then all joined hands in a circle and sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Rev. Havens dismissed with a prayer.

The organization appreciates the use of the high school building for its meeting place.

Former St. Joe Teacher Dead

Joseph P. Bonnell, 76 years old, for 45 years a teacher in Fort Wayne public schools, died Sunday in California, according to word received by relatives. The body will arrive in Fort Wayne today (Thursday.)

Mr. Bonnell was prominently connected with the public schools system of Fort Wayne, having taught at the Jefferson and Adams schools and was later made principal at the Rudisill school. Because of ill-health he retired about seven years ago and went on the teachers' pension list.

About a year ago he was forced to move to California on account of his health.

Mr. Bonnell will be remembered by many St. Joe people, having taught here in our school about twenty-five years ago, who will be made sad to hear of his death.

Resolutions Of Respect

Whereas—It has pleased the Almighty God to remove from our midst and call to her eternal reward, Sister Etha Jackson, and Therefore, Be it Resolved, That in the death of Sister Jackson, Asales Temple No. 152 has lost a valued member, this community a good citizen and her family a devoted daughter, wife and mother.

Therefore, Be it Resolved, that we be urged to a more faithful discharge of our duties in exemplification of her virtues.

Be it Further Resolved, as a mark of respect and esteem to our deceased sister, that our Charter be draped for thirty days, that these resolutions be spread on record in the minutes of our Temple, that a copy be sent to the St. Joe News for publication and a copy sent to the bereaved family, to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

Whereas, God in his all wise Providence has seen fit to remove from our midst the soul of our deceased sister, Elsie F. Bleeks.

Resolved, that we, the members of the Azalea Temple No. 152, extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and commend them to God, who is the true source of comfort and consolation.

Resolved, that we as a temple deeply feel our loss but realize our loss is her eternal gain..

Resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our beloved sister, and a copy be recorded on the minutes of the minutes of the temple, also to the St. Joe News for publication.

Sweetly sleep, O Sister dear,
Ever to our hearts so near
Angels waft thee gently o'er

SERVICE SAFETY

The Safest Way Is To Carry Less Money

Receipts are awkward things to keep, aren't they?

They vary in size from theatre ticket to letter-head size. Even Edison, genius as he is, could not invent a file that would ever keep them in shape. But who wants to keep them anyway?

Why don't you pay by check? Then you could have all your receipts the same size. Furthermore you can't pay a bill that way without getting a receipt.

Every paid and cancelled check returned by us or on file in this bank is a receipt for money paid.

FAVOR CO-OPERATIVE MARKET DEPARTMENTS

Assistance of National Government Agencies Sought in Handling Dairy Products.

The following resolution asking for assistance from national government agencies in stimulating the co-operative marketing movement and for the establishment of co-operative marketing departments in educational institutions has been sent to H. C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, by Secretary E. B. Heaton, for the Farmers' Dairy Marketing Committee of Eleven:

"There is a great need of more orderly and more economic methods of marketing dairy products.

"On account of the perishability of dairy products and the great importance of high quality, the need of improved marketing through co-operation is of especial importance in the dairy industry.

"There is a great need for men trained and qualified to lead this improved and more economic method of dairy marketing.

"Our various educational institutions are now teaching and giving valuable aid in such subjects as financing, banking, commerce and different phases of production.

"Therefore, the national Committee of Eleven urgently asks that our various educational institutions, especially our agricultural colleges, establish co-operative marketing departments managed by capable men; extend their investigational work on economic marketing and distribution of food products; and institute college courses in co-operative marketing.

"We also ask that the various agencies of our national government assist in the co-operative marketing movement with a view of obtaining better quality of product, reducing the price to the consumer and enabling the farmers to secure a larger portion of the consumer's dollar."

TO CENTER ENERGIES ON MARKET REFORMS

Farm Bureau Will Set in Operation New Co-Operative Department Early in Year.

The entire farm bureau organization will center its energies in 1923 on market reforms. A new co-operative marketing department which will be set in operation early in the year will dominate the year's program. All of the officers and all of the employees of the American Farm Bureau Federation have been instructed to center their entire year's work on co-operative marketing. The instructions which will be the basis of the farm bureau's program for 1923 are embodied in the following resolution, passed at the fourth annual meeting of the federation.

Resolved:

1. That we urge further progress toward proper marketing of farm products as co-ordinate with economic production in equalizing the present handicap of the American farmers.

2. That the American Farm Bureau Federation shall continue to give outstanding attention to the marketing problem and continue the policy of strengthening and encouraging co-operative commodity marketing organizations.

3. That the American Farm Bureau Federation maintain a division of co-operative marketing, to be managed and directed by capable and experienced co-operative marketing specialists.

4. That this division shall in every possible way stimulate and promote the co-operative marketing movement in the United States and shall plan and carry out an extensive national educational compaign for co-operative marketing of farm products.

5. That the American Farm Bureau Federation, acting through this division, shall formulate the fundamental principles of true comomdity co-operation as exemplified in the history and experience of successful farmers' co-operatives and give the same wide circulation.

6. That this division shall tender its services as counselor and advisor to state and district organizations and agencies on questions relating to type and plans of organization, campaign methods, problems of operation and other related subjects.

7. That this division shall endeavor to unify or co-ordinate all organizations, agencies and interests in behalf of a comprehensive and united program of co-operative marketing in the United States.

8. That the Farm Bureau Federation, national, state and county, should be active in educating producers of farm and live stock products to the advantages offered by the co-operative marketing agencies that have been and shall be established, stressing the fact that the success of these agencies depends primarily upon the loyalty and patronage of the producers themselves.

MEASURE HITS PRIMARY LAW

Plans Made for Rush of Bills Through Both Branches of Assembly.

SECRET COMMITTEE WORK?

Two Senate Measures Affect Utilities—Stipulate the Basis for Rate Making and Bond Issues—Democrats Active in Senate.

Indianapolis. — Lawrence Lyons, chairman of the Republican state committee, gave the word for the simultaneous introduction of the bills in the senate and the house of the general assembly providing for the repeal of the state-wide primary law. The bills, which had been approved by the Republican state committee, were introduced by Senator Will K. Penrod of Loogootee and Representative William C. Pulse of Greensburg.

Everything evidently is prepared to rush one bill through as quickly as possible. Both bills were referred to the committees on elections and public hearings, which were held on similar bills two years ago, are not being planned. Instead secret committee meetings will be held.

Democrats Start Action.

Efforts of the Democrats, led by Senator Joseph Cravens of Madison, to get a resolution passed asking that the finances of the state of Indiana be made known through reports from the auditor of state and state board of finance before any appropriation bills are introduced, and the introduction of 15 bills, featured a meeting of the senate.

The resolution introduced by Senator Cravens marked the first noticeable activity of the minority members to show party strength. The resolution was seconded by Andrew E. Durham of Greencastle. After a lively debate the resolution was finally referred to the committee of judiciary A, of which Senator Hartzell is chairman.

Cravens' Resolution.

Senator Cravens' resolution was as follows:

"Whereas, The general assembly is now organized and ready to proceed to the transaction of state's business in a safe, sane and economical manner and in order that the senate may be in possession of sufficient facts to conduct the state affairs as will afford a better public economy, be it

"Resolved, That the auditor of state and the state board of finance be requested to furnish the senate, the estimated amount of revenue of the state that will be available for the next biennial period;

"Also a statement as to the amount of the current indebtedness of the state, where and by whom held, the rate of interest the state is paying on each item of this indebtedness.

"Also, the amount of money on deposit with banks and where and in what banks such deposits are placed; also inform the senate of such funds as are available for current expenses."

Bills Affect Utilities.

Two bills making the taxable valuation of utilities the basis for rate-making and bond issues, a repeal bill that would abolish the engineers' registration board and a prohibition law amendment that would increase the penalties for first and second convictions were among measures introduced in the senate.

The public service commission bills were introduced by Senator Murray S. Barker (Hamilton and Boone, Rep.) and Senator J. Monroe Fitch (Delaware, Rep.). Senator Barker's bill prescribes the basis for assessment for taxation of public utilities and is along the line of the bill introduced by Senator Fitch.

Prohibition Law Teeth.

The bill providing for the insertion of more "teeth" in the Indiana prohibition law was introduced by Senator Oliver E. Dunn (Morgan, Owen and Hendricks, Rep.), father of the state prohibition law.

The bill, which would amend section 4 of the present law, makes it unlawful for any person [illegible] facture, transport, [illegible] barter, exchange, [illegible] or otherwise [illegible] liquor. The [illegible]

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Evansville.—Herman Steinhilber, manager of the New Vendome hotel here and John Heyns, secretary of the same hotel company and secretary of the city park board, were arrested by J. E. Stickleman, deputy United States marshal, in connection with the whisky theft cases at Tell City. The two men were indicted by the federal grand jury at Indianapolis, December 22, with 16 others, on charges of conspiracy to violate the prohibition law through the theft of whisky from the Krogman distillery warehouse at Tell City, November 7, 1921.

Marion.—Decision to admit women as active members of the Grant County Agricultural association and to extend the time of holding the membership campaign in the county from one to two weeks was reached by the board of directors and officers at a meeting here. Perry H. Crane, Indianapolis, secretary of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, made an address.

Brazil.—Members of the Indiana state highway commission met with the Clay county council to make arrangements for the construction of a new Brunswick bridge over Eel river, to replace the one washed out in the flood of last spring. The bridge is to be built by Clay county, under the supervision of the state highway commission. It is on a state road running from Brazil to Jasonville.

Gary.—The contract to build the 15 homes for officials of the National Tube company, the estimated cost being $200,000, was awarded to Paul Brothers, of Gary. E. N. Waterman, general manager of the tube company, and W. M. Hogg, of the commission, visited Gary to arrange for the building of the homes.

Anderson. — The Madison county council, in annual session here, was urged by the board of children's guardians and several other organizations to make an appropriation of $200,000 for a new county orphans' home to be built on the tract of 250 acres of land two miles east of this city bequeathed to the county by Calvin Bronnenberg.

Madison.—Abner Wilhelm, age sixty-eight, was found dead at his home, near Levi, by his son Ira when the latter returned from a visit to Madison. It is believed Mr. Wilhelm was killed by lightning in an electrical storm, as a horse that he had been driving was also dead near where his body was found in the barn lot.

Indianapolis.—Aggregate sales tax collections for the year 1922 amounted to $12,021,289.77 in Indiana, figures made public by M. Bert Thurman, collector of internal revenue, show. The figures are less than for the preceding year, due to discontinuance of certain taxes.

Evansville. — Mrs. Mary Dearing, wife of the postmaster at Velpen, was arrested here, on a federal warrant. It is alleged that Mrs. Dearing opened unclaimed letters in her husband's office out of curiosity. Her bond was fixed at $500.

Plymouth.—George W. Seymour, a farmer residing seven miles east of this city, has 35 cows from which he realized $1,954 from the sale of milk and butter during 1922. The total production of butterfat from the herd for the 12 months was 5,890 pounds.

Shelbyville.—Directors of the Shelby county farm bureau, at a meeting here, fixed the week of January 22 as the time for the membership drive. A campaign for members will be made in each of the fourteen townships in the county.

English.—The Home Economic club of this city has elected the following officers: Mrs. L. A. Helmbrecht, president; Mrs. Charles T. Brown, vice president; Mrs. James F. Jones, secretary and treasurer.

Wawasee.—Ice eight to ten inches in thickness is now being harvested from northern Indiana lakes. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company will cut a large amount of ice here to be stored for the next summer.

Evansville.—James Demorest, who was arrested here on the charge of violating the federal narcotic law, has been bound to the federal grand jury by Charles R. Harmon, United States commissioner.

Muncie.—The annual poultry and pet stock show of the Central Indiana [illegible] and Fanciers' association will be held in the National Guard armory building here January 15 to 20.

[illegible].—Five hundred members of [illegible] here attended a banquet at which [illegible], Indianapolis [illegible] for Indiana was a guest of honor.

RAPID PROGRESS IN SELECTING ROAD FOR FEDERAL-AID SYSTEM

Opening Up the National Forests by Road Building—The Blewitt Pass Road Under Construction, Wenatchee National Forest, Washington.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The selection of the roads to compose the system of federal-aid highways which will reach into practically every county in the United States is progressing rapidly, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture. State federal engineers have held numerous conferences during the past summer in all sections of the country.

Outline the System.

The system is being outlined in accordance with the requirements of the federal highway act of last November, which contemplates a system of highways to be built with federal-aid such as no other nation has ever possessed and which, once built, will be continuously maintained in serviceable condition. Eighteen feet will be the minimum width of roadway unless conditions justify a lesser width, and such cases must be given special approval. The system will consist of not more than 7 per cent of the total road mileage in any one state, not more than 3-7 of which will be primary or interstate highways, and the remainder secondary or inter-county highways. The total mileage of primary and secondary roads will be approximately 187,000 miles.

Work has progressed rapidly on the system during the past year and 10,000 miles of road have been completed in conjunction with federal-aid. These have been projects of such importance that there is no doubt as to their being included in the system as finally outlined.

Approximate Mileage.

The following table gives the approximate mileage of the primary and secondary system in the various states. In 13 states the figures are based on the total mileage of highways in the state, while the remainder are based on the maps submitted.

Wyoming	1,288	1,946	3,234
Totals	71,492	96,079	187,400

From the present outlook it is thought that this program of road construction will cover a period of from 15 to 20 years. Many states will complete their mileage in a much shorter time as they have included in the system a considerable mileage of improved road. They will then enlarge the federal-aid system by including additional mileage.

When the system is complete the total improved road mileage of the country will be far greater than the 187,000 miles included in the system. How much greater it is hard to say, but in all of the states the system has been outlined, keeping in mind that state roads independent of federal-aid will connect with it.

BULLETINS OF GREAT SERVICE TO GROWERS

Oklahoma Farmers Save Much Money on Broom Corn Crop.

Weekly Reports of Quantities in Storage and General Market Conditions Served to Boost Prices Materially.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"We were glad to publish your bulletins that gave market conditions to farmers and saved the farmers from $50 to $100 per ton on their broom corn," the editor of an Oklahoma newspaper recently wrote the United States Department of Agriculture.

The bulletins referred to were weekly reports of the quantities of broom corn in storage, and of general market conditions, issued by the department's representatives in the broom corn territory. The reports indicated a shortage of stocks in northwestern Oklahoma and the farmers refused to sell at the low prices bid by speculators. The result was the sales of the crops at prices more in proportion with normal supply and demand conditions.

CARE FOR SPRAY MATERIALS

Supplies of spraying materials that were left over from the summer's spraying campaign can be kept in fairly good condition if properly stored.

Liquid lime-sulphur deteriorates more rapidly than any of the others. It should be placed where it will not freeze and if stored in a cellar or shed, care needs to be used that the container does not leak, as it gives off a disagreeable odor. In spring the material ought to be tested for loss of strength by using a hydrometer.

Dry lime-sulphur will keep in good shape if stored in an air-tight container and freezing does not hurt it. Powdered lead arsenate will keep well in a dry place, but the paste form should have water poured over its surface and then stored in a place free from freezing.

DECREASE FAMILY EXPENSES

Plenty of Milk and Butter Together With Fruits and Vegetables, Cut Down Bills.

Cows for milk and butter on the farm will be needed. With plenty of milk and butter the living of the farmer's family need not be expensive if enough fruit, garden vegetables, meat and lard are produced. Farmers who raise most of their living will likely have enough cash to buy what they cannot raise.

SCRIBES AND PHARISEES

By

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Copyright, 1922, by the Macmillan Co.

OURS is a little town in that part of the country called the West by those who live east of the Alleghanies, and referred to lovingly as "back East" by those who dwell west of the Rockies. It is a country town where, as the song goes, "you know everybody and they all know you" and the country newspaper office is the social clearing house.

In our little newspaper office we are all reporters, and we know many intimate things about people that we do not print.

As the merest incident of the daily grind, it came to the office that the bank cashier, whose retirement was announced with half a column of regret, was caught $3,500 short, after 20 years of faithful service, and that his wife sold the homestead to make his shortage good.

Though our loathed but esteemed contemporary, the Statesman, speaks of our town as "this city," and calls the marshal "chief of police," we are none the less a country town. Like hundreds of its kind, our little daily newspaper is equipped with typesetting machines and is printed from a web perfecting press, yet it is only a country newspaper, and knowing this, we refuse to put on city airs. Of course, we print the afternoon Associated Press report on the first page, under formal heads and with some pretense of dignity, but that first page is the parlor of the paper, as it is of most of its contemporaries, and in the other pages they and we go around in our shirt sleeves, calling people by their first names; teasing the boys and girls good-naturedly; tickling the pompous members of the village with straws from time to time, and letting out the family secrets of the community without much regard for the feelings of the supercilious.

Nine or ten thousand people in our town go to bed on this kind of mental pabulum, as do country town dwellers all over the United States, and although we do not claim that it is helpful, we do contend that it does not hurt them. Certainly by poking mild fun at the shams—the town pharisees—we make it more difficult to maintain the class lines which the pretenders would establish. Possibly by printing the news of everything that happens, suppressing nothing "on account of the respectability of the parties concerned," we may prevent some evil-doers from going on with their plans, but this is mere conjecture, and we do not set it down to our credit. What we maintain is that in printing our little country dailies, we, the scribes, from one end of the world to the other, get more than our share of fun out of life as we go along, and pass as much of it on to our neighbors as we can spare.

Because we live in country towns, where the only car gongs we hear are on the baker's wagon, and where the horses in the fire department work on the streets, is no reason why city dwellers should assume that we are natives. We have no dialect worth recording—save that some of us westerners burr out "r's" a little or drop an occasional final "g." But you will find that all the things advertised in the backs of the magazines are in our houses, and that the young men in our towns walking home at midnight, with their coats over their arms, whistle the same popular airs that lovelorn boys are whistling in New York, Portland, San Francisco or New Orleans that same evening. Our girls are those pretty, reliant, well-dressed young women whom you see at the summer resorts from Coronado beach to Buzzard's bay. In the fall and winter these girls fill the colleges of the East and the state universities of the West.

We take all the beautiful garden magazines, and our terra-cotta works are turning out creditable vases—which we pronounce "vahzes," you may be sure—for formal gardens. And though we men for the most part run our own lawnmowers, and personally look after the work of the college boy who takes care of the horse and the cow for his room, still there are a few of us proud and haughty creatures who have automobiles. At the flower parade in our own little town last October there were ten automobiles in line, decked with paper flowers and laden with pretty girls in lawns and dimities and linens—though as a matter of fact most of the linens were only "Indian head." And our particular little country paper printed an item to the effect that the real social line of cleavage in the town lies not between the cutglass set and the devotees of hand-painted china, but between the real nobility who wear genuine linen and the base imitations who wear Indian head.

In some towns an item like that would make people mad, but we have our people trained to stand a good deal. They know that it costs them five cents a line for cards of thanks and resolutions of respect, so they never bring them in. They know that our paper never permits "one who was there" to report social functions, so that dear old correspondent has resigned; and because we have insisted for years on making an item about the first tomatoes that are served in spring at any dinner or reception, together with the cost per pound of the tomatoes, the town has become used to our attitude and does not buzz with indignation when we poke a risible finger at the home-made costumes of the Plymouth Daughters when they present "The Mikado" to pay for the new pipe organ. Indeed, so used is the town to our ways that when there was great talk last winter about Mrs. Frelingheysen for serving fresh strawberries over the ice cream at her luncheon in February, just after her husband had gone through bankruptcy, she called up Miss Larrabee, our society editor, on the telephone and asked her to make a little item saying that the strawberries served by Mrs. Frelingheysen at her luncheon were not fresh, but merely sun-dried. This we did gladly and printed her recipe.

So, gradually, without our intending to establish it, a family vernacular has grown up in the paper which our people understand, but which—like all other family vernaculars—is Greek to those outside the circle. Thus we say:

"Bill Parker is making his eighth biennial distribution of cigars today for a boy."

City papers would print it:

"Born to Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Parker, a baby boy.

Again we print this item:

"Mrs. Merriman is getting ready to lend her fern to the Nortons, June 15."

That doesn't mean anything, unless you happen to know that Mrs. Merriman has the prettiest Boston fern in town, and that no bow window is properly decorated at any wedding without that fern. In larger towns the same item would appear thus:

"Cards are out announcing the wedding of Miss Cecil Norton and Mr. Collis R. Hatcher at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Norton, 1022 High street, June 15."

A plain drunk is generally referred to in our columns as a "guest of Marshal Furgeson's informal house party," and when a group of drunk-and-disorderlies is brought in we feel free to say of their evening diversion that they "spent the happy hours, after refreshments, playing progressive hell." And this brings us to the consideration of the most important personage with whom we have to deal. In what we call "social circles," the most important personages are Mrs. Julia Neal Worthington and Mrs. Priscilla Winthrop Conklin, who keep two hired girls and can pay five dollars a week for them when the prevailing price is three. In financial circles the most important personage is John Markley, who buys real estate mortgages; in political circles the most important personage is Charlie Hedrick, who knows the railroad attorneys at the capital and always can get passes for the county delegation to the state convention; in the railroad yard the most important personage is the division superintendent, who smokes ten-cent cigars and has the only "room with a bath" at the Hotel Metropole. But with us, in the publication of our newspaper, the most important personage in town is Marshal Furgeson.

If you ever looked out of the car-window as you passed through town, you undoubtedly saw him at the depot, walking nervously up and down the platform, peering into the faces of strangers. He is ever on the outlook for crooks, though nothing more violent has happened in our county for years than an assault and battery. But Marshal Furgeson never relinquishes his watch. In winter, clad in his blue uniform and campaign hat, he is a familiar figure on our streets; and in summer, without coat or vest, with his big silver star on which is stamped "Chief of Police," pinned to his suspender, he may be seen at any point where trouble is least likely to break out. He is the only man on the town site whom we are afraid to tease, because he is our chief source of news.

When we particularly desire to please him we refer to him as "the authorities." If the Palace grocery has been invaded through the back window and a box of plug tobacco stolen, Marshal Furgeson is delighted to read in the paper that "the authorities have an important clew and the arrest may be expected at any time." He is "the authorities." If "the authorities have their eyes on a certain barber shop on South Main street, which is supposed to be doing a back-door beer business," he again is "the authorities," and contends that the word strikes more terror into the hearts of evil-doers than the mere name, Marshal Furgeson.

Next in rank to "the authorities," in the diplomatic corps of the office, come our advertisers: The proprietors of the White Front Dry Goods store, the Golden Eagle Clothing store, and the Bee Hive. These men can come nearer to dictating the paper's policy than the bankers and politicians, who are supposed to control country newspapers. Though we are charged with being the "organ" of any of half a dozen politicians whom we happen to speak of kindly at various times, we have little real use for politicians in our office, and a business man who brings in 60 or 70 dollars' worth of advertising every month has more influence with us than all the politicians in the county. This is the situation in most newspaper offices that succeed, and when any other situation prevails, when politicians control editors, the newspapers don't pay well, and sooner or later the politicians are bankrupt.

The only person in town whom all the merchants desire us to poke fun at is Mail Order Petrie. Mail Order Petrie is a miserly old codger who buys everything out of town that he can buy a penny cheaper than the home merchant sells it. He is a hard-working man, so far as that goes, and so stingy that he has been accused of going barefooted in the summer time to save shoes. When he is sick he sends out of town for patent medicines, and for ten years he worked in his truck garden, fighting floods and droughts, bugs and blight, to save something like a hundred dollars, which he put in a mail order bank in St. Louis. When it failed he grinned at the fellows who twitted him of his loss, and said: "Oh, come easy, go easy!"

A few years ago he subscribed to a matrimonial paper, and one day he appeared at the office of the probate judge with a mail order wife, who, when they had been married a few years, went to an orphan asylum and got a mail order baby. We have had considerable sport with Mail Order Petrie, and he has become so used to it that he likes it.

And this is the material with which we do our day's work—Mail Order Petrie, Marshal Furgeson, the pretty girls in the flower parade, the wise club women, the cutglass society crowd, the proud owner of the automobile, the "respectable parties concerned," the proprietor of the Golden Eagle, the clerks in the Bee Hive, the country crook who aspires to be a professional criminal some day, "the leading citizen," who spends much of his time seeing the sights of his country, the college boys who wear funny clothes and ribbons on their hats, and the politicians, greedy for free advertising.

Our business seems to outsiders to be a cruel one, because we have to deal as mere business with such sacred things as death and birth, the meeting and parting of friends, and with tragedies as well as with comedies.

Time and again we have been surprised at the charity of our people. They are always willing to forgive, and be it man or woman who takes a misstep in our town—which is the counterpart of hundreds of American towns—if the offender shows that he wishes to walk straight, a thousand hands are stretched out to help him and guide him. It is not true that a man or woman who makes a mistake is eternally damned by his fellows. If one persists in wrong after the first misdeed it is not because sheltering love and kindness were not thrown around the wrongdoer. We have in our town women who have done wrong and have lived down their errors just as men do, and have been forgiven. A hundred times in our office we have talked these things [illegible] and have been proud of our [illegible] of their humanity. We are [illegible] -ors and friends, and [illegible] comes, no one is [illegible] greatest tragedies [illegible] town's sympathy, [illegible] their cost

INTERFERENCE OF RECEIVING SETS

Each, When Tuning for Distant Station, Acts as a Continuous Wave Transmitter.

We have explained that the continuous, fairly steady whistles, usually heard while tuning for the distant stations, was due to a combination of the carrier waves of two stations which were very nearly on the same wave length. There is another series of whistles always present which very much resemble the whine of a mosquito both in tone and amount of annoyance produced. These are caused by the receiving sets of other listeners. Every receiver using a vacuum tube detector with a regenerative circuit is a potential transmitter. In fact it contains all the essentials of a radiophone transmitter on a small scale.

The detector tube when oscillating produces oscillation exactly similar to the carrier wave of the radiophone stations. The frequency or wave length of this wave can be varied by changing the tuning of the receiving tuner.

The usual procedure in tuning for a distant phone station is as follows: Put the detector tube in an oscillating condition after the tuner has been adjusted near the point where experience has taught us to look for the broadcasting stations, then move the dial slowly across the approximate point where the stations are usually heard. The carrier waves are located by a whistle which starts at the upper limit of audibility and goes down the scale until it becomes so low that it is no longer a note. At this point the set is in exact resonance, and if the tickler, coupling, or plate tuning inductance is decreased until the detector tube stops oscillating, the very best adjustment is obtained for reception of that particular station.

Unfortunately while this listener is going through this operation his receiving set is acting as a continuous wave transmitter, and is producing some inharmonious wails in the phones of his neighbors who happen to be already on the wave of the same station. The continuous wave sent out by the receiver combines with the carrier wave of the transmitting station, producing an audible note. If the operator could tune his set as simply as was described above there would be very little interference, but he usually whistles back and forth across the wave of the transmitting station several times. Often several listeners who have been getting the concert perfectly will get restless between selections and get their tubes to oscillating and whistle up and down a few times.

All listeners should be very careful to keep their detectors in a non-oscillating condition as much as possible to reduce this annoyance of interference between receivers.

Opinions seem to vary considerably in regard to the comparative amounts of energy inducted into the antenna by the "single circuit" or conductively coupled, and the "three circuit" or inductively coupled receiving set.

Previous to the introduction of the single circuit very little trouble had been experienced with beat notes from receiving stations. This was no doubt due to the fact that receiving sets were rather few and far between; also up until a few years ago there was a very small percentage of c. w. telegraph and phone stations so that there was no reason why an amateur should keep his tube in oscillation condition. On the contrary, he was very careful to keep it just below the oscillating point, that being the most sensitive adjustment for spark signals.

With the telephone and c. w. telegraph transmitting stations, i. e., tube transmitters, came the single circuit tuner with its extreme simplicity of adjustment, which was so well adapted to the very sharp tuning of the new transmitters. And with the advent of these new transmitters came the necessity for making the detector tube oscillate in order to locate a station on the scale of a receiving tuner. Naturally then the interference between receiving sets became noticeable at about the time that the single circuit sets became numerous, and this helped to prejudice the minds of the radio public against this type of receiver. However, the fact that the single circuit arrived at about the same time with the inteference was by no means the only reason for believing this tuner to be the main cause of the trouble.

For instance in constructing a single circuit or conductively coupled tuner the difficulty is in obtaining regeneration at all points on the scale. This seems to show that there is more resistance in this circuit than in the inductively coupled type. The main point of difference is the close coupling to the antenna. Being conductively coupled, the coupling to the [illegible] is at maximum [illegible]. This causes the radiation [illegible] to be high, which [illegible] that keeps [illegible] freely [illegible] coupling be- [illegible]. Thus [illegible] circuit [illegible] with [illegible]

If we must have single circuit tuners the thing to do to reduce the radiation to a minimum is to reduce the size of the antenna series condenser and increase the number of turns in the inductance. This will give sharper tuning and there will be much less trouble in getting the tube to regenerate.

In many localities there is a great deal of interference from spark stations; especially in the cities on the coast or Great Lakes, where there are commercial stations to handle the ship traffic. These spark stations do not tune very sharply, and even if the station is located several miles away it is often impossible to tune them out with the average tuner.

When tuning for a faint station and using amplification there is nothing more nerve-wracking than to have a spark station roar in unexpectedly. There is little that can be done about this interference. If the station is close a change of wave length would do little good even if this were possible. If it is a commercial station it is doing a much more important work than our broadcasters are, and of course cannot be expected to stand by for them.

FIRST RADIOPHONE EXCHANGE

Opened at Croydon, England, to Make Connection With Pilots of Air Expresses.

What is said to be the first radiophone exchange in the world was recently opened at Croydon, England, the point from which the air liners to the European continent take their departure, according to Consul Linnell.

The chief use made of this exchange is to connect the aerial traffic controller, who has his headquarters in a control tower at Charing Cross, London, with the pilots of the air expresses flying between Croydon and the continent.

The wireless exchange can also connect the phones of the airships and airplanes while in flight with any office at the aerodrome at Croydon, making direct telephone conversation possible.

The pilot of each aerial transport is now required to report his position to the traffic controller every 15 minutes, so that the progress and position of each plane is known throughout its journey. The controller is of particular value in directing the course of the aircraft in cases of fog and in giving them special directions for landing.

Radio in the Prison.

"Trusties" and officials at the Ohio state prison farm at London, Ohio, are now able to keep in touch with the outside world through the installation of a radio receiving set, purchased from the entertainment funds of the institution. The set, which has just been installed, will be enlarged within a few months by the addition of a transmitting set, through the use of which prison authorities hope to be able to bring about recapture of escaped convicts more quickly. The news of escape will be broadcasted immediately.

Court Adjourns by Radio.

From his steamer, incoming from Europe, Justice Tompkins of the Supreme court of Rockland county, New Jersey, radioed to his secretary in Nyack the necessary formal notice for the adjournment of his court, which was scheduled to convene on the morning of his arrival. The justice realized that he would not have sufficient time to reach Nyack after the ship docked, and for the first time in history used the radio to arrange for adjournment.

Popular Demand for Bulletins.

An interesting fact concerning the circulars issued and distributed by the bureau of standards was disclosed when it was announced that 20,643 copies of No. 120, which tells how to make a simple receiving set, had been sent out from the Washington office. They are sold at cost and may be obtained by sending 5 cents to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington.

The Hot-Wire Ammeter.

A hot-wire ammeter is used to measure the current in the antenna system of a transmitter. The value of the current flowing in this system is usually indicative of the performance of the apparatus. This meter is employed in tuning a transmitter to resonance, so that the maximum value of current may be induced into the antenna circuit.

Radio Aids Einstein Tests.

Special radio time signals sent from NSS, Annapolis, for the benefit of scientists in the Indian ocean, working on a test of the Einstein theory of relativity during the recent solar eclipse, were nearly twice as audible as those from a commercial station, the navy has been advised.

Helps Americanization.

An American Legion station in Nebraska broadcasts lectures on American traditions and American institutions so that foreign-born residents within range of the plant may make more rapid progress in Americanization.

Japanese Radio Enterprise.

Powerful financial interests of Japan headed by Viscount Shibusawa are endeavoring to obtain government support in the formation of a 200,000,000 yen radio corporation, which in the United States would be worth about $100,000,000

High Schools

In the field of secondary education, Indiana faces important problems arising out of the rapid increase in the number of high schools and in high school enrollment during the past two decades. In particular, it faces problems of adjustment of high school courses of study, and improvement of high school instruction, organisation and finance.

In 1920–21 there were 820 public high schools in Indiana with an enrollment of 86,880 pupils, as compared to 741 in 1900 with an enrollment of 36,139. Indiana ranks among the four or five states which lead the country in the proportion of its total population receiving some kind of high school education. In 1917, the last date for which comparative figures are available, Indiana stood fourth among the states with respect to the number of high school pupils per 1000 of the total population. Its ratio of 23.1 high school pupils per 1000 of the total population was exceeded only by California (27.0), Kansas (26.5), and Iowa (24.9), and it far exceeded the figures for the country as a whole.

In order to bring the benefits of secondary education to so large a proportion of its population Indiana has established an unusually large number of small high schools. Of its 662 four-year high schools one-third enrolled in 1920–21 each not more than 50 pupils, nearly three-fifths, each not more than 75 pupils, and nearly three-fourths, each not more than 100 pupils. Therefore, most of the problems of secondary education in Indiana center around the small high school of less than 100 pupils, located in rural or semi-rural communities.

Chiropractic Helps Nature to Keep You Well

It is a man's right to be well and happy. This fact is being brought home forcibly to thousands of sufferers who, because they have gone back to Nature, are today enjoying life.

The long, weary road to health did have a turning for them. Through the years of suffering and disappointments, these sufferers at last came to the realization that Nature, after all, is the one true healer.

Thousands look up to Chiropractic as Nature's health agent.

By simple adjustments, the Chiropractor places you in harmony with Nature. The Chiropractor goes right to the source of the trouble—pressure of bone on the nerve center—and adjusts the cause of disorder. With the cause removed, Nature, unhindered, builds up and restores the diseased parts to perfect health.

If any part of a machine is displaced, it must be adjusted. Your body is a machine, the most wonderful ever created.

It has its electric plant (the brain). The force is transmitted through the nerves to the various parts of your body, giving each tissue its life power to function.

A pressure on the nerve obstructs the force from the "diseased" or affected part. The human spine acts like a switch board. When a segment of the spine is out of place, it makes a pressure on the nerve.

Why not have the Chiropractor locate and adjust this segment of your spinal column, thereby relieving the pressure on the nerve, after which Nature restores health.

If you have not obtained relief [illegible] why not see what Nature can do? Learn how Chiropractic [illegible] in line with the healing forces of Nature.

Start Him Right

Some day soon your boy will be a man. Will he be able to meet life like a man or will he have to take a place among those who never get anywhere? It's up to you!

With a little ready money of his own he will be able to pick and choose a place in life without having to accept a "any old thing" that offers.

And he can have ready money. It is simply a matter of you starting him along the saving path now.

As little as a dollar opens a savings account at this bank.

Small, steady savings, together with compound interest soon add up.—

Henry Murray Found Dead

Aged 83 Years

Henry Murray, residing at the corner of Walter and Pearl streets, was found dead in the basement of his residence by his daughter, Mrs. William Erick, at 10:30 o'clock on Sunday morning. Mr. Murray has been a sufferer for several years of heart trouble and had gone to the basement to build the fire. He is the last of a large family and was 83 years of age. He, with a brother, Thomas Murray, was engaged for many years in the milling business and when the brother passed away several years ago he sold the business and retired. His wife died about 13 years ago. He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. William Erick and Mrs. Benjamin Shook of this place, six grandsons and three great grandchildren. The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the residence. It was conducted strictly by the Concord Masonic Lodge of which the deceased man was a loyal member. Interment in White City Cemetery.

Obituary

Zella Illif Farver, daughter of Josiah L. and Lucy M. Farver, was born Aubust 26, 1905, in Jackson township, DeKalb county, Indiana, and departed this life at the home of her sister, Esta Stimman, in Jackson township, December 30, 1922, at the young age of 17 years, 4 months and 4 days. Zella's brief life of a few years which was spent in the above mentioned vicinity, gained many friends and associates.

She was a faithful attendant at the Rehobeth Sunday school and church, and often refrained from social pleasures to attend services.

Like many who arrive at the threshold of opportunity of service, for their community, their church, their state and their country, her life was plucked off only to bloom in the glorious awakening of the Eternal morning.

The nature of her affliction was a lingering case of tuberculosis which she bore very patiently, but as a result of suffering and impossible recovery she welcomed the death angel to convey her spirit to the great beyond.

She leaves to mourn her departure a father, three brothers, Ray, of Spencerville, Indiana, Floyd, who resides on the home place in Jackson township, Harold, of unknown guarters; two sisters, Esta Stimman, and Alta Potts, of Corunna, Indiana.

The mother preceded her in death in the year 1916. Funeral services were held at the Rehobeth church January 2, 1923. Interment at the Auburn cemetery. F. E. Brewster, pastor of the M. E. church, Spencerville, Indiana, officiating.

TUBERCULOSIS KILLS TEN TIMES AS MANY AS MOTOR ACCIDENTS

"Safety First," the universal slogan adopted in the campaign to cut down the number of deaths from automobile accidents, might much better be used for the anti-tuberculosis program, according to Murray A. Auerbach, executive secretary of the Indiana Tuberculosis Association. Current efforts to check accidents in Indianapolis have been linked up with the national effort. Mr. Auerbach, paying tribute to the press as a foremost force in the "Safety First" work, today issued a statement appealing to newspapers to assist in every campaign to protect life.

"About ten times as many people die of tuberculosis in America," said Mr. Auerbach, "as fall victim to motor accidents. Recent statistics in the Safety First movement show roughly 13,000 died last year of injuries sustained in accidents. This is against some 12,500 dying of diptheria, 10,000 of typhoid or malaria.

"Last year some 132,000 persons in America died of tuberculosis. The press of the county is doing a wonderful work in educating the public [illegible]

Death On Canada Thistle

As was scheduled a meeting of the township bureau organisation was held at the school building on Friday evening. County Agent Repp, Mr. Merts of Auburn, and Mr. Hansen of the Purdue Agricultural Extension Department, were present.

County Agent Repp made introductory remarks to Mr. Hansen's talk on the Canada Thistle Menace. The latter brought out points that will prompt farmers to do more than ever before to check the spread of this noxious weed. He described methods for their treatment and explained the law against permitting their growth on farms.

DeKalb county has more Canada thistles than the average township but an effort will be made for it to be the first to be totally rid of the weed.

Important to All Women Readers of This Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and maybe despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine, will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

A RIOT

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho.

They went to one, and from a stage box gazed through rented glasses at every face. Not there. They went out, walked a short distance, talking not of disappointment but of hope, and turned into a narrow and dimly lighted street. Suddenly there broke the noise of a rising tumult, yells and gunshots. And over walls and from dark recesses came pouring excited men. Drace and Shottle found themselves in the midst of a mob, surging toward another mob rushing into an open space where torches discovered a band of executioners hanging some poor wretch to the limb of a tree. Where there were no houses, the garden walls were too high to offer a means of escape, and as they could not fight their way back, Drace and Shottle were swept onward. Torches flared, and all sorts of weapons were revealed in the pitiful yellow light—old muskets, swords, pistols with brass barrels from ancient Spanish armories, clubs and pikes that might have served Cromwell. Some of the men looked respectable, others desperate; they were of many nationalities, all anger-smitten and excited.

"What's it all about?" Drace inquired of a bare-headed old man who panted beside him.

"The carpet-bag devils. They hang a citizen."

"We are on the right side, anyway," Shottle cried. "Give me a gun—give me something."

Some one gave him an old carbine, and another gave Drace a cavalry saber. The man from the North grasped it, feeling that he was to fight the scoundrels that cast discredit and reproach upon his native state.

At this time of man's madness nature could not restrain the introduction of her own grim humor. Dogs gathered in the open space between the bands of advancing rioters, and fought, howling, the victims of wounds without cause.

Not many shots were fired. The authorities made a criminal of the citizen who carried a gun or concealed it in his house. It was a hand-to-hand strife, the breaking of heads, the cutting of throats. A big, red-shirted negro with razor gleaming in the smoky light made a grab at Drace, who had just room enough to leap back and strike with his saber; but the agile negro dodged, the blow was caught by a brick wall and the blade was broken off at the handle. But with the hilt, a boxing glove of steel, Drace knocked the negro down and then passed over his body, striking right and left, pushing onward to the front, where the jagged ranks saw-toothed one into the other.

The struggle now was to save the hanging man, who, without fall enough to break his neck, was strung up to strangle. Drace was the first man to fight his way to him. He dropped his steel boxing glove, grabbed out his knife, leaped up, caught hold of the limb of the tree with one hand and cut the man down.

Catching up his weapon, he was about to mix in the fight again when the sharp scream of a woman caught and held him for a moment. He glanced hurriedly about; at various windows were lights and silhouetted figures of onlookers. But as if drawn by some lodestone instinct his eyes went to a second-story window just beyond the tree; and there, in the strong light of a lamp just behind her, he saw again the face of the barbaric rose maid, [illegible] upon the order of his going but ran back down the street and then hurried down a side street out of the path of the troopers. There he waited until the tumult had subsided—perhaps an hour. Then he made his way back to the scene of the riot.

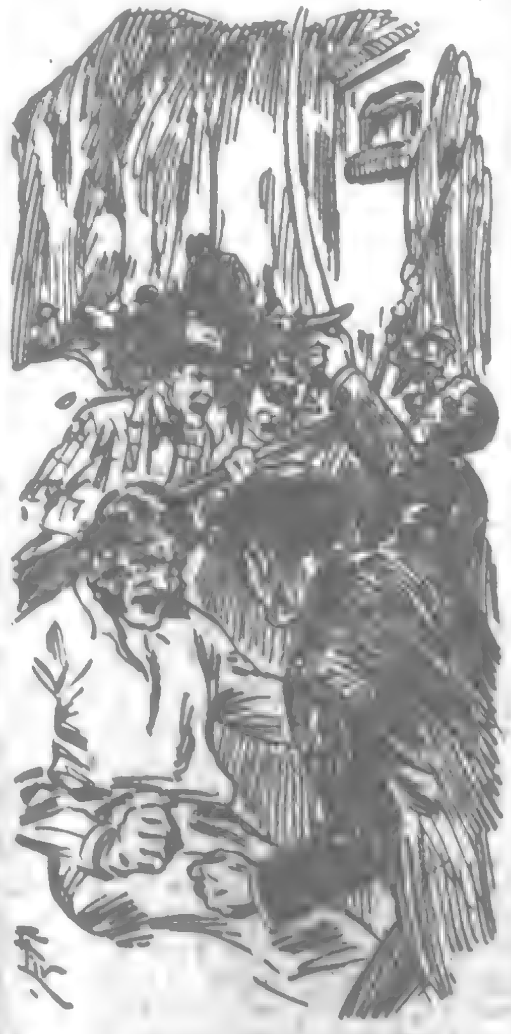
The house at the window of which he thought he had glimpsed the face of Nadine la Vitte was now dark. But in spite of the curious glances of sundry loiterers, Drace took a careful survey of it and of the three oak trees in front—even felt their bark to familiarize himself with them. At the corner he sought the name of the street, on the lamp, but the glass had been broken, leaving only a red "L" and the fragments and "e." But no matter—he would know where to turn, would know the house when abreast of it.

Now Drace hastened toward the St. Charles. The streets were quiet. But a wagon rattled by, and he saw that it was filled with wounded men. He thought of Shottle and his spirit was oppressed with sorrow. Shottle's escape must have been impossible, and tomorrow they would take his body, throw it into some oozy hole and cover it with mud.

In the lobby of the St. Charles men stood in groups, talking of the fall in the price of cotton. The riot, which to Drace had meant so much, was not even known, so accustomed was the town to scenes of violence. Drace asked the clerk if Shottle had come in. No; his key was in the box. Then Drace thought that surely Liberty must be dead or wounded, hauled away to suffer. He went forth again, to the department of police, to the cavalry barracks, but nothing could he learn. Then in his room he sat sorrowing over his friend and yet thrilled with a selfish happiness, for he had found the barbaric rosemaid. He went to bed, tossed, slept, dreamed in a mingling of distress and gladness, and awoke. Shottle was standing in the room.

"Thank the Lord!" cried Drace, and sprang out of bed.

"That's what I say, friend Virgil. But you will please address me as Colonel Shottle. I am a free man. Here!"



Some One Gave Him an Old Carbine and Another Gave Drace a Cavalry Saber.

He held forth an envelope; opening it, Drace took out a hundred-dollar banknote.

"What does this mean, Lib?"

"I am Colonel Shottle, sir, and not Lib."

"I beg your pardon, Colonel; but what does this mean?"

Shottle sat down and crossed his long legs. He took out a cigar and lighted it.

"Virgil, I fought as long as I thought it was of advantage. The old carbine I had wouldn't shoot, and I want to tell you that mauling darky heads with a piece of iron is hard work. I looked about for you but couldn't find you, and knowing that you knew how to take care of yourself, I began to sniff for a way to get out, found a hole in a wall, ducked through and scooted. That was all natural enough. Anybody could have done that. But now comes the inspirational part. I got around into Royal street and met a steamboat captain who asked me to have a drink, and I needed it, for I had been hard at work.

"So I went in with him. And then up I hops to a [illegible] house with the money you'll [illegible] me for introducing you to [illegible] la Vitte. The [illegible] then Drace set out to find again the house at the scene of the riot—the house at the window of which he had seen the face of Nadine la Vitte. At length he found himself in the side street where he had taken refuge the night before, and turning out of this he came to the tree from the limb of which he had cut down the half-strangled victim of the mob. There opposite was the house and there was the window at which he had seen Nadine's face; but across the window, boards had been nailed! The other windows, too, and the doors, were nailed up; the place was deserted. Could that face at the window have been only a creature of his imagination?

An old negro in nondescript livery came down the walk from a house a few doors away. He might have been footman to a harlequin. But when Drace spoke to him, the dignified change in his countenance appeared to alter even the aspect of his attire; and now he might have been usher to a governor. This quick change had been brought about by his intuitive discovery that Drace was a man of consequence.

"Do you know anything about the people who lived across the street?" Drace asked.

"Wall, no sah; da wus po' folks, sah."

"Then you don't know where they went."

"No sah. My 'ployment is ter look after folks ob er higher 'dition, sah. An den ter preach on Sunday."

"Oh, you are a preacher."

"Called, sah, wid er blast from de trumpet."

"Does your church ever need money?" In a moment he lost his dignity.

"Look yeah, boss, whut's er nigger church fur ef it ain't ter need money? Co'se it need money. But what you gwine do erbout it?

"Yassuh," he said, when Drace had warmed him with a greenback, "I reckon dey done moved away. There was er kind of rumpus last night. And I reckon they-all thought it wasn't no place foh dem no mo'; dey lef' mighty sudden-like, uhly dis mawnin'."

And that was all Drace could learn; no one in the vicinity would admit that they knew them or their destination. Disliking to call too much attention to himself, Drace walked away heavy-hearted. For a long time he wandered the streets. He came to the levee, and the French market. He went into the old St. Louis cemetery, and looked upon the novel sight of bodies sepulchered in a wall with doors like a furnace. These compartments, he learned, were rented by the month to the poor; and a short tenantry it was for many a son and daughter of penury answering Eternity's call, for when the grim agent failed to collect the pittance promised by sorrow, the shrouded renter was evicted—an old Spanish custom, Drace was told.

Recalled by these grim surroundings to the purpose that had brought him to the South, Drace now determined to give himself wholly to his quest for Stepho la Vitte. He returned to the hotel, and found Shottle nervous in a cloud of smoke. The floor was covered with burned matches and the stubs of cigars.

"Lib, I'm crushed," announced Drace.

"So am I. But how does it happen that the dust-cart drove over you too?"

"Nadine is gone. The place is nailed up."

"That's tough, all right. But what are you going to do about it? Are you going to come to your puritanic senses and give the whole thing up, or do you expect—"

"I expect to fulfill my sacred mission. I must find Stepho la Vitte."

Shottle got up and shook hands with his friend. He swore that he would make the search the aim of his life. "Suppose you hire me by the day," he suggested. "A man does better work by the day. He always has fresh stimulus every time the sun rises."

"Very well—ten dollars a day."

"That's liberal, Virgil, and I'll take it. And let's get Old Josh to help us. He is more or less acquainted with Stepho's habits."

> "That case of wine was addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Miss."

Singular Cortege.

The other day, along the Grand boulevard of Paris passed a singular funeral cortege. Behind a humble hearse the procession (all on foot) consisted of a woman with five children, a mere handful of soldiers, mostly blacks, and a general of the French army in full dress uniform. The general was General Mangin, and the deceased so singularly honored was the Soudanese who had been his orderly since 1914, and who, incidentally, had been cited in orders for extraordinary gallantry.—Independent, New York.

IMPROVED ROADS

ENGINEER IS NEEDED SORELY

Better Highways to Relieve Congestion of Cities Will Open Door to Farm Life.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"The highway engineer is needed sorely at this moment, the engineer with daring imagination, to help scatter the dwelling houses and residence facilities of cities of more than 25,000 population far and wide into the outlying open country, and thus in some appreciable way to relieve congestion in American cities," declared Dr. C. J. Galpin, United States Department of Agriculture, at the second annual conference on highway transportation education held at Washington.

Improved Roads Will Help Scatter Dwelling Houses and Residence Facilities of Cities.

"A large factor in decentralizing city homes is the transportation problem, and challenges the genius of highway engineers," Doctor Galpin said. "Less than one-third the entire population of the United States is on farms. Sixty-eight cities of more than 100,000 population each contain nearly another third. The 30 odd millions of people living in cities of 25,000 population and over are being brought into immediate contact with the commodities of living, the skill of service, nad the institutional wisdom of the world, whereas those who live on farms receive few of these advantages."

A system of complete terminal towns connected by rail or water to wholesaling cities, and by an adequate highway system to groups of farm population is Doctor Galpin's solution for "taking the curse off farming, and 'opening the door to a good kind of life on the farm.'"

SOLVE FARMER'S PROBLEMS

Good Roads to Local Markets Reduce Cost of Distribution of Various Products.

The joint commission of agricultural inquiry sees in good roads one of the ways of solving the farmer's difficulties. In its report on "The Agricultural Crisis and Its Causes," the commission says: "Good roads to local markets, joint facilities at terminals, connecting rail, water and motor transport systems, and more adequate facilities at shipping points will materially contribute to the reduction of costs of marketing and distribution to the mutual benefit of producer and consumer."

SAME MATERIALS ARE USED

Same Essentials Were Employed in Construction of Roads as Are Being Used Today.

While we know little about the roads that existed prior to the Roman empire, we do know from records remaining that not only the Romans but the Egyptians, the Carthagenians, the Sumarians, and other ancient peoples employed much the same materials that we are today using in highway construction. There is evidence that both the Romans and the Egyptians used a mineral cement. The Bible tells of the manufacture and use of bricks.

In Nursing Sick, Mrs. Patten States, She Often Recommends Tanlac—Thinks It Wonderful.

"I firmly believe Tanlac is what keeps me so well and strong," is the high tribute paid the medicine, recently, by Mrs. Edith J. Patten, widely known and esteemed resident of 560 Cumberland Ave., Portland, Me.

"When I began the use of Tanlac I had not felt right for a long time and was all run down. After persistently taking the treatment considered best for such a condition I got no better. In fact I seemed to be growing worse until a lady friend insisted on me trying Tanlac.

"At that time I took two or three bottles and was perfectly well again. Since then I have taken a bottle two or three times a year and no one could feel better. I have done lots of nursing of the sick, and since Tanlac did so much for me I have been the cause of many others taking it—always with splendid results. It is with this knowledge and experience that I recommend Tanlac as a wonderful medicine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Greek Type of Dress in Favor

The story of present-day clothes is an interesting one, writes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Tribune. There are chapters on Egyptian, Persian and Venetian influences; in fact, almost unending are the themes that one might pursue in telling of clothes as created by the world's best designers of today.

But it is not in these radical departures that the interest of the well-dressed woman lies. It is not among any of these that the accepted line is to be found. No greater tribute could be paid to the taste of the average woman of the present day than that she still prefers the silhouette of the simple straight dress which so closely resembles the dress worn by the ancient Greeks at the period of their highest civilization.

The chemise dress of this season, with its longer skirt and its shorter waist—which make its proportions more graceful—more strongly resembles the old-time Greek robe than did the strangely long-waisted, short-skirted frock of last year.

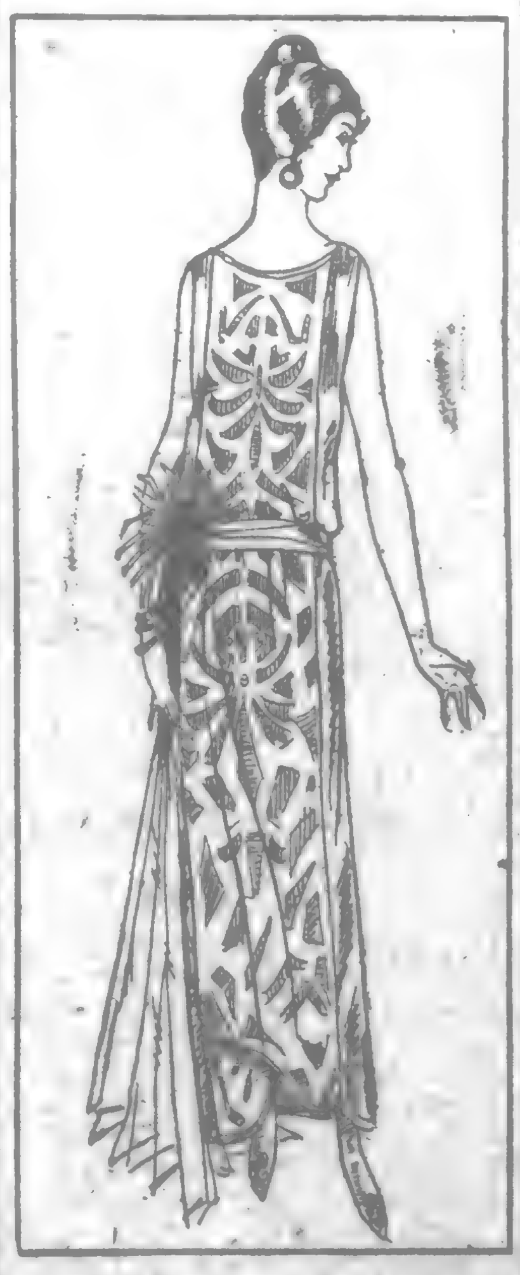
The white frock made along simple lines still is seen everywhere. It stands out as a distinguished type of dress among the brilliant stuffs that fashion so many of the mid-winter evening gowns.

Civet Cat Dyed in Rusty Hue.

Especially noteworthy among these gorgeous fabrics are exquisite metal encrusted velvets, chiffon and silks and the lovely, rich colored tissues such as those in gold and copper shades, as well as those in bright greens and yellows, which Cheruit encrusts with embroideries in many beautiful contrasting hues.

Colors of the autumn are apparently great favorites with Cheruit, who even dyes furs, such as civet cat, in an orange shade. The orange dye gives a rusty tinge to the black hairs of the fur, while the white ones take a brilliant orange hue, so that the effect is very striking. Fur treated in this way is used to make entire evening cloaks.

Fur coats for evening wear and for the daytime, too, are now being designed for each customer rather than ordered from a model already made up or bought ready-to-year. This seems a great extravagance, but such a method of procedure is no more startling in comparison to the buying of more staple styles in ready-to-wear fur coats than the method of draping furs which came into vogue a few years ago was as compared to the conservative lines followed by the old-time furrier in making a fur coat a purely useful garment. Nevertheless, the general trend is to use fur in exactly the same way that one would use velvet, silk or even chiffon.



Showing the Winsome Frock of Silver and Mauve Metal Cloth With Clever Girdle of Silver Tissue; It Is Charming for Formal Wear.

Evening Clothes Are Rich.

Furriers of the old school still do not approve entirely of treating skins as fabrics. No branch of dress manufacture has shown a greater advancement during the last three or four years than has the fur industry. Here the most radical departures from the beaten track are seen, not only in the forming of the garments but in the working of the skins themselves.

In the use of moleskin this is especially apparent. Only a few seasons ago mole was worked in patches [illegible] the size of the skin, so that the whole effect was smooth and [illegible]. Now the skins are worked in small [illegible] the girdle. The girdle is held at the right side, at the point from which the panel falls, by a silver flower.

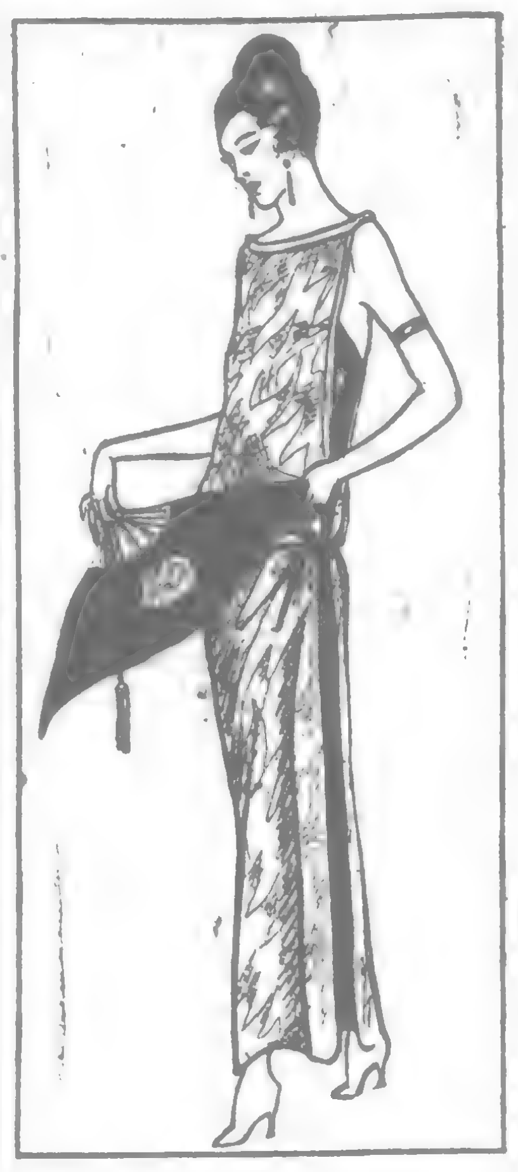
No more delightful frock for a party could possibly be imagined than one of all-over gold and silver lace cut in chemise style and hung over a foundation of flame red crepe de chine.



Theater Gown of Heavy Gold and Silver Lace Over Foundation of Red Crepe de Chine. With It Is Carried a Red Fan. Has Gold Medallion.

Gown Designed for French Stage.

A gown developed in a deep coral pink chiffon velvet is trimmed with an applique of silver braid forming wheels on the hem of the skirt and panel bands at the front and back.

Headdresses are increasing in favor steadily. So many ideas are expressed in the detail of the evening dress that surely no woman, young or old, can fail to find a type becoming to her.

Wide, straight bands of silk, ribbon or metal tissue are wrapped about the head. A rather extreme example of this vogue is a band tied at one side and long ends are allowed to fall over the shoulder. A more conservative method is to drape the band so that the fastening is concealed.

Jeweled tassels and strings of beads are hung from headdresses. Occasionally the hair is dressed high and a cluster of curls permitted to fall over the headband.

Juliet's cap is copied in silver and studded with jewels to make a modern headdress. Then there is the Egyptian-draped toque with tassel pendants and the braided band of tinsel cloth with crystal pendants.

Chemises of Latest Design.

The newer chemises are as straight up and down in design as any dress. Sometimes they have simply a narrow band of lace to edge them at the top, and then they are fastened over the shoulders with a narrow strip of ribbon to brighten the effect and keep the garment dainty looking. But, from this point, they can be elaborated almost indefinitely. The lace can be worked into a little yoke, it can be made up of insertion and edging prettily stitched together, or there can be ribbons strung through the garment in various ways. Also there are many rows of hemstitching applied to the up-and-down and the crosswise lines of the chemises, made of materal that will allow of this sort of work.

But always the cut of the thing is kept nearly straight, depending upon whether or not you decide to have the step-in variety of chemise or the one that hangs loose and is worn with a pair of bloomers.

On some of the chemises they are using the most amusing little designs of faintly colored organdies cut in slender little patterns and appliqued to the white background.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

Health is the Most Valuable Asset You Have

Newago, Mich.—"Some years ago I was troubled with dizziness, palpitation, loss of appetite and sore and painful stomach. I tried the best physicians I could hear of, and also several put-up medicines, but nothing did me any good. Some physicians said it was my heart; some said it was my stomach; while others said it was my nerves. I got so bad I could not work very steadily, when a friend came to see me and insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I was discouraged, but tried it anyway, and after taking the second bottle I felt much better. I then bought six bottles and I believe the 'Discovery' saved my life. It was rightfully named 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I would recommend it to all who need such a medicine.—Chas. E. Backus.

DISCOVERED ERROR TOO LATE

Rash Husband Jumped to Conclusion as to the Meaning of His Wife's Mutterings.

Gov. Ephraim Morgan of West Virginia was talking at a dinner about certain coal-mine complications.

"Well," he said, "let us hope nobody does anything rash. Rashness—but perhaps you have not heard the story of Roland.

"A certain man got married, and one night on the honeymoon he was awakened by the voice of his young bride talking in her sleep.

"'Roland,' she sighed, 'Roland—Roland.' Over and over, you know, like that. It was terrible.

"The man grew wild with jealousy, for his name was Hank, not Roland, and seizing the poor girl by the throat, he put an end to her then and there.

"A rash deed, believe me, for Hank learned afterward from her family that his wife had worked for several years in a cafeteria, and the 'Roland' he had heard of her dreaming lips was really 'Roll and,' meaning, of course, an order for 'Roll and butter.'"

A remark carelessly dropped doesn't always fall flat.

SURELY WAS BRIGHT YOUTH

But Possibly Schoolmaster Had Some Idea of Conveying a Delicate Hint to Dad.

Secretary Mellon said at a dinner in Pittsburgh:

"Some of the hints that our former allies drop about their debts to us remind me of a story.

"A Hoosier schoolmaster was giving a gawky country lad a lesson in mental arithmetic.

"'Now Peleg,' he said, 'suppose your father had eight hams hanging in his smoke-house, and in my cellar there were none. Got that?'

"'Yes, sir,' said Peleg.

"'Now suppose your father gave me one-eighth of his entire stock of hams—how many would there then be in my cellar, and how many would remain in your father's smoke-house?'

"'One and seven,' said Peleg quick as a flash.

"'Marvelous! Excellent!' cried the schoolmaster. 'You are entitled to ten good marks for that answer. Tell your father so when you get home. Repeat the problem to him, word for word, so that he may see what a fine, bright boy he has in his little Peleg.'"

Better Than Mother.

I have two sons of high school age who have always made our home a gathering place for their chums. I have become more or less interested in all boys, their problems and perplexities.

Last summer a stranger came among them. After he had been coming to our house a few weeks, he sat down in the porch swing with me one night and poured out his troubles. I advised him as well as I could just as I would have done to one of my own sons.

He said: "I wish my mother understood things as you do!"

That compliment went straight to my heart.—Chicago Tribune.

BROKE BOTH THEIR RECORDS

When It Came to Bible Reading, Last Comer "Put It All Over" His Friends.

Greenberry Lowe, settlement clerk in the state auditor's office, and a statehouse friend one day were discussing their early religious familiarity with the Bible. One had read the Bible through once and had committed to memory a catechism. The other had not learned the catechism, but had read the Bible through more than once.

"I read the Bible through before I was fourteen," said the friend.

"Yes, but I read it through before I was twelve," said Lowe.

It seemed to be a draw, all points considered, when Lewis Johnson, audit clerk, came along. The two, assuming a holier-than-thou attitude, told Johnson of their early Bible reading records.

"That's nothing," said Johnson. "My father read the Bible through to me long before I was able to read a word."—Indianapolis News.

Russel Platter; Devotional committee, Mable Harter. Popcorn was served and all enjoyed the evening.

Henry Magginis, a former resident of Newville, who has spent the latter years in the south, died last week at St. Petersburg, Fla. The remains were brought to Newville Saturday, where the funeral was held from the U. B. Church. Interment was made in Riverside Cemetery by the side of his wife, Maggie Magginis, who passed away about eighteen years ago. Deceased was a good man respected by all who knew him. During the time he lived near Newville, he was the greater portion of time chorister in the U. B. Church. He had many warm friends here whose hearts are saddened by his demise. He leaves one son, Willis D., a teacher in the south, also well known in this vicinity and one daughter, Mrs. Grace Lome, of Butler, one daughter preceded him to the great beyond. We hereby express our sympathy to the sorrowing friends.

Goes to Butler, Pa. To Work

Foraker Ferrell stopped over with St. Joe friends for a few days last week on his way from Appleton, Wisconsin, to Butler, Pennsylvania. Foraker has been reporting to a daily newspaper at Gladstone, Michigan, until Christmas and since that time he has been visiting with John Tustison at Appleton. He left St. Joe Saturday evening for Butler, where he started to work on Monday morning for the "Butler Eagle," a daily paper of that city.

Sometimes we think it ought to be written, "He has all the disadvantages of youth."

Sunday School Entertainm'nt

The M. P. Sunday School will give an entertainment at the church on Saturday night, January 27, beginning at 7:30, after which the ladies of the church will serve lunch consisting of sandwiches, doughnuts pickles and coffee. Price 15c.

The program will be miscellaneous, closing with a playlet entitled "The Rev. Peter Brice Bachelor." Come and see the "Old Maids." They are worth twice the price of admission which is 10 cents. All under six years of age get in free.

A man may be able to get credit for his good intentions, but he is expected to pay real money for his coal.

American Farm Bureau

The Champion Live-Stock Judging Team of Minnesota. Upper, Left to Right, Alfred Steurnagle, Neil Selvig. Lower, Left to Right, Warren W. Simpson, Clarence Strehlow.

Warren W. Simpson lived with his widowed mother on a 40-acre farm at Northfield, Minn. A cripple from infantile paralysis, he entered the corn club in 1912 and by sheer will power and determination completed his project by actually crawling through the corn on his hands and knees in order to cultivate it. He not only succeeded in obtaining a yield of 105 bushels per acre, but at the same time his health improved so that he became able to walk.

With his prize money and larger returns from the little 40-acre farm, because of his increased knowledge of crop production, he went on through high school and last year finished an agricultural course at the University of Minnesota. He is now teaching agriculture in the Lewiston (Minn.) high school and doing club work by co-operating with the county agent and acting as local leader.

His team was the champion junior live stock judging team in the state of Minnesota in 1922 and represented that state in the noncollegiate live-stock judging contest at the International Live Stock exposition in Chicago, winning fourth, in competition with 20 states.

"When I was a club boy," said Mr. Simpson, while he was in Chicago, "I determined then and there to become a club leader or agricultural teacher in order that I might do for other boys and girls what was done for me in boys' and girls' club work."

It may be said that this case is exceptional, but "truth is stranger than fiction." Hundreds of club boys and girls are now acting as local leaders in their various communities and carrying on the good work in just as remarkable way as in the case of Warren Simpson.

Warren W. Simpson.

PLAN FOR MARKETING STOCK

Six Co-Operative Agencies in Which Shipper Is Stockholder Dispose of Farm Animals.

More than 12,000 cars of hogs, cattle, calves and sheep have been marketed by the six co-operative agencies established by the National Live Stock Producers' association during the last twelve months.

Agencies have been established at the Chicago, Peoria, Indianapolis, National Stock Yards, Illinois, Buffalo and Dallas terminals. Two of these agencies have been open for business less than a month. The Cattle Raisers and Producers' Commission company, Dallas, and the Producers' Co-operative Commission association were established November 1, 1922.

CONVENTION OF FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

O. E. Bradfute of Ohio Was Elected President With Dr. W. H. Walker Vice President.

O. E. Bradfute of Ohio was elected president of the American Farm Bureau federation at the fourth annual meeting of that organization held in Chicago. He follows J. R. Howard, who has been president of the national organization since it was formed three years ago. Dr. W. H. Walker of California is the new vice president. John W. Coverdale, who has been executive secretary of the organization for the last three years, was chosen by the executive committee as the executive secretary for 1923.

President O. E. Bradfute Had Served Two Years as Vice President Before His Election.

The new executive committee is as follows: Northeast group, Frank Smith of New York; Frank App of New Jersey, George Putnam of New Hampshire; central group, J. F. Reed of Minnesota, W. H. Settle of Indiana, Howard Leonard of Illinois; southern group, J. T. Orr of Texas, E. H. Woods of Kentucky, E. A. O'Neal of Alabama; western group, C. S. Brown of Arizona, J. F. Burton of Utah, J. M. Rodgers of Colorado.

Thirty-five states were represented at the national convention.

Oscar Edwin Bradfute, newly elected president, is one of America's best-known and most progressive farmers.

LESSON FOR JANUARY 28

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 16:19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy.—I Tim. 6:17.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Psalm 49:6-20; II Cor. 8:1-9; I Tim. 6:17-19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Story of a Rich Man and a Beggar.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Poor Rich Man and the Rich Poor Man.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Penalties of Selfishness.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Right Use of Wealth.

In this lesson we are afforded a peep into two worlds where we see disclosed extremes of character and conditions. No more graphic picture could be drawn showing the contrast of two lives. These lives were intended to be representative. The rich man descends from the highest pinnacle of worldly enjoyment to the depths of endless misery. The poor beggar ascends from utter wretchedness and misery to the loftiest heights of blessing.

I. Contrasted Lives (vv. 19-21).

1. The Rich Man (v. 19). He lived in a mansion secluded from the common people. He was clothed in costly raiment; his outer garments were of purple and his inner garments of fine linen. He fed upon the richest food that could be provided. His sin was to selfishly indulge his appetites without consideration for others.

2. The Beggar (vv. 20, 21). He was laid at the rich man's gate with the hope of getting at least the crumbs from his table. The dogs of the street were more kind to him than the rich man. Lazarus means "God is a help," indicating that a godly life shone through his poverty. We learn from these contrasted lives that worldly condition is no sure test of a man's state in the sight of God. Rich men are not all wicked or selfish, and not all poor men are godly.

II. Contrasted Deaths and Funerals (v. 22).

1. The Beggar. He was found dead and his body hurried off to a pauper's grave. No notice was taken of it by the world.

2. The Rich Man. He also died. His gold could not bribe the messenger of death. Doubtless a costly funeral was held, attended by those who moved in his class of society. Death is the common end to which all classes must come.

III. Contrasted Destinies (v. 23).

1. The Beggar. He was at once carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. The souls of believers are especially cared for at the hour of death.

2. The Rich Man. Though he had an elaborate funeral he lifted up his eyes in hell, being in torment. When the vail of futurity is lifted we see that the positions of these men are reversed. The poor man was in the company of just men made perfect, because of his godly life while on earth, and the rich man is stripped of his purple and fine linen and cast into hell with all wicked men, because while on earth he only lived for selfish ends.

IV. The Reality and Fixedness of Life Beyond the Grave (vv. 24-31).

1. The Cry for Mercy (v. 24). Dives, which is the Latin name for "rich man," was now willing to claim relationship to Abraham. He was keenly conscious, and the appetites which controlled him while on earth were still with him. Instead of a means of gratification they were now an instrument of torture. Part of the torment of hell will be the cravings of appetite and lust, with no means of their gratification.

2. Abraham's Reply (v. 25). This reply cast the matter back upon the man's memory. He said, "Son, remember." The lashings of a guilty conscience will be most real in hell.

3. Their Fixedness (v. 26). Human destinies are fixed by the choices during the life. When one passes out of this life he enters into an unchangeable state and condition.

4. God's Word and the All-Sufficient Light (vv. 27-31). Dives now requested that Lazarus go on an errand of mercy to his brethren. He regarded the testimony of a spirit of more value than the Word of God. [illegible]

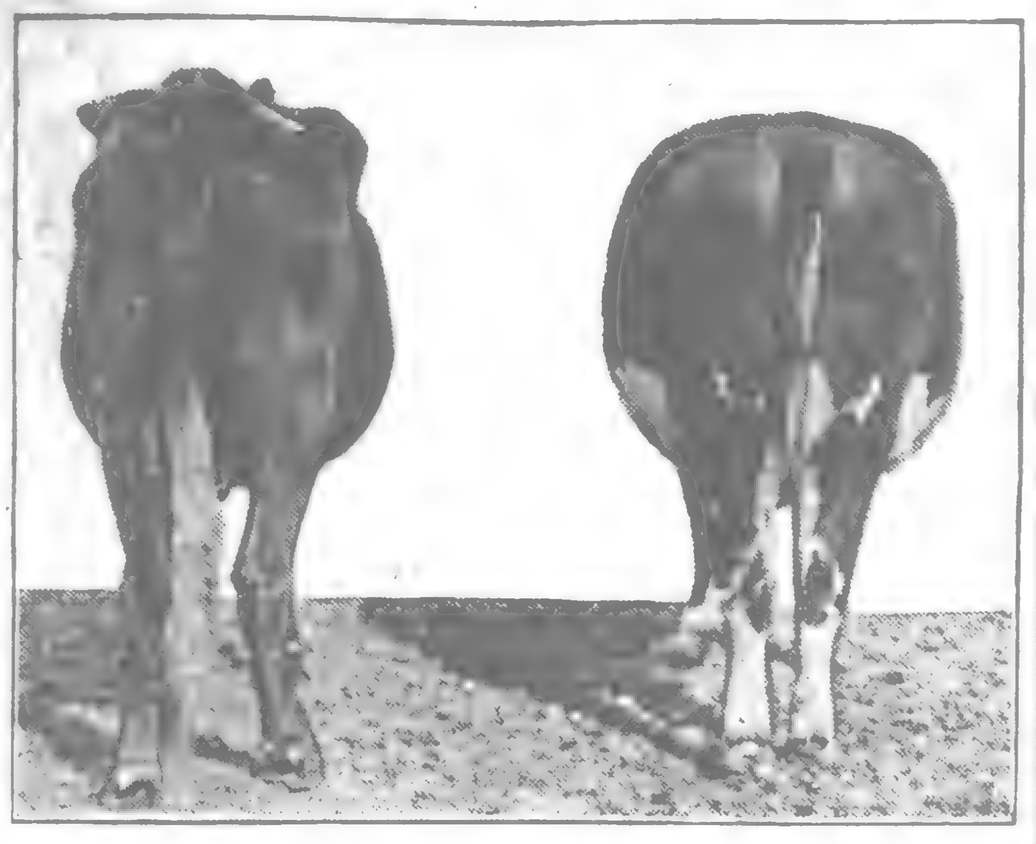
BIG UTILITY VALUE OF PUREBREDS



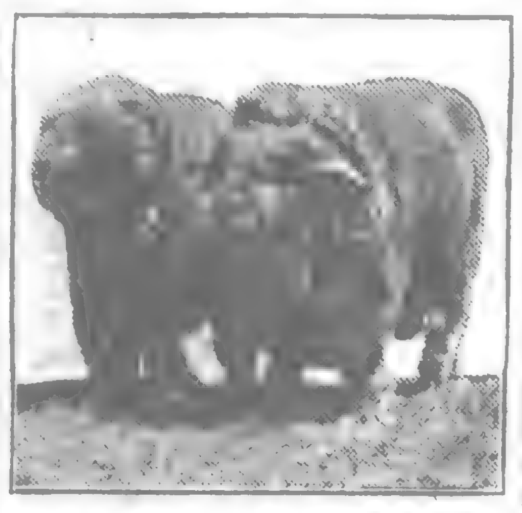
A Purebred Beef Cow Compared With a Scrub.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Based on utility value alone—apart from breeding or sales value—purebred live stock has an earning power from a third to one-half greater than scrub stock, the average superiority of purebreds for all classes of farm animals being about 40 per cent. This is the conclusion of the United States Department of Agriculture after weighing the opinions of more than 500 farmers and stockmen owning about 25,000 head of breeding stock and close to 30,000 fowls. These men are all participating in the Better Sires-Better Stock campaign, a systematic plan conducted by the Department of Agriculture and various states in improving the average quality of live stock in the country. A list of questions relating to the value of purebred live stock was sent to these participants and the answers, after thorough analysis, were used as the basis of Department Circular 235, "Utility Value of Purebred Live Stock," by D. S. Burch, which has just been issued.

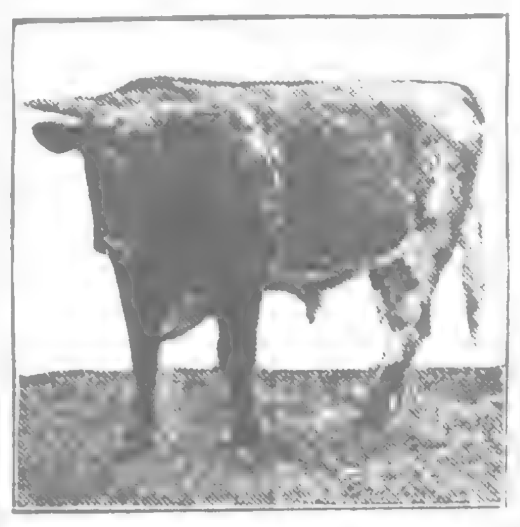
Big Points of Purebreds.

Of the principal points in which purebreds excel other stock, according to the circular, the most prominent are: Superiority and uniformity in conformation and type, greater sale value, early maturity, and the economy in the conversion of feed into meat, milk, wool and work.



Purebred Rambouillet Rams.

The comments of many of the farmers questioned indicate the value of the different points listed. Says a Virginia farmer: "My purebred stock weigh as much at fifteen months as my scrubs did at three years—a saving of 21 months in feed and labor, besides getting a better price. They are early maturing, easy keepers and good producers."



A Good Bull Is Half the Herd.

"My cows have more than doubled in milk production," says a Pennsylvanian. "Scrub and grade cows used to give me about 4,000 pounds of milk a year, while my purebreds average over 8,000 pounds."

Uniformly Good.

A breeder in Washington state makes this observation: "I find the young of purebred stock are uniformly good, while with scrub stock there usually are one or two good ones to eight or ten poor ones." A Montana ranchman says he has increased the weight per fleece on 10,000 sheep from six pounds to eleven and one-half pounds—almost 100 per cent—as a result of the use of purebred sires.

Many stockmen emphasize the greater salability of purebreds. "Buyers in this locality come to me first," is a frequent comment.

The circular contains much good advice on improvement of live stock, based upon farm experience. Copies may be obtained without cost from the Department of Agriculture, Washington.

WEATHER FORECASTS AID TO BEEKEEPERS

Predictions of Much Value in Fall and in Spring.

Instance of Importance of Service Related by New York Apiculturists Who Used Telephone to Inform Neighbors.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Beekeepers are dependent on weather conditions to prevent large winter losses, part of which occurs if they do not know when to put their bees in the cellar in the fall, or if the bees are removed from winter quarters too early in the spring. On the other hand, it is advantageous to give the bees the benefit of cleansing flights as soon as possible in the spring and as late as possible before cold weather sets in. Close attention is paid to the weather forecasts, especially in the northern states.

An instance of the way in which the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture co-operates with beekeepers occurred recently in New York state. There are approximately 15,000 beekeepers there, half of whom winter their bees in cellars. When the weather map indicated the approach of severe weather, with no indications for a bee flight in sight, telegrams were sent by the state extension apiarist to secretaries of all county and regional associations. MAKING FRUITS ATTRACTIVE Consumers Favor Produce With Nice Appearance, Uniform in Size and Color.

Consumers who buy either at the corner grocery or of the huckster in the cities buy by appearance. They like to get fruit that looks nice. A basket of apples may be just as fine flavored and have the same average size, but if they are mixed up of various sizes and colors the city consumer will pay considerable more money for the basket that sits beside it with uniform color and size, for it looks more attractive. A half-dozen small potatoes in a basket may cut the price down enough to have made it profitable to have thrown them away and a half-dozen big potatoes with them rather than keep them. Uniformity is the first point to keep in mind and then quality and size come in line. The quality may be there but it doesn't appeal. Catch the eye and the sale is half made.

SHELTER FOR DAIRY HEIFERS

As Important to Get Young Animal Inside as It Is to Protect Cow Giving Milk.

It is just as important to get young dairy heifers inside when cold weather sets in, as it is the cow that is giving milk. Young animals that are to produce next spring need shelter and good feed this fall and winter if they are to be in good condition for their work next season. Iowa college dairymen say it is better to put young cows into barns when the first freeze comes and feed them a grain ration, than to try to get all the feed out of the pasture or corn field.

Adopt Hog Self-Feeders.

More than 23,000 farmers adopted the use of self-feeders for hogs in 1921, following demonstrations by extension workers, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT WORK

Gained Strength, Weight and Now Doing Own Work, by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Marion, Ind.—"I was all run-down, nervous and bent over. I could hardly drag around, let alone do my work. I read some letters in the papers telling what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and I thought I would try it. Then a man told my husband about his wife and what good it had done her and wanted him to have me try it. I took one bottle and could see what it did for me in a week's time, and when I had taken three bottles I had gained both in strength and weight and was doing my own work. I took it before my last baby was born and it helped me so much. I sure am glad to recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who suffers from female ailments, for I know by experience what it can do. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, also the Liver Pills, too, and think them fine."—Mrs. Wm. Eldridge, 620 E. Grant Street, Marion, Indiana.

A record of nearly fifty years service should convince you of the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

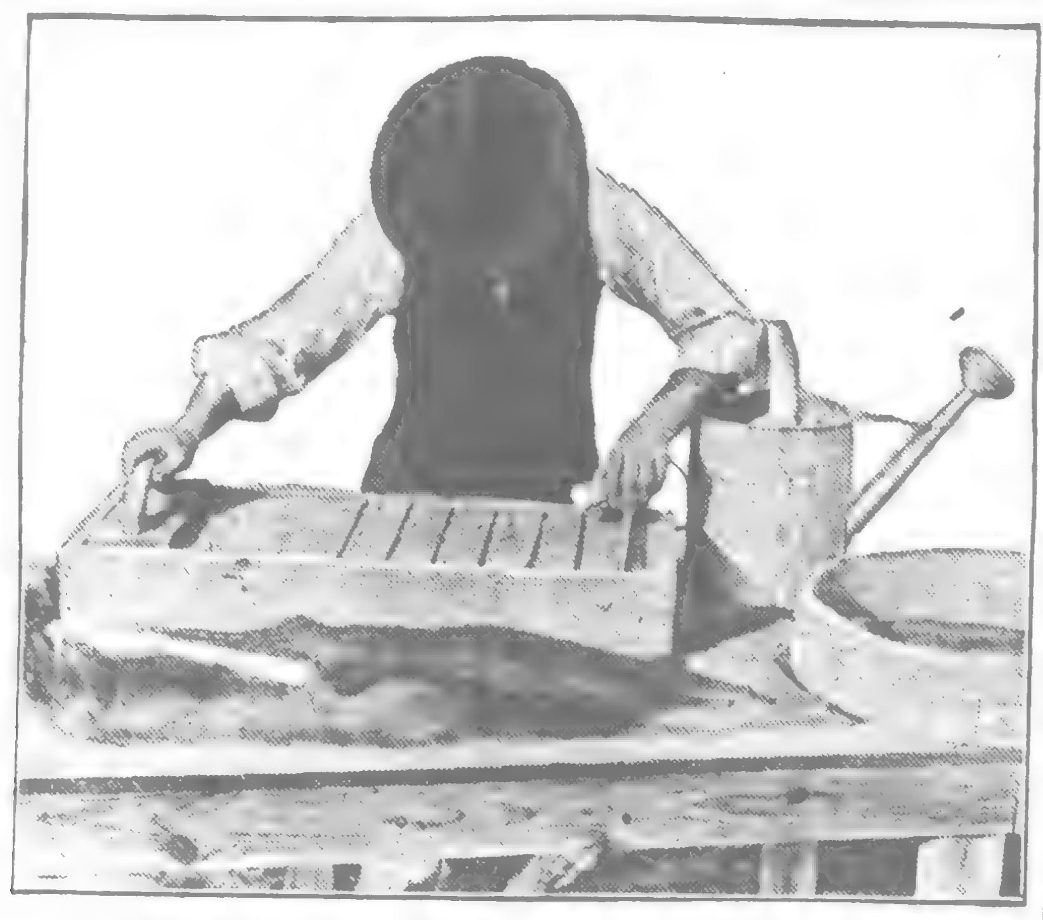
The Cottage Gardener



The Successful Gardener Plants the Seeds in a Flat Tray, to Be Set in a Window on the Living Room Floor or in the Basement Where It Is Warm and Sunny.

START THE PLANTS IN WINDOW BOXES

All Vegetable and Flower Seeds Respond to Warmth and the Bright Sunshine.

A window box for starting early vegetable plants will give the home gardener from ten days to three weeks advantage in earliness over his neighbor who does not have some means of starting early plants. Tomatoes, peppers, eggplants, cabbage, cauliflower and lettuce are the crops that lend themselves best to starting early in the house. It does not matter what kind of a box is used, but for convenience it should be about 8 or 4 inches deep and of a size that will readily fit into the window space. The box can be set on a small table or on special legs or supports.

The Home-Made Flat.

One method of providing a window box is described by the United States Department of Agriculture. Take a soap box or some similar packing box and saw it horizontally lengthwise into two sections. If the box is too deep for sawing through the center, two cuts can be made, using the top of the box with cover nailed on to form the bottom tray and the bottom part of the box for a second tray. The middle section which is cut out may have a bottom nailed onto it, forming still another tray. Only one tray will be needed in the window at first for the sowing of the seeds. Later additional trays or flats, as they are called, are required for transplanting.

One point of great importance in starting early plants in the window is to see that they are not over watered. Another point is to turn the box from time to time so that the plants will not grow crooked and drawn toward the window. A supply of good soil should be stored in the cellar or in some dry place in the autumn in order to have it available along in February or March when it is wanted for filling the window boxes. This soil should be of a light loam or sandy nature and the part used in the transplanting trays should contain a very little finely sifted manure well mixed with the soil. The plants should be shaded for a day or so and kept well watered after transplanting, but as the season advances the trays should be carried into the open air whenever it is warm enough and the plants exposed to outdoor conditions so that they will be sturdy and accustomed to the open air by the time it is safe to set them in the garden. In removing the plants from the trays for setting in the ground a knife or trowel should be run between them so that they may be lifted with a nice block of earth adhering to their roots.

BEET CONTAINS IRON

The beet is said to be especially valuable as an article of diet because it contains a larger portion of iron than other vegetables.

SHOULD FERTILIZE TO GET GOOD CROP

Stable Manure, Soil Building Crops, or Commercial Fertilizer Necessary.

Most farmers can spare enough manure from their other crops to fertilize properly a one-fourth acre garden plot, but in some sections, especially near towns, manure is no longer to be had in quantity and other means must be found for fertilizing garden soils. In brief, states the United States Department of Agriculture, at least three methods of adding fertility to the soil. First, by the application of manure; second, by the use of soil building crops, and, third, by commercial fertilizers. No one method is as good as any two or the three combined, and if we are to get the best results from the use of commercial fertilizer a reasonable amount of manure or organic matter must be in the soil.

The amount of manure required will depend entirely upon the soil itself, but very few cases are found where the use of manure on gardens is being overdone. The same might be said about the turning under of manure crops or soil building crops. Even the weeds that grow upon the surface during the late summer, aside from their seeds, are often valuable for working into the soil. The method of applying the manure will also depend upon local conditions, but as a rule manure that has been piled and thoroughly composted will give better results than that which is in the raw state.

Too much cannot be said in favor of the compost pile by means of which equal parts of manure and soil or sods, which are even better are piled to rot. This compost heap should be turned once or twice during the winter months and the material applied to the garden as a top dressing during the spring. Ten tons of this kind of material will not be too much for the ordinary one-fourth acre garden.

Intensive Fertilization.

Commercial fertilizers are used for adding plant food to the garden and give best results when used in conjunction with stable manure or com post. Commercial gardeners often use as much as 4,000 pounds to the acre for special crops like celery, but generally speaking 400 or 500 pounds of a fertilizer containing 3 or 4 per cent nitrogen, 8 per cent phosphoric acid and 2 to 4 per cent potash, will be all that is needed on a one-fourth-acre garden. Fertilizers should be used most heavily on corn, potatoes, cabbage and the root crops and more lightly on beans, peas and tomatoes.

SHARP TOOLS

The majority of gardeners enjoy the task more when the tools are sharp. File the edge of your hoe and spade before time to work in the garden.

GOOD ROADS

ROAD SYSTEMS FOR DEFENSE

General Staff of Army Indicates What Road Development Is Needed for Military.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Road development needed for national defense as planned by the general staff of the army has recently been indicated to the Department of Agriculture by the secretary of war and the information has been placed in the hands of the engineers of the bureau of public roads who are at the present time getting into final shape the plan for the system of federal-aid highways. This system will consist of approximately 180,000 miles of road, so laid out as to serve all parts of the country and will be built by the states in conjunction with federal aid.

The general staff has been investigating the subject since 1919, the bureau of public roads collaborating. Briefly summarized, the report made is as follows: There are certain vital areas along the boundaries of the United States against which any invasion will probably be directed. These areas have been outlined by the general staff. For military purposes they should be connected with the centers of production and storage and industrial centers. The roads will then become strategic lines of supply and will usually conform with roads located for other purposes. Transcontinental routes are of no particular value for military purposes.

The plan submitted by the War department shows important centers that should be connected, but does not give detailed routes. Engineers of the bureau state that these points can be connected by roads without any serious dislocation of the plan of development for other purposes and that in general the military need for roads conforms with surprising closeness to the commercial and economic needs. It is thought that the plan submitted can be embodied in the federal-aid highway system and thus make the system an importat factor in our plan of national defense.

Cement Road Built to Carry Heavy Traffic.

Roads of a purely military nature such as those leading to coast fortifications have not been included in the plan submitted and will be handled by the War department as heretofore.

BENEFITS OF BETTER ROADS

Farmer Enabled to Transport Fruits and Vegetables to City and Take Back Meat.

Proper food is one of the greatest necessities if the health of the community is to be properly preserved. Better roads mean better food. In years past, the farmer too often lived on a restricted diet of salt pork, corned beef, smoked meats, and other foods which could be prepared on the farm, while the city dweller did not have the advantage of fresh fruits and vegetables. As roads are improved, the farmer is enabled to bring his produce to the city for the use of that community and take back for himself fresh meats and other foods only obtainable in the city.

GAS CONSUMPTION INCREASED

Tests in Pavement Traction Problems Show That More Fuel Is Required on Dirt Road.

According to tests in the problem of pavement traction, gasoline consumption by motor vehicles is increased in traveling over a dirt road. Concrete highways show the least resistance to traction in terms of miles per gallon. Brick, macadam and gravel are next in order.

Laws Are Different.

Recently a tourist in passing through four states was required to buy four different sets of lenses in order that his headlights would comply with state laws. More uniformity in highway regulation is [illegible].

STAR-NOSED MOLE

"Such a strange little creature as I am," said the Star-Nosed Mole to Billie Brownie, who had come to call.

"I have curious ways and I am different from others. I don't like to be the same as others, do you, Billie Brownie?"

"Oh, dear no," said Billie Brownie. "If I were the same as every one else I am sure I would get quite mixed up and confused so that I would not know if I were myself or not.

"Yes, I am sure that that would happen. I would be wondering whether I were Billie Brownie or the neighboring Brownie!

"And if all other creatures were alike—what a very dull world it would be.

"Now, boys and girls and ladies and gentlemen are very nice, very nice indeed," continued Billie Brownie. "But if all the world were made up of boys and girls and ladies and gentlemen I wouldn't find it so interesting as I do now.

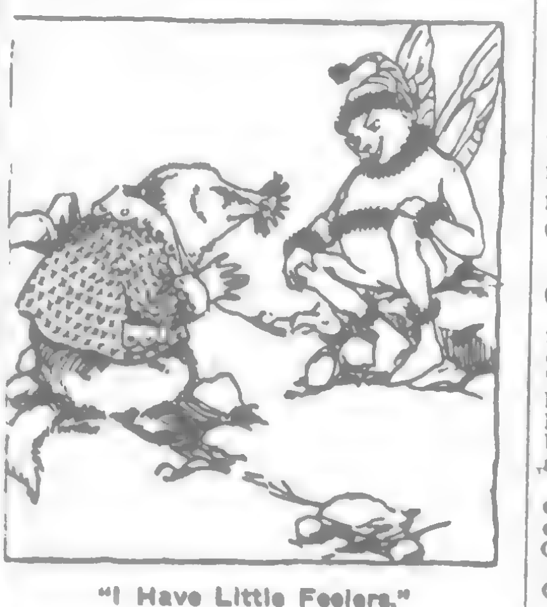
"I would feel very badly if there were no horses and dogs and cows and chickens, lions and tigers, elephants and birds, and the Star-Nosed Mole and his family!"

The Star-Nosed Mole wiggled his nose and chuckled.

"How polite you are, Billie Brownie, to put me into that list too.

"But I agree with you. It would not be a nice world if all creatures were alike.

"Now, I like Star-Nosed Moles. I think they're pleasant. I like my own relatives and my own family. I've nothing against them.



"I Have Little Feelers."

"But it would be horrible if all the world were made up of Star-Nosed Moles—perfectly horrible.

"I don't suppose there would be any Star-Nosed Moles after a time if there were only Star-Nosed Moles in the first place."

"That is a very strange thing to say," said Billie Brownie. "And I am sure I do not understand it at all. I would be ever so grateful to you, Star-Nosed Mole, if you would explain.

"Won't you, please? I beg of you to explain."

"I'll explain," said the Star-Nosed Mole. "You needn't beg it of me. I will do it willingly, even eagerly, even anxiously, even gladly!

"You see," the Star-Nosed Mole continued, "I have the same ways as other Star-Nosed Moles. We are very strong. But in order to keep that strength we must eat. And we must eat a great deal.

"We would actually starve if we didn't eat every few hours. We must eat most of the time. That isn't because we are so greedy. It is our way.

"We have to do this to keep our strength.

"As I said, it would be awful if all the world were made up of Star-Nosed Moles—and you want me to explain what I meant when I said there would be no Star-Nosed Moles after a time if such a thing happened.

"For we must eat insects, plenty of insects. So you see there must be insects in the world if there are to be Star-Nosed Moles!"

"Now I understand," said Billie Brownie. "I'm glad I came to call on you. You're a most lively and interesting little creature."

"Thanks, thanks," said the Star-Nosed Mole. "And I suppose you'd like to know about my name?"

Billie Brownie nodded his head.

"I have little feelers on the end of my nose which some folks think make me look as though my nose were star-shaped. I love my name, don't you Billie Brownie?"

"Indeed I do," said Billie Brownie.

"But please—when you go back and tell my story to others—please mention that I do not destroy the vegetable roots that I am accused of destroying. That is the work of the field mice who dig [illegible] under the ground.

Japanese Poetry Contest.

"Mountain Cloud at Dawn" is the subject chosen this year by the emperor of Japan for the annual poetry contest. In the days of the Kyoto court, only court nobles and poets participated, but now anyone can contribute. The best poems are read to the emperor. Verse making has always been one of the national pastimes of the Japanese people. Emperor Meiji used to compose a poem every day, and his consort also left a collection of verses.

Enormous Cost of the World War.

An estimate made in behalf of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace shows that the cost of the World war exceeded $335,000,000,000. This amount is equal to the combined wealth of the United States, France and Great Britain when the war began.

The war has made table linen very valuable. The use of Red Cross Ball Blue will add to its wearing qualities. Use it and see. All grocers.—Advertisement.

LUMBAGO

Lumbago is a painfull rheumatic condition affecting the muscles and tendons of the loins, which attach to the spinal column. In the majority of cases it is due to and accident, as, a sudden twist, jerk, wrench or strain. When this occurs the bones in the lower part of the spinal column are drawn out of alignment and press on the nerves, passing out between them, which supply the muscles and tendons in this locality, creating the condition known as lumbago. It is not hard to understand that the quickest way to relieve this condition would be to adjust the bones to their proper place, thereby removing the nerve pressure. This is very rapidly accomplished by Chiropractic Spinal Adjustments and is almost always followed by immediate relief.

The Formula for Eggs

Conkey's Buttermilk Laying Mash for eggs and Conkey's Scratch Grains for body maintenance and exercise—that is the Conkey way of feeding. Hens prefer scratch grains to mash if given a choice, but it is the mash and not the grains that makes the eggs. Arrange to feed so the hens will consume twice as much mash as grain by measure.

Conkey's
The Original
Buttermilk Laying Mash

Balanced egg-making ration just right in animal protein (needed for eggs) and low in fibre (indigestible waste matter). No mill sweepings, shell, alfalfa, ground hay or trashy filler. All nutritious feed—clean and sweet.

Conkey's contains wholesome meat scraps, granulated bone, grains ground to proper fineness, and fresh concentrated buttermilk. We use Semi-Solid Buttermilk only. Mixed with exacting care and scientific accuracy, it gets remarkable results in a perfectly natural way, without ruinous artificial stimulation. It is Nature's balanced egg-maker.

Insist on Conkey's—in Original Packages

For best results, feed all three Conkey Buttermilk Feeds—one each for Starting, Growing and Laying. Don't break the Chain of Conkey's Original Buttermilk Feeds. Ask for Conkey's and always get in Original Packages. Big Poultry Book Free. Ask for it. (91)

Obituary

James Henry Murray, whose memory we honor today, was born in Seneca County, Ohio, November 9, 1839, passed away very suddenly January 14, 1923. He was the youngest son of James and Nancy (Herrin) Murray.

Before he was a year old his father died and he was reared by his widowed mother, with whom he came to Allen Co., in the year of 1854 and settled in Cedar Creek township which was then an unbroken forest, abounding in wild game. Here he lived until 1860 when he came to Spencerville, DeKalb County, which has since been his home.

Here he went into the milling business with his stepfather, John Zimmerman. At the death of the latter, Thomas Murray, a brother of the deceased, became his partner and this partnership continued until the death of Thomas, January 6, 1911.

On January 30, 1873 he was married to Margaret D. Langley, a native of West Virginia, who preceded him to the Great Beyond twelve years ago. To them were born two daughters, Mrs. Mabel M. Erick and Mrs. Winifred L. Shook, both of whom survive their father. He is also held in loving memory by six grandchildren who have grown up about him and who are as follows: Murray Enos Erick, San Francisco, Cal, William Beeks Erick, Spencerville, Dr. Hubert Shook, Cincinnati, Ohio, Donald [illegible] Henry Murray and Richard LaMar Shook all of Spencerville. Also three great grandchildren who were especially dear to him: Betty Virginia E[illegible] of California, William Beeks Erick Jr, and Wayne Leroy Shook of Spencerville.

Mr. Murray was a man of high [illegible] character, always [illegible] for truth and right.

Everything Points to the Greatest Spring Demand for Ford Pruducts in Company's History

1,202,517 Ford Cars and Trucks were delivered to retail purchasers in the United States alone during 1922--

Actual deliveries for last month greatly exceeded any previous December in the history of the Ford Motor Company--

It was the ninth consecutive month in which more than 100,000 Ford Cars and Trucks were retailed--keeping the Ford Plants working at a capacity to meet dealers' requirements--

In many parts of the country dealers are already finding it necessary to specify later delivery dates on certain types because there are no reserve stocks to draw from--

Commercial users, business houses and farmers, anticipating their future requirements, are placing orders and taking delivery of Ford Cars, Trucks and Fordson Tractors to insure against delay--

Everything points to the biggest shortage of Ford Products this Spring that has ever existed--

The only way you can be sure of obtaining delivery of a Ford Car, Truck or Fordson Tractor is to list your order immediately--

We have given you these facts as they actually exist so that if you are planning to purchase a Ford Car, Truck or Tractor for use this Spring or Summer, you can list your order now and take advantage of our dealer,s first opportunity to make delivery.

"FOUND HIM!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned.

An hour later Drace and Shottle returned to their hotel after a ceremonious visit with Colonel Josh. The Colonel knew of Stepho, had indeed met him once, and he promised to make discreet inquiries that should without fail disclose the creole's whereabouts.

Hardly had Drace reached his room, however, before a visitor was shown in—a visitor who introduced himself as an agent of the New Orleans police department and who had a most distressing communication to make:

It was known that Mr. Drace and his friend had taken part in a recent riot. Mr. Drace was one of the leaders, had severely wounded more than one man, and without cause, being from the North, just arrived, and having no possible interest in the city. However, he was to be treated with more of lenity than would rhyme with his crime, for instead of punishment he was only to be banished, along with his friend. A steamboat, the Bumblebee, bound northward, would leave next morning. The chief of police would grieve if Mr. Drace and his friend failed to register among the passengers.

With scarcely twelve hours left in which to find Stepho la Vitte, Drace paced the streets in an agony of anxiety, making a hundred plans to find

[illegible]

Routed out of bed, the Colonel kept Drace waiting a full half hour before he put in an appearance. Then, however, he offered a faint ray of hope. He had discovered that a certain Frenchman, a wine dealer, living at an address he produced scrawled on paper, was reported to be an intimate of Stepho. Possibly from him Mr. Drace might—

Drace hurriedly explained the decree which had banished him; then he "presented" the Colonel with a check on account, asked him to convey his respects to Miss Lucy and took his departure.

On his way to the Frenchman's he stopped at the hotel, where he found Shottle strapping up their baggage—and a police official paying an informal but suggestive call. An hour's grace remained. Drace paid his score at the desk, sent his baggage to the boat and then, summoning a cab, drove off with Shottle to the house of the Frenchman. It proved to be a mean abode, both wineshop and dwelling. Drace knocked eagerly. A small man, his mustache dyed, came to the door, blinking.

"I beg your pardon, sir, but I am a friend of Mr. la Vitte, and—"

"Pardon, monsieur, but you do not look like him, se friend."

"But I am. And I came with word that will be of advantage to him. The police are after him—"

"Aw, he know zat. Monsieur would trouble himself for nothing. Good morning."

"Just a moment, please. You have no need to look on me with suspicion. I am his friend—and—"

"If you his friend," interrupted the man, "you know he gone—to Europe, on steamer to France."

Drace was about to abandon the man in despair when Shottle, who had been staring at a case of wine which stood by the door ticketed and sealed for shipment, suddenly interrupted.

"Ah," he cried, "can this be the famous Chateau Yquem?" And brushing past the Frenchman, he leaned over as if to examine the bottle. With a cry, the wine merchant shoved him rudely away. "Zat is ze private stock," he snarled. "He is not for sale. I am not yet open for business, sirs. Good morning."

Shottle grasped Drace's arm and drew him away. A cart had halted outside, and as they entered their cab they saw the carter shouldering the case of wine and bearing toward his vehicle.

As they turned the corner, a deep-throated blast from the Bumblebee sounded a warning. Shottle turned upon the disappointed Drace with a gleeful countenance. "Master," he said, "I'll thank you for that money again. I've found him."

"Found him!" exclaimed Drace. "How?"

"That case of wine was addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. That wine is going to Stepho on the Bumblebee. And so are we!"

An hour later Drace sat with Shottle on the deck of the Bumblebee, watching the ever-changing panorama of the Mississippi and musing upon the sudden shifting of his quest.

"Liberty," asked Drace presently, "how far up is this Farnum's Landing? Do you recall it?"

"Yes," said Liberty. "I know this river. Farnum's Landing is—by golly!" he exclaimed, breaking off, "Farnum's Landing is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing! And General Bethpage is my uncle! We'll go there."

"But," Drace said dubiously, "he's not my uncle, and I'm afraid it would be intruding somewhat on his hospitality to—"

"Nothing of the sort," averred Liberty. "Any friend of mine would be doubly welcome. You can't know much about the General. Taming, now, but he used to be the most remarkable character, in a quiet way, along the river. And when I tell you about him, Virgil, you'll laugh. Before the war he was professor [illegible] a little college up in the [illegible] country. He entered the army as a colonel and came out as a brigadier."

"I don't see anything to laugh at in that."

"No, but wait. He had considerable money, and at times used to come down to New Orleans to enjoy himself. [illegible] don't want to play his value in money, but him, I tell you,' says the General. 'Say the word, and I'll bet him on one of these numbers.' He had been losing every bet, and the proprietor knew that it would be safe. So he says: 'All right, go ahead.'

[illegible]

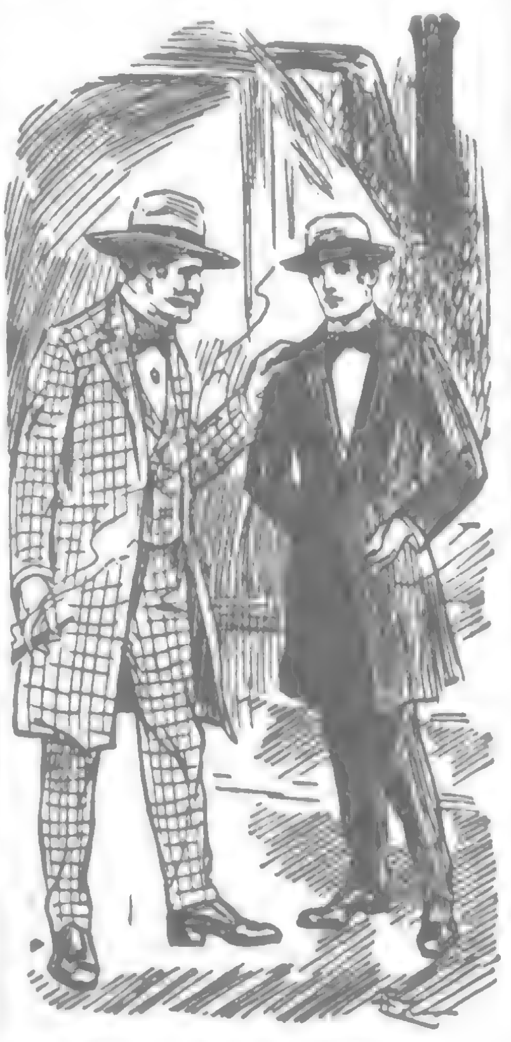
"The General wasn't sober, so he calls the darky and says: 'Dip, stand here with your forefingers on number twenty, right here.' The darky did so, and they turned the wheel, everybody laughing. Well, sir, if twenty didn't win, the world is a puffball! Won, and the owner of the place turned pale! He knew that he'd have to pay or close up his house. So he says: 'All right, get at his value, and I'll pay the bet.' 'Value!' cries the General. 'I didn't bet his value, but him. I want thirty-five Guinea negroes. Size them up to him.' "

"What a farce!" commented Drace.

"Was it? Well, I reckon not. They had to go out and buy thirty-five Guinea negroes. It took quite a while, but the General waited. And when they had all been sized up, the General went up the River, with his thirty-five Guinea negroes trailing after him."

Now Drace could see the picture of it, and he laughed. This was the man he was going to visit!

The Bumblebee was jointly owned and operated by Major Pewitt and a young fellow named William Hawkins. It was a fine steamer, but while it was cunningly masked as a public carrier, Shottle was quick to discover that it was in truth a nomad gambler, profuse in entertainment that taxed not the giver. But the entertainment sought by this pelican, as the gamesters termed Shottle, was not of wine from France, the fish-egg from Russia or venison from America's native woods, but spades, hearts, diamonds and clubs. And while the Bee still lay at the wharf, breathing low and blubberously through her nostrils, Shottle had put in operation a quickly contrived "touch," presenting himself to Major Pewitt before he had taken the time to introduce his friend to that well-known character.



The Major Cleared His Throat and Gently Laid His Hand on Drace's Shoulder.

Now, however, Major Pewitt strolled up; and Shottle, keen to get to the gaming table, introduced Pewitt to Drace and then a moment later himself slipped away.

"We are on our way to visit Shottle's uncle, General Bethpage," explained Drace.

"What, my old friend and fellow-soldier, Bethpage! Never a nobler man drew sword in defense of what he conceived to be right. If you like a genial atmosphere and a company that never tires, you will remain with him as long as possible and still too short a time. I earnestly hope that you may find inducement to settle among us."

"Possibly I may. I like the River. I like the study of character. In character there is all history, all philosophy, all—"

"Just so," the Major agreed. "And we have some remarkable characters here, sir, and some of the most beautiful women in the world; to some people it may appear a little singular, but interesting character among men always develops in an atmosphere producing beauty among women."

"And naturally, Major, you are acquainted with both characters and beauty. And by the way, did you ever meet an old fellow—let me see, what is his name? Oh, I think they call him Stepho — something. Oh, yes — La Vitte?"

The Major cleared his throat and gently laid his hand on Drace's shoulder.

"My young friend, they have told you about the most implacable and desperate of men, sir. I know the man, and while nature did not intend —and I beg your pardon for what might seem a want of modesty—that I should fear any human being, yet I confess to an occasional uneasiness in [illegible]

Mrs. Gross Praises Tanlac for Overcoming Stomach Trouble—Says Results Are Priceless.

"Before I took Tanlac I only weighed ninety-four pounds and scarcely had strength to sweep the floor; but now I weigh one hundred and thirty-two and am as healthy and happy as can be." This remarkable statement was made, recently, by Mrs. Mabel Gross, 1137 Aldrich St., N., Minneapolis, Minn.

"For nearly two years I had been in a seriously weakened condition and suffered nearly all the time from headache and backache. My nerves were beyond my control and I was terribly dizzy. I couldn't half sleep and my stomach was so out of order that even the sight of food nauseated me.

"The benefits I have received from Tanlac are priceless. I am now a perfectly well woman and my friends often speak of how healthy I look. Health is worth everything, and that is what Tanlac has meant to me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

CLASH IS WON BY DEMOCRATS

Catch Republicans Napping When Four of Them Are Absent.

PRESENTS STATE POLICE BILL

Bill Provides for $300,000—Salary Increase for Judges Fails in Senate—Land Bill Makes Bow—Agree on Economy Plan.

Indianapolis.—An unexpected well-prepared attack on Republican plans by Democratic members of the house of representatives caught the Republicans unawares and resulted in a nominal victory for the Democrats in the first party clash of the session. Representative Thurman Gottschalk, Democratic floor leader, moved that the governor be asked to submit contracts and other information concerning the reformatory project at Pendleton. The vote caught four Republicans absent, and the result was 49 to 47 for the motion. One Republican, Representative Clarence C. Wysong of Indianapolis, voted with the Democrats, thus being in a position to call for reconsideration if the Republican majority desires.

State Police Bill.

The state rural police bill, introduced in the senate by Senator Robert L. Moorhead of Indianapolis, provides for the conversion of $300,000 of the revenue now held in the auto thief fund for the establishment and maintenance of the department for the first year. The rural police subject is one which caused a hot controversy in the last session, in which a similar bill died.

Senator Moorhead said there is in excess of $300,000 now in the fund raised by the payment of fees for certificate of titles for motor vehicles. The measure provides for the transfer of this sum into the police fund, to be used for all expenses incurred during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1924. For the second year an appropriation of $175,000 is provided.

The minimum numbers of members of the state rural police department will be 84, the measure provides. This number would constitute one troop. It would be possible, however, to establish "one or more" troops.

Two lively fights—one which resulted in killing a bill to increase the salaries of the judges of the Supreme and Appellate courts and the other which resulted in the death of a move to repeal the three-mile road law—the introduction of 11 new bills, including the Democratic tax measure, the withdrawal of the bill to repeal the state-wide features of the primary law and reports of several committees featured a session of the senate.

The fight on the salary increase bill, which was introduced several days ago by Senator William E. English (Marion, Rep.), and which is similar to bills on that subject that have been introduced at previous legislative sessions, was begun after a divided report had been submitted by the committee on judiciary A, to which the bill had been referred.

Agree on Economy Plan.

A fixed policy for retrenchment and economy, including in its scope the abolition of more than 30 state departments and commissions, was announced by the senate Democrats in caucus in the Claypool hotel.

"The purpose," said Senator Joseph M. Cravens of Madison, Democratic floor leader, "is to reduce the expenses of the state to such an extent that in the next biennial period our government may be run without additional taxation and on top of that the state will be able to pay off some of its debt."

Representative William M. Love, of Hammond, introduced in the Indiana house of representatives a bill that would make it mandatory for the auditor of state to sell state lands at public auction at not less than their legally appraised value. Private sale of such lands would be prohibited by the bill.

Would Correct Tax Fault.

Increasing the mortgage exemption on real estate of $10,000 is proposed in a bill introduced in the upper house by Senator Weldon Lambert of Columbus. Such a law would remove more than $1,000,000 of assessed property valuation from the tax duplicate, members of the state board of tax commissioners estimated.

The present law limits exemption to $1,000. It requires, as would the Lambert measure, that in no instance can the deduction be for an amount exceeding 50 per cent of the assessed valuation of the property.

Compilations of mortgage exemptions in [illegible] show that the $1,000 limit wiped [illegible] in property from the tax books.

Bedford.—A jury in police court found Henry Tow guilty of violation of the liquor law and fixed his penalty at $500 and costs and 180 days in jail, the heaviest penalty ever given in a liquor violation case. Tow has appealed the case to the Lawrence Circuit court. He was arrested following a raid by state prohibition officers and the sheriff of Lawrence county of a cave six miles south of Bedford. The officers found a quantity of mash, 200 pounds of sugar and a part of a still.

Indianapolis.—Philip Zoercher, member of the state board of tax commissioners, will continue another year as chairman of the educational committee of the chamber of commerce. His appointment was announced by Felix M. McWhirter, president of the chamber, with the selection of Frank E. Gavin to head the chamber of commerce committee on legislation and legal affairs.

English.—The following officers were installed by Capitola Rebekah lodge, No 762: Miss Lona Turley, noble grand; Mrs. J. R. Head, vice grand; Miss Della Byrd, recording secretary; Mrs. James F. Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her old, worn, faded things new. Even if she has never dyed before, she can put a new, rich color into shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything. Buy Diamond Dyes—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed. Just tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade or run.—Advertisement.

Cause and Effect.

The teacher was angry when Thomas appeared ten minutes late for school one morning.

"Why are you late, Tommy?" he said sharply.

"Please, sir," replied the sinner, "it was late when I started from home."

"Then why didn't you start from home earlier?"

"Please, sir, it was too late to start early."

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

MINISTERS MEN OF MEDICINE

Both in England and America Clergyman Acted as Doctor in the Seventeenth Century.

Some of the medicines dispensed in the Seventeenth century were fearful and wonderful concoctions. Human skulls, bones, human fat, mummies, etc., were freely prescribed. At the deathbed of Charles II a preparation from a human skull was administered.

The education of the pharmacist at this time was largely based on his trade experience, although some knowledge of Latin was required. The apprenticeship lasted from five to six years, and at the end of that time he became a "journeyman." On assuming control of a pharmacy as a proprietor, he was required to pass a supplementary examination.

Pharmacy in America during the Seventeenth century was largely based on English usages modified by practices derived from the Indians. In Massachusetts, a great many clergymen practiced pharmacy for a means of livelihood, while preaching. Indians and old women also practiced it. The witchcraft epidemic brought the practitioners of pharmacy into suspicion as selling poisons for spells.

Scotsman Not Likely to Expend a "Bawbee" When He Could Walk to His Hotel.

A young Scotsman, shortly after his graduation from the University of Edinburgh, came to this country to teach. Thirty years later he revisited the country of his birth. On his return to his teaching post he was regaling some of his confreres with an account of his trip.

"One morning," related the professor, "as I was strolling along a street in Edinburgh, I stopped at a tobacconist's and bought some cigars. Finding myself out of matches I asked the clerk for some.

"'Ha'pence a box,' said he.

"'What! Why in America when a man buys a cigar he is given a small package of matches.'

"'I'm sorry, sir, but they're ha'penny a box here.'

"And, do you knonw," added the professor, "I had to walk back eight blocks to my hotel to get some matches."—Judge.

Matter of Dismissal of Stenographer Simplified by "Insult" Conveyed in Unqualified Statement.

Mrs. Carter dropped in at the office for a few minutes' chat with her husband.

"John," she remarked, "I think you had better discharge that stenographer you have now. I am sure she is trying to flirt with you ever since she has been here."

Mrs. Carter, when she said this, thought the stenographer was safely out of hearing—but she wasn't! She stepped to the door of the private office and vented her indignation:

"Madam, I'll have you know that I wouldn't flirt with your old husband for a million dollars!"

Mrs. Carter was aghast.

"Now, John," she exclaimed, "you simply must discharge that girl! She has insulted you!"—Kansas City Star.

Loses An Eye

Frank Johnson of Concord township met with accident Tuesday at about 2:30 p. m., which resulted in the loss of one of his eyes, and he is now in the Hope Methodist hospital at Fort Wayne.

Mr. Johnson, who has been working in the Pennsylvania shops in that city for several months, was under a car assisting his forman in cutting a piece of steel in two when the chisel, held by the forman, glanced under the blow of the hammer and struck Johnson in the eye.

He was rushed to the hospital at once where it was found necessary to remove the injured member, and the operation was performed soon afterwards.

Many Attend Institute

Record crowds attended the six sessions of the Tri-Township, (Newville, Spencer and Concord), Farmess' Institute held in St. Joe on Monday and Tuesday of this week. The weather man was very kind in giving us such fine weather for the occarion and for once we had electric current to light up for the evening entertainments.

Handicapped somewhat by not having a large auditorium in town this year the officers obtained the Lutheran church tor all the sessions except the last one which was held in the high school building. The hospitality of the Lutheran people and that of the authorities of the school building was greatly appreciated.

Monday morning folks were slow about coming and the meeting did not begin until a delayed hour. However this session was a good curtain raiser. The song service was in charge of Floyd Reasoner. In the absence of B.V. Widney, who was scheduled to talk on "Why Grow Soy Beans," Sax Hadsell substituted on the subject with interesting remerks. D.L.Carpenter led a short discussion following Mr. Hadsell's talk. Mr. Covert than made the address of the morning on the topic, "Farm Organisation."

In the afternoon the meeting resumed with a song service. A discussion than followed on the subject, "Co-Operative Marketing of Poultry, Eggs and Cream" led by H. O. Walts and F. L. Milliman. Mrs. Minnie Gee than gave a talk on "Home Dairying." A short discussion followed. Mr. Covert again addressed the audience on the subject "Co-Operation of Farmers." Everyone should have heard this talk. The nominating committee was appointed at the close of the session.

In the evening the church was packed to its capacity at 7 o'clock. At 7:30 when the program began a few more had wedged in. The high school orchestra furnished several selections at the beginning and again between other numbers. Miss Garnett Wyatt gave a reading, followed by a song by Mrs. Ruth Gloy. Mrs. Flossie Widney rendered a piano solo and the Coburn's Corners Community Chorus, composed of about 30 voices, sang two selections. The High School gave a little play entitled, "The Conversion of Pa," in which the old time "head-sot" farmer was made to see that 100 per cent more corn could be raised by modern, sientific methods of farming that he could raise on the same land by his "experienced" old-fashioned ways. Members of the graded school also favor the audience with several miscellanious numbers. Two male quartettes sang. Rev. Steffey closed the meeting with prayer.

The program Tuesday forenoon was featured by an address by William Madigan on "Farm Tenancy," and one by Mrs. William Goldsmith on "Poultry Diseases—Prevention and Cure." Each talk was followed by brief discussions. The same state workers that are mentioned above gave atlks in the afternoon; subjects, Mr. Madigan on "Boys and Girls Clubs," and Mrs. Goldsmith on "Woman's part in a Rural Community." Selections were rendered by a male quartette and others by a ladies quartette.

Tuesday evening, on account of the moving picture apparatus at the school building, the entertainment was held there. The auditorium was filled to its capacity also. At 7:30 the program began with a number by the Lutheran Male Quartette. Several musical numbers were rendered. Moving pictures showing the story entitled, "Out of the Shadows," were thrown upon the screen for the purpose of showing the possibilities of diseases, espically tuberculosis, being in the farm herd or flock or drove without being detected except by experienced inspectors. It showed the advantage of owning stock that is federally guaranteed to be free of tuberculosis. Another reel of pictures were shown revealing the distructiveness of hog cholera, its causes, and treatment for prevention and cure.

The officers serving the past year were reelected for the coming year. The average attendance is estimated at 150 at each session. Seventy-eight registered.

DEKALB COUNTY FARM SELLS A CAR OF STOCK

M. E. Leighty, superintendent of the DeKalb county infirmary, and Ida L. Leighty, matron, have submitted the following report of stock raising at the infirmary:

"The DeKalb county infirmary sold a carload of fine black Polland-or cattle last week which averaged 1160 pounds. This load of thirty-one head cost $1,396.90 and weighed 710 pounds each at Chicago twelve months ago. One died during the summer. The thirty were sold last week for $2,678.97. An Unusual Wedding

Sunday, January 28 at the home of Mrs. Simon Chubb occurred the marriage of her youngest daughter Troas Evangeline to Paul D. Carpenter. At high noon the strains of Lohengrin were heard and the young couple were united by the United Brethren minister of Newville in the holy bonds of matrimony, a very beautiful and impressive ring service being used. Immediately following the ceremony rice was showered on the bride and groom which is a token of good luck

A bounteous two course dinner was served to about forty-five guests. Many beautiful presents were received consisting of silverware, table linen, dishes, reed work, aluminum ware, bed spread, blankets, etc.

The bride wore blue silk dress and carried a shower bouquet of pink tea roses. The groom wore the conventional black.

After dinner all enjoyed a few hours of visiting and merry making. One of the rare features was the mothers of the bride and groom carried a hog trough in the room and Carl Carpenter, the older brother of the groom, and Ervin the older brother of the bride were invited to dance in it. The boys did their part quite well. At a late hour in the afternoon the guests departed to their many homes wishing the happy couple a prosperous and bright future. There were guests from a distance from South Bend, Quincy, Mich., Montpelier and Angola.

The News joins in with the many friends of the couple wishing them a happy, prosperous married life.

Sunday School Entertainment

It was very dreary Saturday evening about 7:30. It was raining to. The electric power would not even help to brighten the evening. But the program committee for the Sunday school entertainment said we would have the program despite the unfavorable conditions. So lamps were borrowed and they did their best to frighten the evening. But the splendid program that was given made us all soon forget that it was dark and rainy and the electric current was off.

Were you there? I was. You missed something, if you were not there. From the chorus and orchestra to the little boys and girls that made up the entertainments showed us they knew how to entertain

It took over an hour to give the program. It was entertaining every minute.

Two mysteries were not revealed. Just what the message little Howard Burton Benninghoff had we can not tell, but with a little shrug of his shoulders he withheld his message — and we were anxious to see the Rev Mr. Brice that captured so many fine ladies—"of waiting."

When the program was over, the social committee had prepared to further entertain by preparing a fine lunch which was served. Guests remained to a late hour counting the evening one of wholesome entertainment.

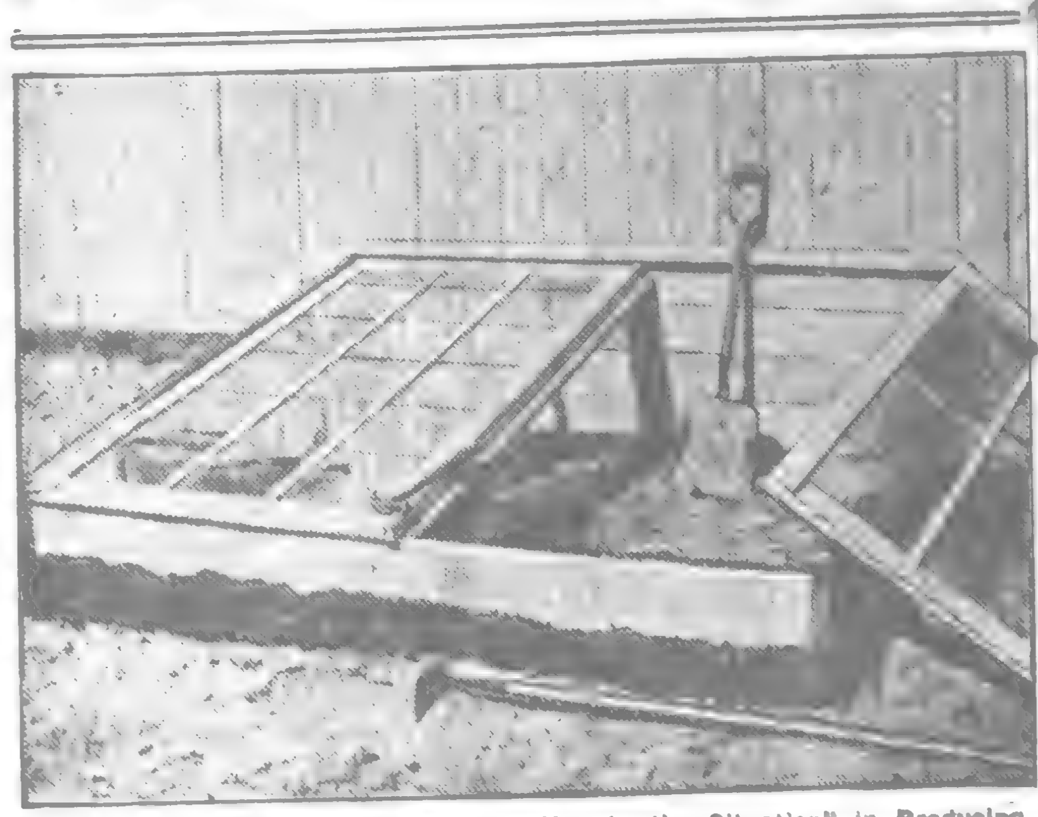
The Cottage Gardener



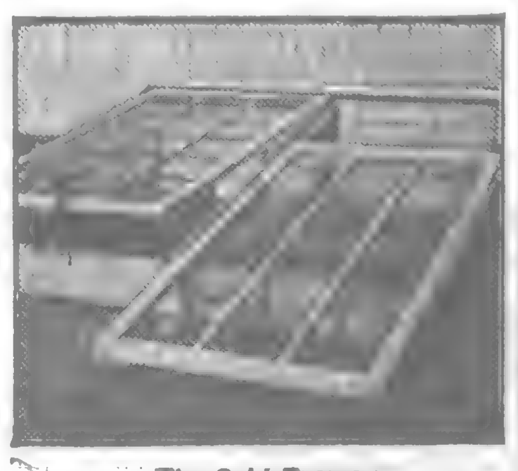
The Well Constructed Hotbed Is the "Key to the Situation" in Producing the Best Vegetable and Flowering Plants. The Coldframe Serves as the Developer.

TO BUILD HOTBED AND A COLD FRAME

Pit With Fresh Manure Required for One; No Artificial Heat for Other.

Window boxes will serve for starting early plants for the very small garden, but where a considerable number of tomato, cabbage and other plants of this character are wanted, it is a good plan to make a small hotbed and later a cold frame for the care of the plants. Hotbeds may be constructed in two or three ways, points out the United States Department of Agriculture. One way is to dig out a pit, which is either walled up with brick, cement or with boards, and fill this pit with eight to fourteen inches of fresh horse manure to supply the heat; over the manure is placed five or six inches of fine loam soil, and over this a sash or a heavy muslin cover to keep out the cold.

Another method is to build a small flue underneath the hotbed and provide heat by burning wood or some other kind of fuel in this flue. In a few cases where the hotbed can be located along one side of the house it can be heated with hot water from the hot water heating plant of the dwelling. Oil heaters are sometimes used for heating hotbeds, but in case these are used, or if gas is employed, a pipe or ventilation should be attached to the heater, so that the gases formed by the combustion of the fuel do not get into the hotbed. The simplest and best hotbed is the one attached to the dwelling and heated from the furnace or hot water heater of the dwelling.



The Cold Frame.

In making up a manure-heated hotbed it is desirable to secure the manure about two weeks in advance of the time that it is needed, pile it in a rather flat pile and turn it over a time or two to start it heating uniformly. In placing it in the hotbed pit it should not be thrown in large masses, but shaken out uniformly and then tramped so as to form a compact bed, covering the entire space. If the manure is very dry a little water should be added, so that it will produce heat without becoming fanged or burnt. The soil should be put over the manure immediately, but no seeds should be sown for a few days, as the temperature of the bed is liable to run very high in from three to five days after the bed is made. The best method is to bury the bulb of the thermometer about three inches deep in the soil and note the temperature from time to time, not planting any seeds until after the temperature has fallen below 85 degrees. A hotbed, like the plant box, requires especial care in watering; if too much water is applied the small plants are almost certain to "damp off" at the surface of the ground. Ventilation is also very important, and while the cover should not be left off when the plants would become chilled or be badly blown by the wind, yet proper ventilation insures sturdy plants and in a measure prevents [illegible].

ting, leaves, straw or something of that sort during the cold nights the most tender plants can be carried along and grown to considerable size for setting in the garden.

The plants can either be set directly in the soil of the cold frame, which should always be sifted and fairly well fertilized, or they can be transplanted into trays with paper bands, or wooden bands, or into pots, if available, and these simply set in the cold frame. While pot-grown plants are desirable, very good results can be secured by simply spacing the plants in the soil of the cold frame at distances of four or five inches for tomatoes, peppers and eggplants, and about two or three inches apart for lettuce and small crops. Melons, cucumbers, beans and corn may all be started in the cold frame, using berry boxes or wooden or paper bands for holding the soil. The berry boxes or plant bands should always be removed when setting the plants in the open ground.

PREPARING EARTH FOR SMALL FLATS

Plenty of Pebbles or Rough, Fibrous Soil Necessary; Leaf Mold at the Top.

Perhaps for a majority of home gardeners the cigar box or "flat" in a south window answers the purpose of a hotbed or cold frame. It is a thoroughly-tried and tested device of century-long use.

If boxes have not been stored in advance with a supply of earth, it will be necessary to acquire them and to go out with a pickax or mattock and pry loose some frozen clods of earth to place in the cellar to thaw.

Plenty of pebbles, broken flower pots, crockery or rough fibrous earth should be at hand to provide drainage, for good drainage is one of the secrets in indoor boxes. Bore holes in the bottom of the box. Over these scatter the pebbles or pot shreds and upon this place the coarser soil. The surface soil must be sifted carefully through a sieve, leveled down and firmed. The soil used here must be leaf mold or its equivalent in texture.

Plant the seeds in rows, crosswise of the box. Broadcast sowing in window boxes is wasteful. A large portion of the plants are destroyed in watering and transplanting, and often they are so thick they never have a fair chance to develop.

A cloth over the surface of the soil, or better still, a pane of glass, will keep a more even temperature and retard evaporation. The cloth must be removed with the first sign of germination and the glass should be [illegible] and the moisture which has condensed upon it wiped off from [illegible].

SENATE ADOPTS INCOME TAX BILL

Parties Split in Vote of 27 to 22 to Amend State Constitution.

HARRISON MOTION ADOPTED

House Reverses Itself and Includes Spanish War Veterans in Bonus—Budget Bill Asks for $16,071,816—McCray Wants More.

Indianapolis.—Party lines were broken in the senate in the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Indiana constitution enabling the levying of an income tax. The proposal was started on its way by a vote of 27 to 22. Nineteen Republicans and eight Democrats voted in favor of passage.

The income tax amendment, Senate Joint Resolution No 4, introduced by Senators Steele and Miller, is similar to the one defeated in the special constitutional election in 1921. Since that election the measure has been espoused by the farmers' organizations. An amendment to the constitution must be passed by both houses of the assembly in two consecutive sessions before it is presented to the voters for approval or rejection.

The vote on the amendment is as follows:

For Passage.

Republicans—Adams, Barker, Beardsley, Buchanan, Cann, Daily, Dunn, English, Harlan, Hartsell, Hodges, Holmes, Lambert, Leonard, Lindley, Miller, Nichols, Southworth and Steele.

Democrats — Chambers, Crosby, Davis, Easton, Hays, King, Perkins, and Saunders.

Against Passage.

Republicans—Baxter, Behmer, Brown, Cleveland, Fitch, Hill, Merry, Nedji, Penrod, Richards, Van Orman and Swain.

Democrats—Batt, Cravens, Durham, Erni, Harmon, Henley, Lochard, Lutz, Chirley and Sweeney.

Not Voting—Moorehead.

Spanish War Vets Included.

The soldier bonus bill ran the rapids again and survived, encumbered by an amendment which would require the payment of the bonus to veterans of the Spanish-American war as well as to World war veterans. A prolonged and heated debate followed the introduction of the amendment by Representative Russell B. Harrison of Indianapolis. On second reading the house struck out an amendment to permit the enactment of the bill following a referendum in which the measure would be approved by a majority of those voting on the measure rather than a majority voting at the election.

Budget Bill Introduced.

The long expected budget bill—the first ever drawn in Indiana—carrying requests for appropriations totalling $16,071,816.25 is in the hands of the Indiana house ways and means committee.

The bill, which was introduced by Representative Oscar A. Ahlgren (Lake, Rep.) majority floor leader, was started on its way after Governor McCray had delivered a special message to the house in which he dissented from some of the conclusions reached in the accompanying budget report and asked for additional appropriations of approximately $280,000. Copies of the report were filed in each branch of the assembly simultaneously with the introduction of the budget bill.

Democrats Win Fight.

After a heated debate on the public service commission, the Indiana house of representatives voted to accept the minority committee report, practically a Democratic report, recommending passage of the Jones anti-public utility bill. Members of the house had their battleaxes with them in the first hour of the session when they adopted committee reports for indefinite postponement of 20 bills and one joint resolution.

Senate Passes Dry Bill.

Five bills, including an amendment to the state prohibition law to provide heavier penalties for violations and to prevent suspension of sentences by the courts in liquor law cases were passed by the Indiana senate.

The four other bills passed by the senate were the bill to repeal the 1921 law requiring [illegible] giving the home [illegible] owners of mortgages; the bill [illegible] teachers in public, private or parochial schools to be American [illegible]; the bill to change the [illegible] law so that voters would [illegible] to give their [illegible] and an [illegible]

INDIANA BREVITIES

Indianapolis.—Governor McCray approved the recommendation of the state board of pardons in regard to cases heard at the December session. The names of practically all of the persons granted clemency were announced before the report was completed so that the paroles could be issued before Christmas.

Clemency was refused, on the recommendation of the pardon board, in 33 cases as follows:

Hobart Baker, Marion county, January 28, 1921, five to fourteen years, robbery, Indiana reformatory. Transferred to the state prison.

Karl Brown, Marion county, January 7, 1922, two to fourteen years, assault and battery with intent to murder, to the Indiana reformatory.

Howard Glenn McDonald, St. Joseph county, February, 1920, five to fourteen years, robbery, Indiana reformatory. Transferred to the state prison.

Walter Goul, Madison county, April 14, 1922, five to twenty-one years, criminal assault, Indiana reformatory.

Henry Miller, city court of Indianapolis, August 3, 1922, 90 days in state farm, fined $500 and costs, violation of the liquor law.

Joseph Brant, Putnam county, September 18, 1922, two to five years, escaping state farm, state prison.

Garfield Bohall, Jackson county, December 7, 1910, life, murder, state prison. Now on parole. Final discharge asked.

Claud Virt, Monroe county, February 3, 1919, one to eight years, two to fourteen years, forgery, Indiana reformatory. Transferred to the state prison.

Clyde Casner, Monroe county, March 18, 1921, two to fourteen years, forgery, state prison.

Ben Bickel, Vigo county, May 26, 1922, one to eight years, receiving stolen goods, state prison.

W. D. Williams, remission of judgment on forfeiture of bond asked.

Fred Tomlinson, Marion county, June 17, 1922, one to fourteen years, grand larceny, Indiana reformatory.

Fleming Wright, Marion county, December 16, 1921, ten to twelve years, assault and battery to rob, state prison.

Glenn Domer, Elkhart county, May 23, 1921, two to fourteen years, burglary, Indiana reformatory.

Joseph DeVore, Delaware county, June 30, 1922, one to seven years, obtaining money under false pretense, state prison.

Joseph Bradan, Madison county, December 27, 1917, life, murder, state prison.

Joseph C. Bumler, September 25, 1922, six months state farm, fined $300, violation of the liquor law.

Herbert Pflaging, Clay county, December 20, 1921, two to fourteen years, burglary, Indiana reformatory.

Lewis McQuery, Marion county, June 24, 1922, one to fourteen years, vehicle taking, Indiana reformatory.

Edward Spencer, Perry county, May 15, 1900, life, murder, state prison.

Edward Marshall, Putnam county, September 7, 1921, 180 days state farm, fined $150, violation liquor law.

Edward Porter, Vanderburg county, September 5, 1922, two to fourteen years, entering house to commit felony, Indiana reformatory.

Ray Nixon, Warren county, April 25, 1922, two to fourteen years, forgery, Indiana reformatory.

Cecil Collins, Rush county, June 18, 1922, one to five years, embezzlement, state prison.

Richard Parker, Gibson county, September 12, 1921, two to fourteen years, forgery, Indiana reformatory.

Henry Pressly, Marion county, May 12, 1922, one to five years, issuing fraudulent check, state prison.

John Bray, Posey county, October 21, 1922, five to twenty-one years, criminal assault, state prison.

Everett Lamb, Allen county, May 6, 1921, two to twenty-one years, manslaughter, state prison.

Keller Tisdale, Gibson county, March 23, 1921, two to fourteen years, burglary, Indiana reformatory. Transferred to the state prison.

Dominick Mass, Allen county, May 16, 1921, one to fourteen years, grand larceny, Indiana reformatory.

Doshia York, Gardner.

Clem Hizer, Henry county, August 1, 1921, two to fourteen years, burglary, Indiana reformatory.

IMPROVED ROADS

COST OF GRADING HIGHWAYS

Great Variation in Conditions in Different Sections of Country Is Noted in Data.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A great variation in the conditions under which grading for highways is done in different sections of the United States is reflected in cost data compiled by the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, on 1,350 miles of federal-aid road. The figures cover the four-year period 1917-1921 and are based on a total of 24½ million yards of earth.

For the groups of states the average price per cubic yard is as follows: New England and Middle Atlantic states, $1.33; East North Central, $0.68; West North Central, $0.49; South Atlantic, $0.61; East South Central, $0.41; West South Central, $0.35; Mountain, $0.52; and Pacific states, $0.61. The general average price was $0.56.

Probably the most important factor affecting the cost was the amount of grading to be done per mile, the quantity being very small in the groups having the highest prices. In general it is noticed that where mostly old roads are rebuilt, the light work and tearing up the old pavement greatly affected the cost. The amount of fine grading or trimming required for the higher types of pavement was also a factor. Labor costs, character of soil to be graded, climatic conditions, time limit on contracts, and cost of detours for traffic also affected the cost.

Gasoline Bill Is Smaller When Cars Are Run Over Cement Concrete Roads.

While each group of states did not have the same volume of grading each year, and therefore the average figure for the whole country is not truly representative, it is interesting to note that the average cost of grading gradually rose from $0.49 in the first quarter of 1917 to $0.67 in the fourth quarter of 1919, and then gradually declined to $0.34 in the third quarter of 1921. It is probable that the latter figure would be somewhat higher had all of the states let work in that quarter.

WIDER HIGHWAYS ADVOCATED

Experts Urge Importance of Adopting 20 Feet as Standard Width of Improved Roads.

Experts have been urging upon the American good roads congress the importance of adopting 20 feet as the standard width of paved roadways. They hold that in the end the wider road will cost no more than the narrow track. Some of them even say that a width in excess of 20 feet may prove economical in the end because a wider road secures a more even distribution of the traffic, there is less rutting, and smaller danger exists of damaging the shoulders of the road by running off the pavement. An ultimate width of 150 feet is urged in approaches to large centers where the traffic is exceedingly heavy. A variation in the width of the highway to accommodate different densities of travel will be worked out in time. The claim that 20 feet should be the minimum whenever the traffic reaches 1,000 vehicles a day is one of the interesting developments of modern road building.

Ingenious Pile Driver.

There has been employed on numerous occasions by members of the Engineer corps a most ingenious pile driver, which acts with great speed. On two sides of the pile one-inch gas pipes are placed in longitudinal grooves. At the lower end the pipes are furnished with nozzles inclined inward toward the point of the pile. A force pump drives water into the pipes, and the water, issuing from the nozzles under a pressure of 70 pounds to the square inch, removes the dirt so rapidly beneath the pile that it sinks three times as fast as if hammered by a pile driver.—Washington Star.

American Farm Bureau

This seventeen-year-old club girl, Mary Frances Jones of Goodletteville, Tennessee, knows now how it feels to be a state champion. Although in club work only two years, she came away from the Nashville Livestock show with the "purple" in competition with over one hundred calves from various sections of the state. Her fine Hereford steer won for her many honors, among them being the Governor's cup, the Davidson County cup, the Southern Agriculturist's cup, Long View Farm cup, Lee Mead trophy, Ward Belmont College cup and the Institute of American Meat Packers' medal. Mr. Ebb. Thomae, the county club agent of Davidson county, is responsible for the fine showing made by club members there and he has the co-operation of the farmers, livestock organizations and the business interests.

PROFITS LOST FROM TUBERCULAR ANIMALS

Figures Given by Cedar County, Iowa, Agent Indicate Time Is Ripe to Clean Up.

County Agent C. H. Obye of Cedar county, Iowa, says: "Figures from the live stock exchange and state-federal tubercular test show Cedar county cattle are 11.6 per cent tubercular and the hogs 20 to 25 per cent. Individual tests made bear out these figures, too, and indicate that the time is here to clean up, because we are losing more from keeping the tubercular animals than we would by testing and disposing of them.

An inquiry to the live stock commissioner of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange on this subject received the following answer: With reference to your question regarding figures on the percentage of tubercular cattle and hogs in your county as recorded in our office and packing circles, allow me to advise that the percentage of reacting cattle out of those so far tested is 11.6 per cent. Our figures indicate that the county as a whole has a probable infection of 10 per cent of the cattle and from 20 to 25 per cent of the hogs.

"Tubercular cattle mean tubercular hogs. Cleaning up the cattle will take care of the hog situation. Probably a good per cent of our hog troubles trace primarily to tuberculosis condition. It will pay us to get together and discuss plans for eradicating this heavy loss.

"The county farm bureau is active in tuberculosis eradication. It has secured the tuberculosis film, 'Out of the Shadows' and will hold several meetings on that subject in connection with the film, probably with a representative of the live stock commission assisting."

SUCCESS IN SELLING WOOL

Private Buyers Forced to Bid Up From Five to Ten Cents By Ohio Association.

One of the most successful sales seasons in the history of the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' association has just closed, according to J. F. Walker, of Gambier, field manager of the organization. All of the wool is now sold except 400,000 pounds of Delaine which is being held in view of the strengthening market.

Mr. Walker says that the pool has forced local private buyers to bid up from five to ten cents a pound on their wool, and yet in spite of this the average price obtained through the co-operative organization has ranged from three to five cents a pound above the local market.

A brand-new district co-operative marketing organization is being formed in the vicinity of Zanesville, Ohio, known as the Muskingum Valley Co-operative Dairy Sales association. Members will be sought in Muskingum, Guernsey, Coshocton, and the eastern part of Licking and the northern parts of Morgan and Perry counties. Dairy organization leaders assert that this is known as a low price territory and that the organization will bring material benefits through adjustments of prices and standardization of products. Old line cream stations are said to be paying 10 cents under prices given by co-operative stations in other parts of the state. The Ohio Farm Bureau federation is aiding in the organization.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF WOOL COMMITTEE

From Information Obtained Higher Prices Paid to Producer Than Local Figures.

Pooled wool this year is bringing from five to eight cents more per pound to the producer than the price offered locally. This information is secured from the reports on the various pools as presented at the conference of the American Farm Bureau Wool committee, in Chicago.

Chairman J. F. Walker, of Ohio, presided over the sessions. Representatives were present from New York, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Montana and Wyoming.

A sub-committee was appointed to work out a uniform system of accounting and grading pooled wools. The committee will include representatives appointed by each of the warehouses selling wool co-operatively.

A uniform producer's contract will also be worked out by this committee. It was the opinion of the conference that the contract should be for a period of years. The pools in North Dakota, Oregon, Texas and New York are now operating under contract.

A committee was appointed to meet the representatives of the United States bureau of markets and to present the point of view of the co-operatives as to the proposed new standards of grading.

A publicity committee was appointed to work out a campaign for the advancement of "truth in fabric" legislation. This committee is composed of J. B. Wilson, of Wyoming; H. C. Holmes, of South Dakota; A. J. Hopkins, of the University of Wisconsin, and Samuel R. Guard, of the American Farm Bureau federation.

DUCKS AND GEESE

"I am rather an interesting creature, if I do mention it instead of waiting for someone else to mention it," said the Duckbill or Platypus.

"The whole trouble is that I am afraid if I do not mention it myself no one else will, and rather than let it go by without being mentioned, I speak of it myself."

"I see," said the Barnacle Goose. "I see."

"Well, I wish you would say more than that," said the Duckbill or Platypus.

"I wish," he added, "that you would say that you agree with me too.

"That would be pleasant to hear."

"Well," said the Barnacle Goose, "I suppose you are interesting if you say so. For I've never found that you didn't tell the truth. Of course you may not tell the truth for all I know, but I have never heard that you weren't truthful, so I will believe you."

"I will tell you the truth," said the Duckbill or Platypus. "I think it is foolish to tell anything else except the truth," he added.

"I am interesting and it is the truth. Yes, it most certainly is the truth.

"I am called the Duckbill or Platypus because I have a bill like a duck and yet the Mrs. Duckbill or the Platypus ladies lay eggs like nice Mrs. Duckbills and nice Platypus ladies would.

"Worthy of Notice."

"I come from Australia, too. That surely is interesting. Of course perhaps I might be more interesting still, but I didn't say that. I simply said I was interesting. And it is something to be somewhat interesting."

"It is something indeed," said Mr. Barnacle Goose. "But while I think you are fairly interesting I think I am very interesting. And I will tell you my story.

"It is well though that each of us thinks himself to be interesting. After all, we are ourselves and it is well to be pleased and satisfied."

"Do go on with your story," said the Duckbill or Platypus.

"In early times," said Mr. Barnacle Goose, "people thought that the Barnacle Geese were not hatched from eggs like other birds or fowl, but that we came from barnacles which grew on the trees near the water.

"Quaint and funny idea, eh?"

"Very funny," said the Duckbill or Platypus.

"They have pictures of us, or rather of members of our family," said Mr. Barnacle Goose, "from way back in the year 1597. We Barnacle Geese are really very interesting and worthy of notice."

"Yes," said the Duckbill or Platypus, "I really do think that if one cannot be a Duckbill one might as well belong to the Barnacle Goose family.

"And it is interesting to think that museums which only care for interesting creatures care for us."

"I have a dark throat and the end of my tail is dark and my neck is dark in color," said Mr. Barnacle Goose, "but my body is gray and white in color. Yes, I have handsome gray and white feathers."

"Well," said the Canvas Back Duck, "I wear a suitable costume for my name. The color of my back is the color of canvas.

"But I wear a brownish red color around my throat to brighten up my gray feathers.

"Ah, yes; to be a duck or to be a goose is the most [illegible] thing, but to be a duck is more [illegible] than to be a goose."

BEST TREES FOR FARM PLANTING

A Well-Established Woodlot With Timber Ready for Market.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many plantings of trees have turned out failures because of the selection of species unsuited either to the climate or to the soil. The best trees for planting on a home farm usually are those which grow well in similar soils in the region, according to the recommendation of forest specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin 1123, "Growing and Planting Hardwood Seedlings on the Farm," recently published by the department.

In determining what species of hardwood trees should be grown, the bulletin says, the object of growing the trees and their adaptability to the climate of the region should be kept in mind. As illustrations, the bulletin points out that box-elder is not a good tree to plant for timber; the yellow poplar, because of climatic conditions, cannot be grown successfully in the plains region of the central United States, and hardy catalpa will not thrive in poor, sandy or heavy clay soils.

Trees May Be Grouped.

To a certain extent trees may be grouped as those most valuable for lumber, for posts and poles, for windbreaks, etc. Some of the varieties listed in the bulletin as suitable for lumber are: Ash, basswood, beech, birch, black cherry, cottonwood, cucumber, elm, hickory, sugar maple, red oak, white oak, red gum, sycamore, black walnut and yellow poplar. Varieties suitable for posts and poles are: Hardy catalpa, coffee tree, red elm, eucalyptus, black locust, honey locust, Russian mulberry, oaks, osage orange and white willow. Varieties best suited for windbreaks are: Green ash, box-elder, cottonwood, eucalyptus, hackberry, silver maple, Russian mulberry, osage orange, Russian olive, white willow and yellow willow.

A mixture of two or more kinds of trees in a plantation sometimes is desirable, says the bulletin. For best results, trees such as the cottonwood should be spaced widely, while others, such as black walnut and black locust, have such scant foliage that their shade does not prevent the growth of a heavy sod. A mixed planting of cotton wood with either of the other two varieties mentioned will more completely utilize the ground, increase the yield and bring about a better forest condition. Frequently, less expensive and less valuable varieties can be planted as fillers with trees that are to make up the permanent planting. Mixed plantings also are desirable as a protection against diseases and insect attack. When chestnut and black locust, which are susceptible to such attacks, are planted among trees not so liable to injury of this kind, the latter will provide a stand of trees if the former are killed.

Utilizes Poorest Soil.

Unless intended for windbreaks, plantations should be located on the poorest soil of the farm, that least suited to the production of agricultural crops. Odd corners cut off by streams or driveways and hillsides or poorly drained soil should be selected. In starting a grove, seedlings one or two years old are preferable to seed or cuttings. Nut trees, such as walnut, hickory and oak, develop a deep taproot and few lateral feeding roots during their first year. They cannot, therefore, be transplanted as successfully as other trees. The nuts or acorns should be planted on the permanent site. Sometimes it is advisable to sprout the nuts before this planting is made. Cottonwood and willow plantations are most easily started with cuttings—12 to 14-inch sections taken from one or two-year-old twigs of living trees. Cuttings should be collected during early winter and buried in moist sand in a cool place preparatory to planting in the spring.

In general, early spring planting is preferable to planting at any other season. As compared with fall planting, it has at least two distinct advantages—the stock has an entire growing season in which to become established before it is subjected to the rigors of winter, and it is not in immediate danger of being heaved out of the ground by alternate freezing and thawing.

PARASITES MAY HELP COMBAT BORER PEST

Introduction of Enemies of Pest Progressing Rapidly.

Government Agents in France Have Been Constantly Collecting Insects Which Are to Be Liberated in New England.

The work of introducing the natural enemies of the corn borer from Europe made rapid strides during the last fiscal year, according to the report of the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture. Agents at Hyeres, southern France, have been almost constantly collecting and shipping insect parasites of the corn borer to America, where these have been assorted and reared, to be subsequently liberated in large numbers in the heavily infested regions of New England. More than 500,000 specimens of a single species of parasite were liberated in this manner during the summer of 1922, and thousands of individuals of several other kinds were also liberated in this region.

The present plans of the bureau include the continuation of this work, in order to insure, where possible, the [illegible] of all available beneficial insect enemies of the pest before it becomes widely distributed throughout the United States. "A Tale of Two Bulls."

Advantages of the "better sire" are graphically and humorously set forth in a new animated cartoon, "A Tale of Two Bulls," now available from the United States Department of Agriculture. This film concerns the affairs of a farmer who has a scrub bull, and suffers financial loss accordingly. A visit to a neighbor who has a purebred bull convinces him that he is on the wrong track. He hastens home, dispatches the old scrub and gets a new bull. New-found prosperity amply justifies his joining the better-sires movement, sponsored by the bureau of animal industry.

LABOR TO GROW ACRE CORN

Survey of 321 Farms in Ohio Throws Light on Subject—Contour of Land Is Factor.

How much work does the average farmer do in growing an acre of corn? A survey of 321 farms in Ohio throws some light upon this question. Farmers operating hilly farms require 57.2 man-hours to grow an acre of corn. On prairie land 41.3 hours were required. In another county on level soil the average man-hours were 38.5. The contour of the land and the size of operating implements as well as the management of the land are all factors determining the labor cost in growing this crop.

Declares Tanlac Ended Indigestion, Chest Pains and Palpitation—Lost Strength Restored.

"Tanlac has improved my general condition ten times more than I anticipated," recently stated Herbert A. Guptill, a well-known school teacher of Kezar Falls, Maine.

"My trouble began with a sudden loss of strength. Almost everything I ate disagreed with me and caused a sickening sensation that remained with me for hours. For months I found breathing difficult on account of indigestion, and had such chest pains and palpitation I thought my heart was affected. I also suffered greatly from headaches and nervousness, seldom slept well, and felt tired and worn-out all the time.

"Since taking Tanlac no kind of food hurts me and I have a wonderful appetite. I have gained ten pounds, breathe freely, sleep perfectly, and feel as strong and well as ever in my life. Tanlac is certainly a superior medicine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Merrill, age nine, lives in that part of Indianapolis where the residents have small chicken farms. Merrill's father came in from the chicken yard one morning in the zero weather in December, and remarked that for some unaccountable reason the hens were laying better in the cold weather.

"That's easy to understand," Merrill volunteered. "The hens have to stay in their nests now to keep warm and I s'pose they think while they're on the nest they might as well lay an egg."—Indianapolis News.

HELP FOR GIRLS WHO WORK

Mrs. Lodic Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Tyrone, Pa.—"A friend told my husband how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped his wife, so my husband bought me a bottle because I was so run-down, had a nervous weakness, no strength in my body and pains in my left side so bad that I could hardly do my work. Before I was married I used to work in the factory, and I had pains just the same then as I have had since I have done my housework. I would not be without a bottle in the house now. It has stopped the pains all right and I have found out that it is a wonderful body builder, as it has made me well and strong. It is going to be the 'old reliable' with me hereafter, and I am always willing to tell other women how it has helped me. You can use this letter as you wish as I can honestly say that my words are true."—Mrs. M. LODIC, R.F.D. No. 4, Box 40, Tyrone, Pa.

Letters like this bring out the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They tell of the relief from such pains and ailments after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Bible School Feature at Winona

Plans are being formulated for a new departure in Bible School work as a special feature of the program of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana.

It is not so much a new school which is to be formed as it is a reshaping or the casting into a new form of the Bible School work which has always been carried on at Winona Lake.

The plan has come in response to an insistent demand on the part of many ministers, wishing to summer at Winona, for a Summer Bible School where they can spend their vacation and do post-graduate work or supplement their training in an institution of creditable standing with the various Universities, Colleges and Theological Seminaries of the land.

To this end the strongest teachers of our Theological Seminaries have been secured and the courses of study will be put on a plane that anyone doing satisfactory work in them will receive full credit toward any degree work they may be doing or wish to do in the educational institutions just mentioned. Practically all of these institutions thus far approached have agreed to give such credit, provided, of course, the work is of such a character as will meet the requirements which they severally lay down, and the one desiring such credits shall have already received his B. A. degree.

There will be three hours of standard work per day for ministers only. There will also be one hour of popular Bible lecture work each day, which will be open to everyone, but this will not be in any sense a part of the Bible School proper.

Courses will be offered in New and Old Testament Interpretation, Religious Education, Biblical Archeology, Philosophy of Religion and other subjects such as are treated in the various Divinity Schools of the country.

It is planned that the School shall cover a period of four weeks from July 20th to Aug. 16th, just preceding the great Bible Conference which will begin Aug. 17th and close Aug. 27th.

For particulars write to Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, Dean of the school, Winona Lake, Indiana.

CHIROPRACTIC

STOMACH TROUBLE

To the patient suffering from any of the varied forms of stomach trouble Chiropractic offers the logical means of escape.

All forms of stomach disorders may be classed under two great divisions, namely the organic and the neurotic. The former class consists of those diseases which are characterised by certain pathological changes wherein there is a structural change in the wall of the stomach. The latter is a condition wherein the wall of the stomach is normal so far as structure is concerned, but with gastric juice being formed which is not normal in quality or in quantity.

In the pathological conditions we have to consider the various forms of so-called gastritis, peptic ulcer, cancer of the stomach, etc., while under the so-called neurosis may be classed hyperchlorhydria (excessive acid), hypochlorhydria (lack of acid), hypersecretion (excessive secretion of gastric juice), gastralgia (spasmodic pain in the stomach), and nervous dyspepsia, (nervousness and indigestion).

Chiropractic does not depend for its success upon a diagnosis of the case. Our fundamental does not concern itself with whether the patient is suffering with so-called gastritis, peptic ulcer or nervous dyspepsia. We know that something is wrong with the stomach, we know that there are certain nerves supplying the walls of the stomach and that they emit from a certain point in the spine. We know that these nerves must be free to carry the life-giving mental impulse to the stomach and that the only point along the entire course where this carrying capacity can be interfered with is where these nerves emit from the spinal column. We know further that disease can not exist unless the carrying capacity of these nerves is impaired. How do we know this? It is based upon the firm foundation of anatomical facts coupled with the [illegible] certainty of clinical results. What does the [illegible] adjusts the subluxations (a condition where [illegible] spine are not in proper alignment) and [illegible] the pressure is taken off the nerves [illegible] the nerves can carry mental [illegible] to the stomach and under these conditions [illegible]

An Unfinished Poem

There's a gray and grim old castle
On a beautiful flower clad hill,
There's a stream hard by, and
On its banks an old time water-mill.
Beyond the bridge near some spreading trees
Is the village Smithey's stand;
While the village street on the rise beyond
Lies stretched on either hand.
There's a church with spire and large brick school
And their bells with silvery peal,
While off to the west lies the railroad track
Like a winding serpent of steel.

The snow is deep on hill and vale
And the flowers in their beds are still;
While a coat of mail lies thick and strong
O'er the pond beyond the mill.

A prisoner am I on that castle grom
Tho no bars or bolts are there,
Yet I sit as if bound by invisible chains
To my padded and cushioned chair.
I list to the shouts of the children gay
As they coast o'er the frosty snow,
And I note wih joy the old and young
As with bells and sleighs they go.

I catch a [illegible] of a merry throng
As on [illegible] o'er the ice they [illegible]

DeKalb County T. B. Seal Sale

The Tuberculosis Christmas Seal Sale nearly doubled that of last year, for which the officers of the DeKalb County Association are very grateful. While we hoped that the sale would reach $2,000 yet we thank the people of the county for their liberal support.

There are a few rural schools which have not responded but that will not materially effect the total as hereby reported.

Following is a report of the seal sale:

Garrett	$132.45
Corunna	81.59
Ashley	21.60
Waterloo	55.00
Butler	73.81
St. Joe	17.67
Spencerville	19.04
Auburn	586.19
Rural Schools	147.48
Total	$1134.83

Auburn's sale is about half of the rest of the county but this is analyzed as follows: Walter Penfield of Washington, D. C., bought a $100 health bond. Outside firms bought $30 worth of health bonds making Auburn's sale $456.19. But we must all of us take off our hats to Corunna and the citizens of Corunna for their noble work. To George Harmes, manager of the Corunna sale, and to Leslie Laird, principal of the Corunna schools, we extend our thanks. [illegible] many of them selling their full quota of 500 seals. Up to date Miss Jessie Carnahan of No. 7, Jackson township has sold the most seals per capita, selling $17.00 worth and having 16 scholars. It looks as though she has won the prize.

To the people of DeKalb county we extend our thanks for your good will and good words in the seal sale.

J. Y. W. McCLELLAN, President.

VALUE OF TRUTH

"We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

"The highest loyalty to which men can subject themselves is loyalty to truth."

When Aristotle was asked what a person could gain by uttering a falsehood, he replied "not to be credited when he shall tell the truth."

That indeed would be an inveniable predicament.

But Aristotle was right.

Faith in such a one becomes severely strained, if not altogether shattered.

HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE

Fire, caused by a short in the wiring in his automobile, destroyed the Ford sedan and barn of Frank Lake about midnight Sunday, Jan. 21. Mr. Lake with his family had but a short time before the fire was discovered returned to their home from an auto ride. The fire had gained such a start that it was impossible to save either the car or the barn. Unfortunately, Mr. Lake had no insurance and it was a heavy loss, the sedan being practically new.—New Haven Idea.

Mr. and Mrs. Lake were both former young people of Spencerville and have for several years lived in New Haven. Mr. Lake works in Fort Wayne.

You Will Want Your Fordson Tractor Early

Everything points to the greatest shortage of Ford products this year that has ever existed.

Never before has the demand been so great.

You will want a Fordson Tractor early--here is one product you cannot wait for--when the weather opens up you will need it.

You will want it for plowing, seeding, cultivating--and all your other work. Already it has proved the greatest help to profitable farming that has ever been offered to you. And at $395 f. o. b. Detroit, the price is so low that you lose money every day you are without a Fordson. To get delivery you must order early.

There are no reserve stocks among our dealers--our production capacity, great as it is, will not enable us to build up a reserve.

It must be a case of "first come, first served" and the only way in which you can protect yourself is to list your order with a Ford Dealer immediately.

By taking advantage of our dealer's first opportunity to make delivery, you will be assured of having your Fordson when you need it.

THE GENERAL

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting.

Drace was much taken with Hawkins, his quiet manner, his athletic mold, and passed some time with him in talk, the Major having given to Hawkins a scheming wink.

The boat was now fluting her ruffled way up the river. At a table beneath a great shaded lamp, Shottle sat, not alone, not staring into vacancy but into the expressionless countenance of men merciless in vivisection. Luck at first had cajoled him, let him swell the fifty he had obtained to near five hundred, but a yellow-looking swab of whiskers entangled with him and leeched him down to twenty-five. Shottle looked at him, his caterpillar eyebrows, heard his slight hacking cough, his request for a glass of ice-water, and said to himself:

"One of these days I may have a chance to set fire to you as I would any other patch of dead grass."

Slowly and with an economy painful for him to practice, Shottle with many ups and downs built up again toward two hundred; but at length in the afternoon an old citizen who sat high and who looked like a steer, hooked him and horned him broke.

Shottle came stumbling over the doorsill and found Drace in conversation with Major Pewitt and William Hawkins. With a wink the Major enjoined a humorous silence, and mutely they sat attendant on the loser's mood. Shottle sat down, took out a card, wrote on it, put it back into his pocket, tapped his teeth with the pencil and spoke:

"I have just written a resolve, and whenever I do, it becomes a law of my being. It has just been enacted and recorded that never again on this earth am I to bet another cent. I may go to houses where there are card parties, but never again am I to shuffle a deck. My career as a fool is ended . . . Who was it that wrote, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again'? A prison sentence would be too good for the hatcher of such a fallacy. If at first you find you're wrong, quit. That's my course for the future."

"I congratulate you. But what are you going to do?" Drace inquired.

"I will drag a surveyor's chain and squint at the landscape. I'll lug a tripod and eat a raw turnip in the wind. Or, if compelled to be humbler, I can curry horses."

"And bet some fellow that you'll have your horses curried first," said the Major.

With his pencil Shottle slowly tapped his teeth.

"The first squirt of cold water generally comes from one as much afflicted as yourself. But no matter. Cold water chills, but at the same time it cleanses. And from this time on, gentlemen, Liberty Shottle, the vague and unreal, will become the obvious and the actual. If I had a thousand dollars right now, I wouldn't bet that the sun will rise tomorrow. Oh, there is such a thing as redemption."

CHAPTER VI.

embankment was an endless view of spreading cane fields. The General's house stood in the midst of old trees near half a mile from the river. Leading from the landing was a road in the perpetual shade of low-branching live oaks. Along the road wild poppies blazed in patches of sunlight, and in the shade glowed the color of darker blood. In clumps of feathery grasses insects sang, while from everywhere came the low and drowsy murmur of the cane.

Drace was enchanted with the scene, the sweet air. Beside him Shottle long-legged his way, his neck stretched out.

"Yonder comes Uncle Howard, the General," he said.

Toward them, with a slow but firm and emphatic step, came a tall, spare, erect old gentleman; and as he drew nearer, Drace saw that he wore a mustache and whiskers trimmed neatly down to a sharp point. The soldier within him predominated, the professional soldier, who is often gentler and more kindly than the volunteer. Shottle hailed him, and he quickened his pace.

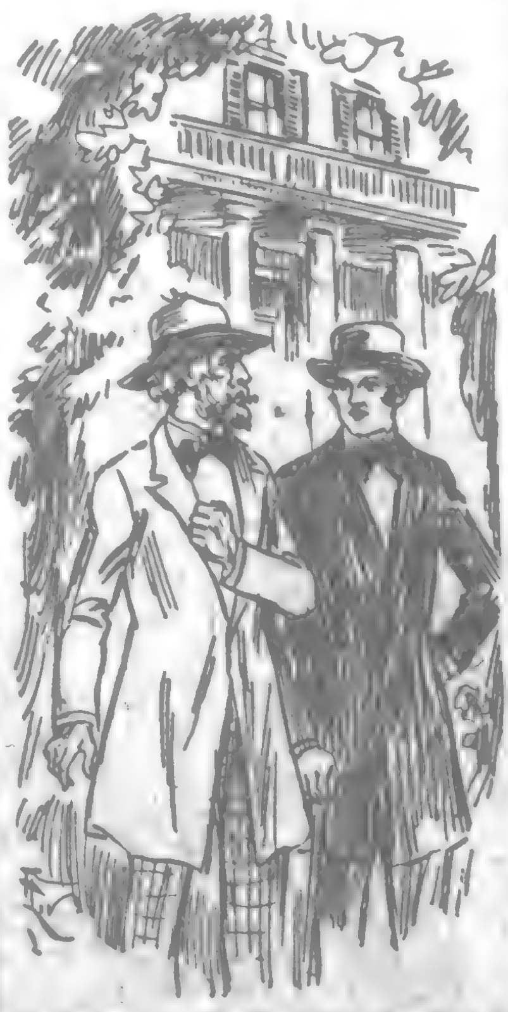
"Well, well, Liberty Shottle! Welcome, sir, and your friend—"

"Uncle, this is Virgil Drace, my best friend."

The old man straightened, held out both his hands and made Liberty's friend welcome most hospitably.

Now they walked toward the house, the General with his hand on Drace's arm. Over the yard fence poured a stream of hounds, and an old 'possum-dog "barked up" Shottle as if he had treed. The double hallway doors stood open. The General conducted Drace into the library, a room that looked big enough for a tennis court. Then he hastily withdrew, and Shottle spoke:

"Gone to find Aunt Tycie. You'll like her. No hickory tree sap is any sweeter than her disposition. She was a Shottle, my father's young sister. She's young, as I told you. And she looks younger now than when she married. Did you ever notice that when a young woman marries an old fellow, she always tries to look younger? Here they are."



"I Want the Truth, Did Liberty Lie to Me?"

Presently the great plantation bell on a tower in the yard rang time for the evening meal. The General arose, and bowing to his wife, gracefully offered her his arm. To Drace it was a pretty ceremonial, and he contrasted it with the more brusque customs of everyday life in the North.

When an opportunity offered, Drace inquired of the General, as casually as possible, if he knew anything of an old fellow named Stepho la Vitte, who was reputed to live somewhere in the vicinity.

The General seemed somewhat surprised at the inquiry. "Yes," he said, "I know something of him. And I believe there are rumors that he is sometimes seen across the River near here. During the war he was a guerrilla and cast much blame on the Confederacy. I met him once, after the war—near your father's house, my dear. My [illegible] and I had halted in [illegible] when up [illegible] hand on [illegible] said that [illegible] they had [illegible] I [illegible] of a [illegible] [illegible] seen [illegible]" len with his chain. In the parlor Aunt Tycie sang, in this house a custom to be dreaded by the learned ear; but Drace's ear was not learned; Shottle's was as an oyster-shell clapped to his head; and in music the General could not distinguish intention from accomplishment. It was a song of love, "Hast Thou No Feeling to See Me Kneeling?" and when its last note had found a dark corner wherein to die, Drace requested her to sing it again. She gave him a grateful look; the General smiled at him; and as the song began again to mourn its way, Shottle said to himself:

"If Providence will lend virtue to a scheme, that will cost you money, Virgil. Came here to rest after going through more than Stonewall Jackson could stand, and this is what I get! Oh, it's respectable and ought to be endured, and so is a casket lined with satin, but it doesn't suit me. Lord, but this atmosphere is unsympathetic!"

If you have patience to wait, bedtime always comes; history is strewn with bedtime. It came slow-footed for Shottle, but quickly enough for Drace, with his nerves of steel wire. And how delighted he was with his room, a museum of antiquity, a great four-poster bedstead with a canopy heavy enough to have served as deadfall to some medieval giant. A chair that looked like the oaken throne of an ancient Briton, a wardrobe wherein Bluebeard might have hanged his wives, a rough-hewn mantelpiece remindful of a beetling cliff—these were featured in the light of a hanging lamp big enough to turn the ashes of a cremated dragon.

The night was warm, and through the windows the air came cool and lulling from the Gulf; but Drace lay until daybreak before he slept, and when he awoke the noontime bell was ringing. A negro knocked to tell him that dinner was ready. The General and Tycie were seated, but Shottle was not at the table with them; and following Drace's look of inquiry, came explanation from the General:

"I gave him the five hundred dollars that he was to put in with the five hundred furnished by you to be invested initiatively in that cotton-bagging factory at Vicksburg, and he took an early boat for that city. I think it is a fortunate thing for the South that they discovered a wild plant, a sort of jute, really better for making ropes and bagging than either flax or hemp. I had seen nothing about the discovery, but I am not a very close reader of the newspapers. But Shottle assures me that this wild jute can be grown on the poorest land and that it needs no tending. I am naturally cautious, Virgil, and I did not myself invest, but backing your judgment in the matter, I loaned Liberty five hundred. When do you expect active operations toward building the factory?"

Tycie forestalled Drace's answer:

"Oh, I am sure it will succeed, and it will be a great thing, especially for Liberty. He has tried so hard, but somehow his energies haven't been properly directed. And he is so capable!"

She was so confident, and so hopeful for her luckless kinsman, that Drace played protecting villain to Shottle's purposes.

"Well, I don't know exactly when they are to begin work, but soon, I trust."

She gave him a grateful look for his trust, now perfectly assured of Shottle's useful future. But the General did not appear to be easy in his mind, and a little later when he and Drace were walking about the yard, beneath the trees, he referred again to the investment. Drace would have shuffled away from it, but the old gentleman cornered him with a question:

"I want the truth. Did Liberty lie to me?"

"Yes, sir, he did."

"I began to think so the moment he left me. Well, it is a singular thing, that when he is with me, I believe in him, but the moment he is gone my faith has gone with him. I have had much experience with men, Mr. Drace, in the army and elsewhere, but my wife's nephew is the most—I don't know how to define him. Let me thank you for protecting him in the presence of my wife, and I regret that I may have seemed in doubt. But Drace, that fellow makes me angry with myself. Confound him, he almost convinces me at times that I have no stability of character. And yet I am fond of him. [illegible] his coming. [illegible]"

THE GRACE OF GRATITUDE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 17:11-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—Enter into His gates with thanksgiving, and into His courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless His name.—Psalm 100:4.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—I Chron. 29:10-6; Psalm 116:1-14; Matt. 18:21-35; Phil. 4:6-7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Was Thankful.

JUNIOR TOPIC — Remembering to Thank God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC —The Grace of Gratitude.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC —Cultivating the Habit of Gratitude.

Jesus is now on His way to Jerusalem where He will be offered up for the sins of the people. It was fitting that He should pass through the country of the Samaritans, for He was the Savior of all men. On this occasion He came in touch with a colony of ten lepers, and His healing of them exhibits the condition of human nature and the workings of His divine grace.

I. Their Awful Affliction (v. 12).

They were lepers. Leprosy is a contagious disease which rots off the members of the body and eventuates in death. It may be unnoticed in the blood of the person for years. It is of such a foul nature that the one thus afflicted is cast out from society. This segregation was in accordance with the Mosaic law (Lev. 13:46). It was a kind of Naaman quarantine measure. Leprosy has always been regarded as a type of sin, even at times visited upon people for some sin. Examples, the leprosy of Gehazi (II Kings 5); Miriam (Num. 12); Uzziah (II Kings 15:5). Sin has come into the world and flows from generation to generation through the racial stream, so that all are sinners (Rom. 5:12). Though sin may be hidden, it eventually breaks out and destroys the body. Evidences of this are seen on every hand. There is no need of Bible proof of its reality.

II. Their Cry for Mercy (v. 13).

They were in great need. No human help was available. They had somehow heard how Jesus had healed some lepers. Where there is real healing it is bound to be noised about. This aroused faith in them. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God" (Rom. 10:17). As He came their way they called for mercy. It is the privilege of all sinners to call upon Jesus Christ for mercy. Salvation from the most awful sins will surely come to all who cry unto Him in sincerity.

III. Bidden to Go to the Priests (v. 14).

Before the lepers were healed they were to show themselves to the priests, according to the Mosaic law (Lev. 14:1-32). As they went in faith they were healed. While God goes before in the work of salvation, yet He demands of the sinner faith. Faith is the cause of His action. Activity on the sinner's part is necessary so that God's grace can flow into him. Faith expresses itself in action. By this means the divine power and human need are united. The only faith needed is for the sinner to realize the healing power of Christ, and as this is acted upon there is the consequent increase which results in complete salvation. Cleansing is realized through obedience.

IV. The Gratitude of the One (vv. 15, 16).

Perceiving that he was healed of his leprosy, the Samaritan turned back and with a loud voice glorified God. He even fell down on his face and gave thanks. The one least expected to show gratitude for this great mercy was the one who sincerely expressed it.

V. The Gratitude of the Nine (vv. 17-19).

Presumably they were Jews. The very ones who should have been most grateful did not show any appreciation. They were content to get much from Christ without giving Him anything. He expects those who experience His salvation to give Him their love and gratitude. The Lord is hurt when saved sinners go off with the blessing of salvation as though they had stolen it. Many take all they can get from Christ and give nothing in return. All the blessings of civilization are ours through Christ, yet how few thank Him for them. [illegible]

GHOST EASY TO ACCOUNT FOR

Mrs. Carter Evidently Had Perfect Appreciation of Her Husband's Peculiar Affinities.

Mrs. Carter awoke with a violent start and found her husband sitting on the edge of the bed.

"John!" she exclaimed. "Whatever is the matter? Are there burglars in the house?"

"Worse'n that!" John exclaimed in a hoarse whisper. "I've just seen a ghost!"

Mrs. Carter gave a sigh of relief. Burglars she was afraid of—they were real. But in ghosts she had not the slightest belief.

"You're dreaming," she told hubby. "Get back here into bed and go to sleep!"

"But I tell you I saw a ghost!" John insisted. "It wasn't the ordinary ghost of a man or a woman that you read about. This ghost was shaped like a donkey!"

Mrs. John laughed.

"John!" she exclaimed. "Come on and go to sleep and don't be afraid of your shadow!"

FATHER SAT IN JUDGMENT

Daddy's Realization of Audience's Suffering Brought Amateur Performance to Sudden Close.

Maggie was ten years of age, I but eight. We were on the program of a public school exhibition for a duet and considered ourselves letter perfect. Maggie played the accompaniment, repeating the last line of each verse for an interlude. There were four lines to each verse.

It was about "Three little graves ranged side by side," and was most pathetic.

After we had been singing a while my father surprised me by coming up and grasping one of my arms; without saying a word, he led me away from the stage. I don't know how Maggie left the stage.

"Why, pa," I exclaimed, "we weren't half through. There were thirty-three verses and we had sung only eleven of them."

"Yes," father replied, "and that was more than enough!"—Chicago Tribune.

WHY PROFESSOR LEFT TOWN

Slight Misunderstanding, but Altogether More Than He Felt He Might Be Able to Explain.

Some years ago, while a professor of an eastern university, I made a trip west, stopping en route, where I was entertained at dinner by friends socially prominent in that city. Only three relatives of the host were invited, including an elderly woman whom I believed to be Mrs. Anderson.

Discussing marriage and the number of unmarried women in New England, I made this sage remark: "I have been told that since the opportunities for marriage are so much greater in the West, it is considered a disgrace to be an old maid."

My hostess now kindly informed me that the woman directly opposite me, on her left, was Miss Anderson.—Detroit Free Press.

The Proud Rat Catcher.

The witty Oliver Herford was talking about snobbishness.

Road Work to Proceed

Present plans are for an active program of road building and road repair in DeKalb county the coming season. Two contract roads will likely be built, one running north through Concord, a length of three miles and one running west from Garrett through Altona to the Noble county line. Keyser township will pay for the latter and Concord township the former.

The commissioners have a fund of $75,000 with which to do construction and repair work. They expect to repair the stone road west of St. Joe and a fill will likely be made north of the Hadsell bridge, east of town. The funds will be divided over the county as was done last year, the commissioners cooperating with the trustees and the land owners in the roads to be improved. If the present pace is maintained four or five years will see DeKalb county pretty well covered with improved roads.

F. M. Merica Dead

Francis M. Merica, 61, prominent educator in northeastern Ind. and DeKalb county for many years, died at his home in Garrett Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock, following an illness of two years. Mr. Meriea suffered a stroke of paralysis two years ago, which was followed later by a second attack. He had apparantly regained his health and was able to be about again until a few days ago' when he suffered a relapse. He gradually declined in health until Monday, when his condition became critical and death followed.

Mr. Mercia for a number of years was superintendent of the Garrett schools and in 1917 was appointed superintendent of the DeKalb county schools. He served in this capacity until 1920, when he was forced to retire because of ill health.

He is survived by the widow and one daughter, Mrs. D. E. VanFleit of Garrett.

Funeral services were conducted at the Garrett M. E. church, Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, under the auspicies of the Masons.

Narrowly Escaped Death

Fast B. & O. Train Demolished Ford in Grade Crash

Similar Accident Near Auburn Same Evening

Abner Trostel, a farmer living 3 miles east of St. Joe, riding alone in his Ford Touring car very narrowly escaped death last Wednesday afternoon about four o'clock when the west bound fast B. &. O. train No. 9, running late, crashed into the back end of his car at the Poper crossing one mile east of St. Joe.

On account of the fog which was more dense in that localty on account of the river, Mr. Trostel was unable to see the fast approaching train. Neither was he able to hear it for he stopped his car before crossing the tracks to listen and when he heard nothing he slowly proceeded. Mr. Trostel states that just as the front seat was passing over the tracks the train came into view and——he don't remember the other particulars until a half hour later when he recovered from the shock somewhat he was talking to the trainmen and the people from the close by homes who rushed to the scene as soon as they heard the crash.

By the terrific speed of the train that part of the machine back of the front seat was torn clear of the rest and scattered along the tracks west of the crossing for thirty rods, leaving the front part still on the grade but badly damaged. How Mr. Trostel got out of the car he connot tell, but the first party to the scene found him standing inspecting the wreck, and when asked what had happened he replied that a wheel had come off the machine.

The train stoped as soon as possidle and reversed to the crossing. The conductor was a friend of Trostel, for the latter was breaking under the same concuctor when he was working for the B.& O. several years ago. Others of the train crew new him intimately and were surprised at his escape.

At the time Mr. Trostel seemed not to be hurt other than a few scratches sbout the head and sholder, but by the morning of the next day it was found that he was badly bruised and his injuries kept him in bed until Saturday noon.

The value of the machine is nothing.

Residents in the vicinity of the accident thought that the train had crashed into the school hack which was due at that time, but were unable to see on account of the fog without going to the place.

An accident of similar circumstances happened a little later the same evening south of Auburn. This was of Commodore Hickman, a contractor living at Wolcottville, with two passangers in the car with him. They were crossing B. & O. tracks south of Auburn when a freight engine crashed into the extreme front of the car, tearing off a fender and damaging the radiator and hood, but none of the occupants were injured.

CHARLES A. JENKINS DIES OF INFLUENZA

Auburn Citizen, Bailiff of DeKalb Circuit Court, Passed Away at 5 P. M. Friday

FORMER COUNTY CLERK

Deceased was Past 77 Years of Age and Had been a Resident of DeKalb County for Sixty Years

Charles A. Jenkins, one of the most widely known citizens of DeKalb county, died at his home on West Eleventh street in Auburn Friday afternoon at 5 o'clock from influenza and resultant complications. He was ill just two weeks.

Two weeks ago he attended one of the lodges in Auburn of which he was a member and the following day he was taken sick from the malady from which he never recovered although he made a heroic fight during the week preceding his death.

Mr. Jenkins was perhaps best known as a former DeKalb circuit court clerk and as an untiring lodge worker. There was not a locality in the county which he had not visited many times as he took part in the various activities of the secret orders in various capacities.

Born in Annrundle county, Maryland, September 10th., 1845, Mr. Jenkins was past 77 years of age. At the age of 17 years he came to DeKalb county with an uncle John Jenkins, and settled on a farm in Concord township near St. Joe. He lived in the township where he first settled until he was elected clerk of the DeKalb circuit court in 1904, assuming his office the first of December the same year. He served the full term of four years.

After the expiration of his term of office he purchased the grocery store on West Seventh street now owned by L. L. Daniel and for some time operated it in partnership with Bert Mochamer, afterward buying out

He afterward disposed of the grocery and was appointed bailiff of the circuit court serving eight years under Judge Dan. M. Link, and up until the time of his sickness, under Judge W. P. Endicott.

Mr. Jenkins was twice married. His first marriage occurred in February, 1865, when he was united in wedlock to Lorinda Johnson who died in March, 1907.

To this union were born eight children, three of whom are dead. Surviving are Ernest L. Jenkins residing in Auburn; Aletha J. Kinsey of St. Joe; George F. of Spencerville; Harry L. of Fort Wayne and Frederick E. living at his father's home.

July 1', 1910, Mr. Jenkins and Mrs. Emily Welch were married. She, with a brother, George F. Jenkins of Baltimore, Md., and Sarah E. Lawrence and Ida M. West, sisters, also living in Baltimore, survive.

Fourteen grandchildren and six great grandchildren also survive.

Mr. Jenkins was long an active member of the Methodist church, and for a number of years taught a class of boys in the Sunday school of the First M. E. church in Auburn. His life was exemplary and his character above reproach.

He was a member of the Odd Fellows, the Daughters of Rebekah and the Knights of Pythias and for many years occupied many positions of [illegible] in the work conducted [illegible] orders.

PRODUCE MARKETING BUREAUS IN INDIANA

Association Organized in Three Counties to Enable Members to Sell Products.

(By C. R. GEORGE, Director of Dairy and Produce Marketing, Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, Indianapolis, Ind.)

A producing marketing department of the county farmers' association that will enable the members of the association to market cream, poultry and eggs in a co-operative way has already been organized in Wells, Whitley and Jay counties, Indiana, and organization work is under way in several other counties.

The "County Unit" plan of organization has been worked out and recommended by the Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations and is proving to be an efficient way of handling the business. The county farmers' association or farm bureau incorporates under the proper state law and establishes a "Produce Marketing Department." Contracts are then printed and committees selected or solicitors hired to get a sufficient number of producers signed up so that the volume of business will be sufficient to keep the operating costs low. Most counties are signing contracts that bind the producer to market all of the cream, eggs, and poultry that he has for sale through the association for one year.

C. R. George.

The department is financed by requiring each producer to sign a $10 collateral note, which is used as security at the bank for a loan to buy the necessary equipment and provide operating capital. After the marketing is started a small per cent is set aside as a sinking fund which is used to pay off the loan.

After the contracts are signed the county farm bureau board of directors adopt suitable rules and regulations to govern the operations of the department and outlines a plan of supervising the work. The plan used in Whitley county of appointing three members of the county board to represent the board and be responsible to them for the operations of this department is possibly the most satisfactory plan to use, but capable business men who are particularly interested in this project should always be selected.

The next step is [illegible] a [illegible] manager who [illegible] vision of the [illegible] grading and [illegible] who keeps the [illegible] finances. If [illegible] at the [illegible] time to start bringing in their produce.

The marketing or selling of the produce has been provided for by establishing the Indiana Dairy Marketing association to operate as a selling agency for the county units. Each county unit becomes a member of the Dairy Marketing association by paying a $50 membership fee and helps to maintain and operate the service department of the Dairy Marketing association by paying a small percentage service charge based on the volume of business handled by the county unit. The Dairy Marketing association is responsible for making contracts to sell the cream and arranging with suitable commission firms or establishing co-operative selling agencies for selling the eggs and poultry. In this way uniform grades and standards of products can be established, uniform contracts secured and the various county units can co-operate in shipping and selling the produce.

Payments for produce handled under this plan of marketing are usually made after the returns are received. At least this should be done until the reserve fund of the association is large enough so that a cash price can be paid on delivery. Most of the associations are paying the local station price when returns are received and the remainder of the returns after operating expenses are paid go into an undivided fund that is pro-rated to the members on a patronage basis every three to six months. The county manager receives the returns from the sale of produce, pays the operating expenses and makes out the checks for the producers. These checks go to the local station and are distributed by the local operator. The funds for each local will be carried in the local bank and checked out of that bank to the members. This plan of handling the finances places the responsibility in the hands of one person who can be placed under sufficient bond and the finances are adequately safeguarded. His books can be audited by the county board and will be inspected from time to time by the auditor of the Indiana Dairy Marketing association.

FEED SERVICE IS ORGANIZED

Co-Operative Buying Scheme Established in Michigan for Benefit of Dairymen.

The Michigan State Farm bureau announces the establishment of a co-operative feed buying service, whereby dairymen may contract through their local co-operative associations for their winter supply of dairy rations for delivery in equal monthly shipments during the winter at summer feed prices. The feed buying service is on the 24 per cent protein, open-formula dairy rations, which is approved by the Michigan Agricultural College Dairy department. The ration is known as the Michigan Farm Bureau Milkmaker. Every bag will carry on the regular analysis tag the exact number of pounds of each ingredient in the feed. The local co-operatives started taking orders on September 5 and will close on October 20.

MANY TYPES OF ROADS BUILT

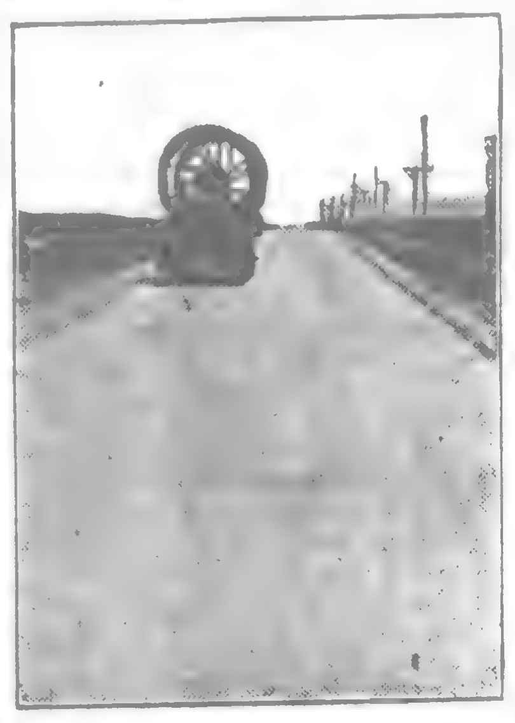
Variation in Federal-Aid Construction Due to Climatic and Traffic Conditions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Various types of federal aid roads are built in different sections of the country. According to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, this variation is due largely to availability of materials, volume of traffic and climatic conditions.

The 18,299 miles of federal aid roads completed have been distributed among the eight major types of construction as follows: Graded and drained, 2,528 miles; sand-clay, 2,222 miles; gravel, 7,018 miles; water-bound macadam, 456 miles; bituminous macadam, 654 miles; bituminous concrete, 699 miles; concrete, 3,350 miles, and brick, 287 miles.

In the group of states composed of Washington, Oregon and California, the 1,125.2 miles completed has been distributed as follows: Graded and drained, 248.4; gravel, 498.8; water-bound macadam, 25.6; bituminous concrete, 56.4, and concrete, 296.5. Bridges completed total 2.3 miles in length.



Cement Roads Enable Farmer to Market His Crops Quickly.

The total mileage completed in each state is as follows: Washington, 359.1; Oregon, 462.5, and California, 305.5. In addition the mileage under construction or completed and final payment not made is as follows: Washington, 17.4; Oregon, 29.6, and California, 435.8.

HIGHWAY UPKEEP IMPORTANT

Gravel and Macadam Surfaces Need Constant Watching to Prevent Ruts and Holes.

If experience has taught anything it has demonstrated the truth of the old saying that a stitch in time saves nine. Women will concede that. The farmer has learned that the time taken to drive a staple in the fence will save hours of hunting for the hogs or cattle, and the damage they may do before they are returned again to their lot.

It is just as extravagant to neglect the highways, says the Successful Farmer. No matter what surfacing has been used, it needs watching and repair. Gravel and macadam especially need constant watching to prevent ruts and chuck holes. Every hole becomes two holes very soon because the toss given car or wagon by a hole pounds another hole next to it. Reconstruction and large repairs soon run into money. A shovelful of gravel or rock at the right time will prevent further cost.

The wear and tear and cost of repairing highways is nothing as compared to the cost of damages to cars and cargoes that result from these chuck holes in the roads.

Tax money is surely squandered when spent on highway improvement and then nothing is spent on little repairs. One man in a car or motorcycle can patrol many miles of road once a week, at least, and repair all slight damages to the surface as they occur and save the taxpayers a lot of money.

Why Bake At Home

when you can buy bread like it, ready baked?

COUNT the raisins—at least eight big, plump, tender fruit-meats to the slice.

Taste it—see how the raisin flavor permeates the bread.

No need to bake at home when we've arranged with bakers in almost every town and city to bake this full-fruited raisin bread.

Just 'phone and they'll deliver it—all ready to surprise the family tonight.

It comes from master bakers' modern ovens in your city. And it's made with Sun-Maid Raisins.

That's another reason for its superiority. A rare combination of nutritious cereal and fruit—both good and good for you, so you should serve it at least twice a week.

Use Sun-Maid Raisins also in puddings, cakes and cookies. You may be offered other brands that you know less well than Sun-Maids, but the kind you want is the kind you know is good. Insist, therefore, on Sun-Maid brand. They cost no more than ordinary raisins.

Delivery Man's Bright Scheme for Getting Rid of Dog Somehow Didn't Seem to Work.

William Rugenstein, delivery man for the Big Four railroad, one time owned a houn' dog that he wished to get rid of. As a certain means of accomplishing his object, he locked the dog in a freight car bound for Springfield, Ohio, heaved a sigh of relief and went about his work, glad with the thought that he finally had got rid of that dog.

Two weeks later, Rugenstein was opening a car containing a consignment of goods from Springfield. He heard something scratching on the door.

As he opened it, out bounded three emaciated, raw-boned cur dogs. On the door of the car was written in chalk:

Darky's Desire for Telephonic Connection With San Francisco Had Become Secondary Matter.

An old negro hurried into a drug store telephone booth and asked for long-distance connection, giving the address of a person in San Francisco. After a long wait the operator told him that the San Francisco exchange was on the wire.

"Now," she said, "deposit $7.65 and I will give you the connection."

The old negro appeared not to have understood.

"What did yo' say, Miss?" he asked.

"I said you must deposit $7.65. Put the money in the slots on the telephone."

"Ma-aam?"

"I told you to deposit $7.65." She raised her voice.

"Say, Miss," came the quivering tones of the darky, "how much do it cost t' hang up dis thing?"—From Judge.

NADINE LA VITTE

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late 60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife.

"Oh, not very much. I am fond of him too, and I believe he is going to be of much help to me."

"Well, I've lost five hundred this morning, but I can stand it. I have ordered the mules hitched up, and am going to drive with you about the plantation. I am going to show you a government here in the delta."

During the drive the old gentleman was talkative, sometimes with the school man's hesitating precision, but more often as the free companion, agreeable rather than discursive. Drace evinced in everything a keen interest, but it was not real. His heart was not with him. It was in New Orleans, in a narrow street where boards were nailed across a door.

From what he had been able to gather from the General and by talking in seeming idleness to boatmen and to men along the River, Drace confirmed the information snatched by Shottle from the label on the Frenchman's wine case—namely, that old Stepho had a haunt somewhere in the neighborhood. A shrewd old negro had said that the outlaw lived in the swamp, in a house built of periwinkle shells. On the opposite shore, and several miles below the General's home, there lay a great wood of cypress and a thick tangle of salt cedar, a sort of everglade, a marsh with hundreds of knoll-islands here and there rising among the bayous. Here was indeed an outlaw's paradise, for Drace was told that not nearly all its lanes and crooked byways of brown water had been explored. Herein he began his search for old Stepho, day after day penetrating farther and farther into this moss-hanging wild. He did not confide in General Bethpage, for his mission was sacred unto himself alone, and by himself alone must it be accomplished.

At his feet in the canoe lay a rope, one end of it a hangman's noose, and he smiled at it, grim and firm of faith. Sometimes his canoe would stall in the carpet of scum. But he forced his way through into a narrow and unobstructed channel. Now he paddled swiftly. In front of him a great alligator arose and sank, the canoe grazing his scaly back. With a shriek great birds flew, flapping low, their long legs stretched out behind them. Drace was armed with a revolver, but did not wish to fire it, caution warning him. When he ceased for a time to paddle, how still everything was!

The adventurer liked to feel that no one had ever been there before. But now suddenly something caught his eye. In the green tangle on a low bank he saw a pole with wires strung to it, a sort of gate. The wires were covered with vines, trained about them. But for what purpose, here in this brushy tangle? He caught hold of a weed and pulled the canoe up closer, took hold of the pole and now he found a lower slat to which the wires were also attached. Farther along he discovered a sort of hinge attached to a snag almost hidden by briers.

"I'll open this gate and see what lies beyond," he mused, drawing the canoe back to the other end. He pulled at the pole, and it yielded. The gate opened, and through the weeds that appeared to have been bent by the passing of a boat, he saw a narrow channel.

It was easy enough to shove through the weeds and to enter the new canal. Soon it broadened, winding about among the enormous cypress trees. Now he came upon a widening that looked like a millpond, except that in the midst of it arose an island of tall cane. It was an attractive sight, and he ceased paddling to look. Slowly he drifted toward the island's shore. He took hold of a cane root and pulled the nose of the canoe hard into the bank. Then he got out, parting the stiff and stubborn cane in a shade as dense as night. But now through this parting hallway he could see sunlight beyond, and knew that he was about to come into an open space. And out into it he looked with a start; for there, a few feet from the edge of the fringe of cane, stood a small house made of minute shells cemented—periwinkles. Its roof was of thatch, the long rushes gathered from the swamp; and about the door was a cypress vine, its red blooms dazzling in the sun. And then a bended cane Drace held was crushed in his hand, for through the door and out beneath the vine came the barbaric rose-maid, Nadine la Vitte.

CHAPTER VII

She did not take fright when she saw him. She was startled, but did not run into the house; she stood dazed, her marvelous eyes in wide stare. Slowly he came forward, gazing, his hat in his hand. He dropped the hat, stooped, caught it up and now stood before her.

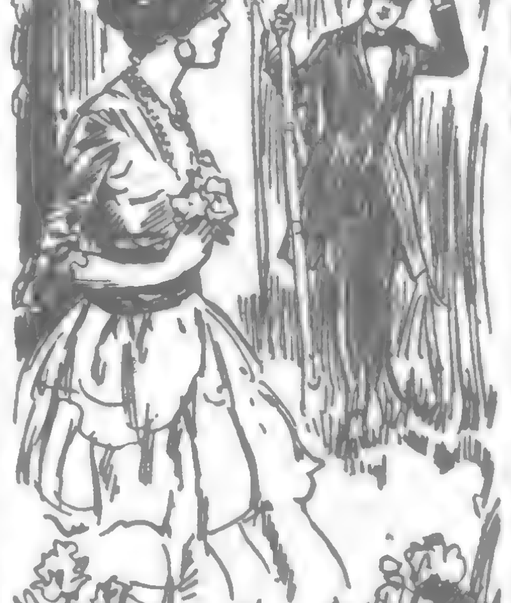
If she were agitated, he could not discover it. She stood where the red blooms brushed her brow. He held forth his hand, and slowly she shook her head.

"Monsieur, how foolish to come! If you do not go now, in a short time you will die. My father! He will shoot you. I should like it not to see you dead, you are so brave. My father, he will think you come for him."

"But I will tell him that I did not. I—"

He moved nearer, but with her hand raised, palm toward him, she motioned him away.

"You do not know what you talk. Nothing could you tell him, for the gun fire, and you will be no more. Please go away now."



Through the Door and Out Beneath the Vine Came the Barbaric Rose-Maid, Nadine La Vitte.

"Oh, it is because you want to get rid of me."

"No, no, no. It is not that. I like you much. You are so brave — and handsome. It is because I fear for you. My father would be angry to have me talk with a northern man. Go now, and for my sake, come no more."

"Mr. Boyce," said Drace then, "is not a northern man?"

She shot a sudden startled look at him. "Mr. Boyce—but he is my father's friend. My father expects me to marry Mr. Boyce. And if my father should come back and find me here talking with you, he would—Please, Mr. Drace, go at once, before it is too late. See, the sun is almost set. The stars come soon, and then through the cane he come. Oh, won't you please be kind to me and go at once!"

"Kind to you? God bless you, I would die for you."

"Oh, you make love soon! But won't you please go now! Quick, I hear something."

"You hear my heart. Let me stay ten minutes, and then I go."

"Ah, but why would you give me ten minutes of fear?"

He saw that her anxiety was real, and his heart smote him for cruelty to this dazzling creature whose father he would hang with a rope brought from the North.

"Yes, I will go. I wanted to tell you something, but my regret at going is so deep that I forget what it was. But I must come again when the sun is not so low. No, tell me please, when that shall be?"

"Never would a man [illegible] this to me . . . [illegible] when I [illegible] [illegible] will be [illegible] the [illegible]"

"[illegible] and [illegible] I'll be a week, lacking one day. You have set doomsday for my return."

"If you come before, you will not find me. And now it is the good-by."

She drew back quickly through the door, and down into the fringe of tall cane he went, parting his way to the canoe that lay nosing the mossy bank.

Only now that she was gone and night had come did he remember—remember that this girl who had bewitched the swift minutes with him was the daughter of his sworn enemy Stepho la Vitte.

A voice called him as he was cursing himself for a traitor to his father's memory. On a point of land he saw three men standing. One of them beckoned him, and he turned in toward them. One of them spoke:

"Would you be kind to set us across? The night he comes, and we would not be lost in the swamp. We will get to the river. Would you, please?"

"Yes, but I don't know that my canoe will hold four. We may get a ducking."

He pulled alongside and steadied the canoe while they got in. Now he paddled carefully. The man who had talked, and whom the other two addressed as Tonez, requested to be set on a bushy shore where the water was so shallow that the canoe was almost stuck in the ooze. With his paddle Drace propped his craft steady, for them to get out. Tonez got out—and with the quickness of a cat snatched a rope from beneath his coat and threw a noose about Drace's arms. Then the two men in the boat threw themselves upon him. There was a hard struggle in the canoe and then out into the water, but they brought him ashore, wound about with the rope.

Now they made haste to tie him securely. The canoe was dragged ashore; Drace stretched out in it, and now they took it on their shoulders and hastened through the tangled underbrush. He had fought hard, but had not cried out. But as he was carried along, he swore bitterly at himself for not looking at first with suspicion on the brutes who now had him in their power.

"Ah, you would steal about and spy," said Tonez. "But you steal about no more. The carpetbaggers, they say, 'You brave?' and you say, 'Yes, I am brave.' Then they say, 'You find old Stepho.' And you go to find him. He is not at home. But his men, they come just in time."

"You are liars. I was—"

"Ah, you come with the joke. Tomorrow, we will laugh. Will you? No, you will not laugh."

. . . .

Drace lay quietly tugging at the ropes that bound him. If he could spring out free, what a scattering he would make of them! They stopped, entering some sort of doorway, and rested the canoe on the ground. Tonez lighted a candle, and Drace saw that he was in an old cabin, almost ready to fall. They rolled him out on the floor, face down, and beneath his arms they passed the paddle of the canoe, so that he could not turn over. Then the others went out, leaving Tonez holding the candle.

"Does the kind gentleman know why they gone? They go to get the dry rushes and the dead bark. For why? To make the fire. It is not cold, no? But they will make the fire of the cabin, and when the morning come, there will be the ashes of the kind gentleman; and the people they will say: 'Ah, he lie down to sleep, and burn up.'"

Drace heard them piling their murderous fuel into a corner. Again he appealed to them, tried threats, told them that his friends would hang them; but they laughed, Tonez bending over him with the candle.

"In a few minutes I light the blaze and take the candle away . . . You talk of Stepho's daughter. Remember she may love me some, too."

"You Spanish devil!"

"The kind gentleman he come close. I'm Portuguese. But no matter. When Stepho come, we tell him what we do, and he pat us on the back and give us money. But the light would hurt the kind gentleman's eyes when he lie that way on his jaw. I will not stoop so low with the candle . . . Oh, what a fine pile they get! It will make the blaze beautiful. All ready, yes? I will touch it off."

Drace could not see him, but he heard the first crackle of the dried rushes, saw the flame dim the candle light. Now he cried aloud, the men laughing, the mounting flame crackling louder. Tonez came back to him.

"We leave you now. You will not need this candle to light you to bed; so I blow it out, see? And I take it with me."

They hastened out, and he heard them laughing as they ran through the underbrush. With all his harnessed might he strove to break the paddle so that he might roll toward the door, but it was strong, and he broke only the tip of the blade. A louder crackling told him that the dry boards above were catching. Soon the roof would fall in; great sparks would fly upward, fall and hiss in the water.

Why should he lie there, seeing all this in his mind, he wondered. He had read that men approaching death sometimes spoke foolish words, and here he lay with his mind on trivial [illegible]. Then he would writhe in a [illegible] . . . about him glared! [illegible] . . .

Why Farmers are Turning to

CHEVROLET

for Economical Transportation

In 1922 Chevrolet jumped from seventh to second place in sales of all cars, and to first place in sales of fully equipped modern cars.

Purchases by farmers were the chief factor in this remarkable development.

Farmers want automobiles not only of low first price, but also of low later cost for operation and maintenance.

They want room, comfort, and the ability to stand up under hard conditions.

They find that Chevrolet, fully equipped as sold, is the best value per dollar in the low-priced field, and neighbors tell them it costs less per mile to operate.

RETURN ENGAGEMENT OF ROBERT B. MANTELL

And Genevieve Hamper in Shakespearean and Classic Plays at the Majestic Theatre, Fort Wayne

Because of the capacity houses that greeted Robert B. Mantell and Genevieve Hamper last week at the Majestic Theatre, it was proven that Fort Wayne and vicinity was much interested in Shakespearean and classic plays. With this in mind, Manager Biemer prevailed upon the Mantell Management to change their route in order that he might present his entire repertoire here. In view of the keen appreciation shown during his former visit, Mr. Mantell, contrary to his policy changed his route and will present an entirely new repertoire at the Majestic Theatre for three days, starting Thursday, February 8th.

For the first night of his engagement, he will present Sir Bulwer-Lytton's powerful story of France, "Richelieu," in which Mr. Mantell will be seen as the Cardinal minister, and critics do not hesitate to pronounce him the greatest of all Richelieus, giving as a reason "because he possesses the deep heart, the large experience of life, the philosophy, the repose, and power, that are imperatively essential." The story of Richelieu's guardianship of his beautiful ward—how his nimble wits foiled his enemies; how he was in turn, hated, feared and loved, makes one of the most striking characters in history. Miss Hamper, as Julie, exhibits great emotional power. Torn between her love for De Mauprat and her loyalty to the Cardinal, as well as beseiged with the conflicts of jealousy, despair and distrust, Julie is a character that calls forth the best, and in the most exacting demands. Miss Hamper proves herself able to portray the role in the finest sense.

"Hamlet" is announced for the second performance, on Friday evening. There was a time when theatre-goers could name a full half dozen Hamlets, but such days are past. It is doubtful, however, if any of the long line of tragedians ever gave a more finished performance of the Prince of Denmark than Mr. Mantell. As Ophelia, bereft of reason, haunted by the ghost of her love for Hamlet, Miss Hamper gives a most exquisite performance of this role which is one of the most exacting of Shakespeare's characters.

For Saturday matinee, "Romeo and Juliet" will be offered. The Juliet of Miss Hamper is one to be studied with care because of its exquisite simplicity, its soft romance of tone, beauty of speech and splendor of passion, in this "the greatest love story in the world." Both Mr. Mantell and Miss Hamper handle the many delightful scenes with fine skill.

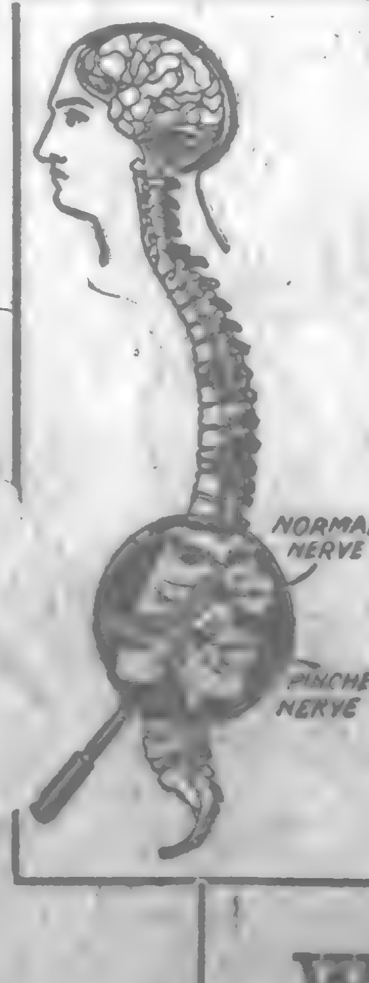
"A Painful Disease of Muscles and Joints"

(Health Talk by W. C. Gauld)



The dictionary gives the definition of rheumatism as "a painful disease of the muscles and joints" and every sufferer from this disease knows that these words express the truth about it very conservatively. The fact is that rheumatism, mild or severe, is plain torture.

A chiropractic patient discussing his experience seeking relief for this disease said he had tried many things and with benefit, "but nothing seemed to reach in and get at the something which was creating the disease until I tried chiropractic." That exactly expresses the situation of chiropractic with respect to rheumatism. It is [illegible] in eradicating this disease from the [illegible] because it removes the cause. By chiropractic spinal adjustments the liver and [illegible] are restored to normal activity and the [illegible] poisons are cleared from the system.

VALUE OF TRUTH

"We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

"The highest loyalty to which men can subject themselves is loyalty to truth."

When Aristotle was asked what a person could gain by uttering a falsehood, he replied "not to be credited when he shall tell the truth."

That indeed would be an inveniable predicament

But Aristotle was right.

Faith in such a one becomes severely strained, if not altogether shattered.

LAXATIVE
for Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

Mrs. Jennings Says Tanlac Restored Strength After "Flu" Attack and Ended Stomach Trouble.

"I was almost an invalid and Tanlac built me up to a strong, well woman. I consider it my best friend," is the grateful and characteristic statement of Mrs. Emma Jennings, residing at Clearwater, Cal.

"An attack of the grippe left me completely broken down. My stomach felt sick, my legs and arms so tired and weak I could hardly use them, and I scarcely had energy and strength to dress myself. I just kept getting weaker in spite of all I could do and, as I am seventy-one, I had begun to think my age was against me ever getting well.

"Almost from the day I began taking Tanlac I commenced to feel stronger. So I kept picking up with every bottle until now I can easily do all my housework, for I am feeling fine. I wouldn't be without Tanlac in the house. It is just grand."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

SWAMP-ROOT FOR KIDNEY AILMENTS

There is only one medicine that really stands out pre-eminent as a medicine for curable ailments of the kidneys, liver and bladder.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root stands the highest for the reason that it has proven to be just the remedy needed in thousands upon thousands of distressing cases. Swamp-Root makes friends quickly because its mild and immediate effect is soon realized in most cases. It is a gentle, healing vegetable compound.

Start treatment at once. Sold at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Attribute Their Success to Newspaper Advertising

In an interview today, Mr. Warren Wright, President of the Calumet Baking Powder Company, strongly advocated the use of newspaper advertising, and points to Calumet's success as proof of his statement.

"Calumet sales are 2½ times as much as any other brand," stated Mr. Wright, "and we attribute this to our lavish use of newspaper space. We believe that the newspaper is the most direct medium we can use in getting our message across to the housewife, and we know from our experience covering thirty years that the housewife will respond to newspaper advertising quicker than she will to any other form of advertising.

"The housewives have confidence in newspaper advertisements because they know that the newspapers set up high standards for their advertisers. It is for that reason that the housewife looks to the newspaper for information on products in which she is interested."

The Cottage Gardener

The Flats With Growing Plants, Being Given Fresh Air on a Warm Day, Before They Are Transferred to Pots or Other Containers, for Further Development.

THE VACANT LOTS GOOD FOR GARDEN

Richest Soil Is Often Found in Neglected Places—Clean Out Unsightly Weeds.

Why not have a garden this year on that vacant city, town or village lot that is now growing to weeds or covered with empty tin cans? says the United States Department of Agriculture. The weeds and tin cans can be disposed of at any time, and all stones and other refuse material should be removed. If there are enough stones present, they might be placed in neat and attractive piles and either flowers or vines of some sort run over them next season. If the vacant lot is near enough to the house, it can be spaded and all other work done at odd times.

Garden in the Vacant Lot.

During the winter months it is well to study the seed catalogues and make up an order of seeds, including perhaps 10 to 15 different kinds of vegetables. To this should be added a list of four or five flowering plants, such as zinnias, cockscomb, scarlet sage and nasturtium, to be used for border plants. Snap beans, lima beans, tomatoes, onions, cabbage, carrots, swiss chard, spinach, radishes and lettuce are among the most important crops for the small garden. Where space will permit early Irish potatoes, sweet corn, summer squash, muskmelons, cucumbers and pumpkins may be included. It is far better, however, in the small garden to plant not more than 10 or 12 of the most important crops that are in greatest demand as fresh food for the family [illegible] crops that require [illegible] but at the same time it is possible [illegible] garden devoted to [illegible].

PLANTS GROWN IN POTS ARE THRIFTY

Vegetable or Flowering Stalks Should Be Transferred Several Times.

Pot-grown plants, vegetable or flowering plants, first started in the flats then transferred to small pots, then to larger ones, give the best satisfaction, and afford a sturdy plant that can be set into the open ground when the time comes.

There is a knack in the handling of plants for the pot-grown variety, but it is not difficult to grow them and the satisfaction obtained, as well as the pleasure, is most gratifying.

The pots for growing such plants do not have to be of the store kind. Paper pots can be made at home; old cans, round oatmeal cartons, and the like, serve the purpose well.

The soil preparation should be about the same kind as in the flats, with coarser soil, pebbles, broken flower pots and such, to afford drainage; an opening at the bottom of each being necessary.

Plants grown in this manner are more easy to handle when they are transferred to the open; the roots need not be disturbed, if removed when the soil is slightly damp. This will be advantageous to the plant, and it will immediately take hold.

The transferring process should be begun with the stronger plants in the flats when they are about one inch high. Select the best plants for transplanting. The flat should be watered well before the plants are removed, thus allowing dirt to cling to the roots, which should not be torn or cut, if possible to remove them intact.

COLLINS-JONES BILL HELD UP

Real Estate Measure Is Killed in the House by Republicans.

DEMOCRATS ARE DEFEATED

Measure to Combine the Indiana University With Butler to Be Presented—Its Author Points Out Advantages.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana house of representatives indefinitely postponed further consideration of the Collins-Jones bill, which would have required the reappraisement of real estate in 1925, one year earlier than the time set by the present law. The bill was a Democratic proposal and originally fixed the reappraisement for this year but was amended to have the appraisement come in 1925. When the vote for indefinite postponement was cast, it showed Republicans voting against the bill and Democrats for it. The vote was 50 to 47 in favor of the Republicans.

Road Bill Passed.

The house passed the Jonnson (Monroe) bill making it compulsory with county commissioners to prepare plans and specifications for the improvement of any county or township road for the use of four different kinds of materials. The vote was 77 to 8. A special bill for the relief of James H. Banther, of Sullivan county, was passed, 85 ayes and no noes.

The Ahlgren bill to give guardians power to mortgage real estate of their wards provided that the mortgage does not extend more than one year beyond the minority of the ward or five years on court action, was passed by a vote of 60 to 24.

A strong reaction against the measure which would tax the property of fraternities and sororities is seen in the announcement made by Representative Albert B. Clapp of Clark county, that he will introduce a measure in the house of representatives to move Inidana university to Indianapolis and combine it with Butler college. Mr. Clapp is a graduate of Hanover college and is a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

The fraternity tax bill was introduced by Representative E. William G. Johnson of Bloomington, where Indiana university is located. Mr. Johnson's bill is said to be backed by the residents of Bloomington and the residents of West Lafayette, where Purdue university is located. The fraternity property at Bloomington and in Lafayette is said to be valued at more than $1,000,000,000. Friends of Mr. Johnson's bill assert that this property should be placed on the tax duplicates to lighten the burden on other property.

Lindley Measure Held Up.

The senate committee on education withheld action on Senator Alono H. Lindley's measure to reorganize the state board of education.

The bill carrying out recommendations of the school survey provides for the reduction of the state board from thirteen to seven members. Some members of the committee took the position that such a change might offer an opportunity for the creation of a "book trust" in the future, as book companies could afford to enter into a campaign for a governor to get control of the appointment of the state board, all of whose members, with the exception of the state superintendent of public instruction, would be named by the governor.

Among the bills passed by the senate was one by Senator Rowland H. Hill (Shelby, Rush and Fayette, Rep.) governing the sale and distribution of coal; a bill by Senator Alonzo H. Lindley (Vermillion, Fountain and Warren, Rep.) providing that where a non-resident is named as executor in a will the court may appoint a coexecutor who lives in the state; a bill by Senator Clem J. Richards (Vigo, Rep.) to provide method of dissolution for corporations not organized for pecuniary profit, and a uniform law for transfer of stock by Senator Charles S. Nichols (Lagrange, Steuben and Dekalb, Rep.).

A bill by Senator Oliver Holmes (Lake, Rep.) to prohibit members and employees of the Indiana public service commission from appearing before the commission as an agent or an attorney within [illegible] after leaving the commission, was passed by a vote of 27 to 17.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

New Albany.—The following district officers of the Daughters of America were elected at the district convention here: Lillian Sanford, Jeffersonville, councilor; Edna Gresham, New Albany, vice councilor; Martha Dennis, New Albany, associate vice councilor; Bertha Lasher, Jeffersonville, conductress; Mary Gresham, New Albany, warden; Alma Hollowell, Jeffersonville, inside sentinel; Jennie Dillard, New Albany, outside sentinel; Kathleen Hamel, New Albany, secretary; Margaret Chapman, Jeffersonville, treasurer; Martha Finan, New Albany, past councilor, and Georgia Jones, Jeffersonville, associate past councilor.

Fort Wayne.—Hubert E. Habig was found guilty of practicing medicine without a license and was fined $200 and costs by Judge J. Mungovan in police court. He appealed to the Circuit court. Habig, on the witness stand, said he could cure all diseases. He said he never termed himself a doctor and never attended a medical school, but said he had the power to heal. The charge was filed by William F. Gott, secretary of the Indiana Medical association.

Marion.—The contest case of David G. Lewis against Orville Wells over the office of trustee of Fairmount township, will come to trial before Judge J. F. Charles in Grant Circuit court. Lewis, Democrat, was declared elected by the election board, but was counted out of the office by a recount commission, and also by the county commissioners. Wells, Republican, is now in charge of the office, having succeeded himself in office the first of the year.

Shelbyville. — Welsey McKibing, wanted in Hancock county on a charge of passing worthless checks, and Francis Adams, defendant in a charge filed in Johnson county, were arrested here and turned over to the authorities of the two counties. McKibing is charged with passing bad checks in Greenfield, and the warrant for the arrest of Adams was filed more than a year ago. Both young men have been working here for several months.

Greensburg.—Officers elected by the local post of Spanish-American War Veterans are as follows: Maurice Worland, past commander; Owen Stedman, commander; E. J. Harbison, junior vice commander; Lewis Fultz, officer of the day; Samuel Evans, officer of the guard; R. C. Kanouse, George Wilkinson and Maurice Worland, trustees; Walter Crisler, adjutant, and Frank Cchilley, quartermaster.

Evansville. — County Patrolmen Hamsley, Eperson and Jones raided the soft drink stand of Gephas Ferguson and arrested Harry Pheurerkauf on a charge of violating the liquor laws, after a small amount of liquor was found in a pint bottle. The officers returned about an hour later and raided the place again and found a new bartender, Ed Harper, on the job. Harper was arrested after more liquor was found.

Bedford.—A joint banquet and get-together meeting of the Citizens' National bank and Citizens' Trust company stockholders, officials and employees was held at the First Methodist church. W. R. Martin, legal representative of the Fletcher American company of Indianapolis, was the speaker of the evening. The past year has been the most successful of any year in the history of the two institutions.

Franklin.—Harry Phillips and Carl Brockman of Edinburg pleaded guilty to charges of petit larceny in the Johnson Circuit court, and each was sentenced by Fremont Miller, judge, to serve eight years in the Indiana reformatory. The sentences were suspended pending good behavior. The two youths were accused of stealing sugar from the Union Starch and Refining company's plant at Edinburg.

South Bend.—August DeVoss, policeman, arrested his brother and brought him to the police station here. Given a number of complaints from Capt. R. W. DeWitt, commanding the local company of the Indiana National Guard, who desired nonreporting members to be brought in and fined, DeVoss found a warrant against his brother, Archibald DeVoss. He carried out orders.

Auburn.—A jury in the De Kalb Circuit court awarded Mrs. Theresa Faust and her children a verdict of $20,000 against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company because of the killing of John, husband and father, who was struck by a cake of ice at the railroad company's icehouse here and fatally injured.

Indianapolis.—Almost 300 persons have been arrested here in the last few days during which the city department of health has waged a crusade against spitting. Practically all of them were fined $1 without costs in city court.

Seymour.—The last of the horse-drawn fire-fighting equipment owned by the city has been removed from the [illegible]

COULD HARDLY DO HER WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Eat, Sleep and Feel Better Every Way

Chicago, Ill.—"I was weak and rundown and in such a nervous condition that I could hardly do my work. I was tired all the time, and dizzy, and could not sleep and had no appetite. I tried different medicines for years, but they did not help me. Then I read in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for other women and gave it a trial. I began to eat better and could sleep, and consider it a wonderful medicine. I recommend it to my friends and will never be without it."—Mrs. M. OHLEN, 3640 S. Marshfield Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

It is such letters as these that testify to the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This woman speaks from the fullness of her heart. She describes as correctly as she can her condition, first the symptoms that bothered her the most, and later the disappearance of those symptoms. It is a sincere expression of gratitude.

For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so praised by women.

Relative Rewards.

"Do you know," said the earnest person, "that there are men renowned in literature, art and science whose annual incomes are not large enough to give them the ordinary comforts of life?"

"I don't doubt it," said Mr. Gawker; "but if nature gave them sound bodies to start with and they've enjoyed reasonably good health, it seems to me that it's their own fault if they haven't gone in for athletics and acquired proficiency with a pair of eight-ounce gloves."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 11

THE SPIRIT OF PRAYER

LESSON TEXT—Luke 18:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise—Psalm 51:17.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matt. 6:5-15; Luke 15:20-24; John 4:23, 24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Two Men Prayed.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Pray.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Prayer that God Answers.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Secret to Prevailing Prayer.

I. Men Ought Always to Pray (v. 1).

Prayer is absolutely necessary to the spiritual life. It is to the spiritual life what breathing is to the physical life. Men ought to pray under every variety of circumstance—in times of sorrow and burdens for strength to endure; in times of joy and success for grace to behave aright. Prayer ought to be persisted in even when the answer is not immediately seen. God does hear and answer prayer even when we do not understand the mysteries of delay.

II. The Urgent Prayer of a Widow (vv. 2-8).

The picture here is of a helpless widow who was being cheated out of her property rights, coming to a godless judge for redress. Her only means of getting help was to prove the justice of her claim by her persistence. Even this did not gain access to his heart, for he feared not God nor regarded men. He complied with her request in order to get rid of her.

The point here is not that God is like this unjust judge and can be teased into compliance, but rather that if such action can be secured on the part of a godless judge by persistence, how much surer will be the help of God to those who cry unto Him day and night.

The helpless widow pictures the church in this age suffering the deprivation of her rights. It is not the church praying for vengeance upon her enemies, but suing for the possession of her rights by virtue of her covenant relation in Christ. The inheritance of the church will be actualized at the coming of Christ. This is why the truth concerning the coming of Christ is so vital to Christianity, and why such disastrous consequences follow the loss of the Blessed Hope.

The apparent delay in the vindication of the church may dishearten some and cause others to mock (II Peter 3:4). Jesus' question should be a solemn warning against allowing the apparent delay of the coming of the Lord to crowd out our praying. Though many may give up we should be assured that genuine faith will abide, and that the divine promise concerning the coming of Christ shall be fulfilled. We can be sure of God.

III. The Prayer of the Proud Pharisee (vv. 9-12).

1. He Took a Striking Attitude (v. 11). The Jewish custom was to stand while praying, but the word "stood" implies the assumption of an ostentatious position. He was self-righteous and trusted in himself.

2. He Prayed With Himself (vv. 11, 12). He used the name of God, but it was really a soliloquy. He pretended to be thanking God when really he was rehearsing his own goodness—complimenting himself. His whole thought centered in himself. He congratulated himself for (1) his morality (vv. 11). He thanked God that he was not as other men are, such as extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as the publican who was standing afar off. (2) His Religious Merits (v. 12). He fasted twice a week and gave tithes of all he possessed. He thus informed God that he did more than was required, implying that God was under obligation to him.

IV. The Prayer of the Humble Publican (v. 13).

In striking contrast with this supposed saint stood the publican whose shame kept him from even looking up to Heaven, beating upon his breast as a sign of anguish of soul, crying out to God to be merciful to him, a sinner. He took his place as a sinner and called upon God for mercy.

V. Christ's Testimony (v. 14).

He declared that the publican went away justified rather than the Pharisee. The one great and urgent need on the part of men is a confession of sin and a willingness to cry unto God for mercy.

The Dull Man.

A dull man is so near a dead man that he is hardly to be counted in the list of the living; and as he is not to be buried whilst half alive, so he is as little to be employed whilst he is half dead.—[illegible]

Two Big Farm Sales Feb. 28 and Mar. 1

There were two large farm sale jobs printed in this office last week. The one was that of B. E. Soule, residing 3 miles southeast of Spencerville on what is known as the Samuel Zehner farm, on February, 28, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. The list consists of 3 head of horses, 5 head cattle, 10 head hogs, chickens, geese, hay and all kinds of farming tools.

The other sale is that of J. E. Folts, residing ½ mile northwest of St. Joe on the farm formerly owned by Mel Herrick, on Thursday, March 1. This sale will begin at 10 o'clock A. M. also. A fine team of horses, 4 head of milk cows, 16 head of hogs, some hay and grain, and a good line of farming implements are listed.

Mr. Soule is selling out because he expects to move to Auburn where he will work in a factory, where he worked several years ago. Mr. Folts has been seriously sick with heart trouble for the past two months and while he is gradually improving his health will not allow him to farm this coming summer. Hence his sale.

Rhodenbaugh & McNamara of St. Joe will auctioneer both of these sales and Wm. G. Erick of Spencerville will clerk both.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Brown and Dewey Smith and wife, visited the former's daughter, Mrs. Pauline McDaniels at the Irene Byron Sanitarium, Sunday.

Taking "Good Will" To France

Baltimore, Md., Feb.—Taking the "Good Will" of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to the devastated regions of France and to the orphans there bereft of fathers since the world conflict, is the honor bestowed upon Miss Nina Spengler, representative of the railroad company in the Good Will National Election now being conducted along the Baltimore and Ohio lines and sponsored by Daniel Willard, president of the railroad company.

Lined up behind Miss Spengler is the whole organization of the Baltimore and Ohio and an appeal to the employes' loyalty to the "Baltimore and Ohio Girl" already has gone forth to all. Local committees are forming to push Miss Spengler's campaign to a successful conclusion. The campaign ends February 24th.

Sunday, February 11th., W. W. Wood, welfare director of the railroad, left Baltimore on a quick tour of the principal terminal points where he will speak to the employes about the purposes of the Good Will election and solicit votes for the Company's candidate. Mr. Wood has with him moving pictures showing the situation in France, the tour of the American Committee last year and the Company's representative.

Mrs. Marie Draggoo and children were Saturday night and Sunday guests of her parents Ed Leighty and wife.

High School Notes

GENERAL:

The DeKalb County Teachers Association will be held at Butler, Saturday 24th.

FRESHMEN:

Several two minute talks were given in English class this morning. The subject of these talks was as follows: "Should we Encourage or Discourage the use of Slang?"

Four members of our class were absent Monday. This will give us a "black eye" to our attendance record. W. L. B.

SOPHOMORE:

Bad luck, in the form of sickness, seems to pursue the Sophomore class. Last week four of our class were absent because of sickness.

The Civics class is now tracing the progress of a bill through the national congress. This is a very interesting part of the work.

The entire class is feeling the effects of the hard work and excitement of the last few days. L.E.K.

JUNIOR:

Sickness claims a few of our brilliant number, which detracts somewhat from our class work. We are hoping, however, that they will soon be with us

The laboratory work in Physiology has occasioned many remarks of surprise from the girls of the class. Many mistaken ideas have been corrected during our dissection of the heart and lungs. Remarks such as these have come from some of us. "Oh! I tho't the heart was hollow." "Where is the pump that pumps the blood?" and "Well, I tho't our lungs were just like two rubber sacks attached to the end of our tradhea."

We found the usual Monday morning condition existed again this week, and as a result received our usual Monday morning lecture. Subject: Study,—We advise you to keep earlier hours and spend the surplus time for study. V. L.

SENIOR:

Gee! this is an awful job. The class appointed me as a news reporter, and actually I can't find or think of anything to put in the news this week. When I ask any of the others they just say, "Oh! just any old thing." That is easy enough to say but furnishes very little interest.

Oh yes! here's one on Mr. Grosjean. Lost: Mr. Grosjean's Physics class, somewhere in the H. S. Finder please notify and receive reward. R. A. W.

Twenty Year Perfect Record

Leipsic, Ohio, January 15.—Miss Della Baughman, Putnam County Sunday School worker, has just completed a twenty year perfect record in Sunday School attendance. She is inteaested in the Organized Sunday School work of both county and state. She is a member and officer of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School here."

The above item was taken from an Ohio paper and the subject is a cousin of Mrs. J. P. Buckingham and J. E. Folts of this place. Her work is mostly among the children who are unfortunate and many here will remember her as the young lady who accompanied the Fresh Air children to this place from Toledo in the summer of 1914. This work among the more unfortunate little ones is done purely from a love of the work in making the lives just a little brighter and better.

An Account Of The Mock Trial

The public was given a very interesting demonstration of a trial at the school house last Saturday evening under the auspicies of the Sophomore class.

At 8:15, A. E. McClintock, acting in the capacity of judge, together with the defendant, C. C. Woodcox and his attorney, Frank Baltz and Clyde Hart, state's attorney, took his place. Mr. Hart then read the affidavit charging C. C. Woodcox with having in his possession intoxicating liquor to the amount of one pint and a still for the manufacture of same, signed by Harcourt Miser and Edgar Lysher.

The plea of the defendant was "not guilty."

The judge then fixed the bond at $5000, but after a short conference with his attorney the defendant demanded an immediate jury trial. Accordingly Charles Koch, sheriff drew the jury. After being sworn in and questioned, several of the members were excused because they were over the age limit. The members of the jury were Mrs. Blanch Leighty, Mrs. Harriet Johnson Mrs. Jessie Rice, Wm. Quance, Wm. Keeler and Howard Krise.

The first witness for the state was Harcourt Miser, who testified that on the evening of February 8, he was in the office of Woodcox's garage when he saw a bottle protruding from Mr. Woodcox's pocket. He took the bottle from the pocket and discovered that it contained what he supposed to be "White Mule." The bottle and contents were exhibited as evidence. After a cross examination he was excused.

The next witness was Edgar Lysher, (Lie-sure, as pronounced by Baitz) He asserted that on the evening of Februery 8, he, with George Berry, went to the Woodcox home to buy eggs. They were met at the door by Mrs. Woodcox, and told that there were no eggs in but that they might go to the chicken coop for some. Near the [illegible] they found the still that was exhibited at the trial.

After other witnesses for the state were heard a 5 minute recess was given.

Does Private Ownership Do This

The post office department every day of the year handles one million four hundred thousand letters. Last year it handled sixty seven million special delivery stamps besides one thousand million post cards. This increased the business 1 percent while the cost for handling same only increased 9 percent. In Franklin's time it cost ten cents for one sheet or twenty cents for two sheets of a letter to be carried fifty miles, and doubled every fifty miles. Now we send a letter to the farthest corner of Alaska for two cents, can you beat it.

There is a little article sold in every villiage and hamlet of the land. No drummers ever carry samples of it, and you never see it advertised. There is never too much or too little of it, always a goodly supply, its never taxed, and it pays handsomely those who deal in it. Everything else can be run accordingly, if you doubt it, try it.

Tuberculosis Clinic

The DeKalb County Anti-Tuberculosis Society will hold another free clinic, February 21st., at Assembly Room, Court House, 1 P. M. to 4 P. M.

Physicians are requested to send patients who may be suspects or open cases. The public is invited to avail themselves of expert examination and advice. Any person feeling badly, having persistant cough, having tired and "All In" feeling should come to clinic. Everybody Welcome.

Come early to register. Dr. James Stygall will be in charge of examination. Consultation private.

J. Y. W. McClellan, Pres.

The Martha Society of the Christian S.S. will give a bake sale Saturday morning at Mrs. Berry's cream station.

Organize Home Economics Club

Fifteen Concord Township ladies met at the home of Mrs H. M. Widney on Wednesday afternoon, February 7th., and made arrangements for the organization of the Concord Township Home Economics Club.

Mrs. H. M. Widney was elected temporary chairman and Mrs. Earn Johnson, temporary secretary. A constitutional committee was appointed as follows: Mrs. Howard Krise, Chm., Wrs. Ed Storer, Mrs. Wm. Staman, Edith Widney, and Mrs. B. V. Widney. The other ladies present were, Mesdames Frank Milliman, Wm. Hamilton, John Milliman, Elgin Fetters, Frank Tustison, Clay Coburn, John Sechler, Byron Widney, Miss Thelma Johnson and Miss Sophia Haner.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Byron E. Widney on Friday afternoon, February 23rd., 1:30 p. m. The report of the constitutional committee will be considered and membership received. Every lady interested in the project is urged to be present at this meeting.

Church Anniversary

Next Sunday Coburn's Corners Church will hold an all day meeting in honor of the eighty-sixth anniversary of the date of organization which was on February 17, 1837. A program is being prepared and a basket dinner will be served. This was the first church of any kind established in DeKalb county.

Mrs. Wm. Miller made her first trip away from home since her recent operation, on Sunday. She attended Sunday School and church services in the morning and spent the day with Rev. Havens and family. Her husband and Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Leighty were also dinner guests.

"YOU SCORPION!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife. Drace penetrates into the wilderness, discovers Periwinkle House and finds Nadine alone. She is much alarmed and warns him her father will shoot him. He makes love to her and to get him to go she agrees to meet him again the following Thursday. On his way home Drace is accosted by three men who ask to be set across the river. They overpower him and bind him with ropes. Led by Tony they throw Drace into an old cabin. Tony taunts Drace and avows his love for Nadine, while the others collect fuel. Tony sets fire to the cabin and the three go off laughing.

And then something touched his hand, something cold and swift. A knife cut the ropes that bound him; and in his great and sudden joy Drace almost lost his reason. But he did not cry out; no word was spoken. Just one look, and then he screened her from the flames as they fled through the door, out through the light, into the shadow of the trees. And then he spoke: "God bless you, Nadine!"

He had held her hand, leading her as they ran, but now in the shadow safe from danger, she withdrew it from him, and when he reached again to take it, she shook her head.

"No, it must not be. I told you to go quick, but you did not go quick enough. Then Tones he see your boat, and with the others, he wait for you. I run around and I watch him, with the knife to stab him if he hurt my brave friend. Then in dim light I see them carry the boat, and I think they have killed you; and I steal along to stab, but then I know you are in the boat. All I do then was to watch till they go, and then I go in. It was not hard to do. No."

"You are an angel."

She laughed, shaking her head.

"Angels do not go into the fire. They do not belong there . . . Now, I tell you. I show you the crooked way, through the woods and out to the river. The moon has come, and we can see. If you know the way, you are safe; but if you do not, you mire down and die in the oose, and not in the flame. You would please follow me now."

He followed her, hoping that she might be slow, to prolong the joy of his being with her, but she was agile, walking swiftly. Sometimes she would turn slightly about to warn him of a dangerous place, and once she smiled, the moon full in her face. "Tell me," he inquired then: "What has passed tonight, I hope, does not change what was set for Thursday?"

The head was [illegible] to rise, and she [illegible]

Old Stepho had not come home when the Creole girl reached the house in the swamp. She sat down to think and to listen to his footstep. He did not come; and undressing, she lay down, mused a long time and slept . . . A knocking on the door and Stepho's voice called her:

"The sun he was high, but the leetle gel she sleep."

Soon she came out, and he drew her to him and pressed his sandpaper cheek against the coil of her hair.

They sat where the house threw its cool shade. Slowly he rocked in his big chair, looking up at the cane that hid his home.

"This air, he good. He comes through salt marsh from the Gulf, with not the malaria. You bloom always like the flower."

"But, Father, when do we leave here? It must not be that we are here to live all the time?"

"Ha! The little bird wish to leave the nest, to try her wings? That is the way of birds and women. Soon, I suppose, you will wish to marry some fine man and leave your old father."

"No—it is not that. I love you . . . But it is lonely here, and—"

"Mr. Boyce, he is a fine young man. If you marry him, you would not so much leave me. I see him often. He buy from me the mules and cattle which I bring down from the hills. Why you no wish to marry him?"

"But I do not love him."

"You would soon learn; he is a fine young man. I owe him much; and he know much about my business that he would keep quiet about it—if he was of the family. And he would take you often to the city and give you rich dresses and diamonds."

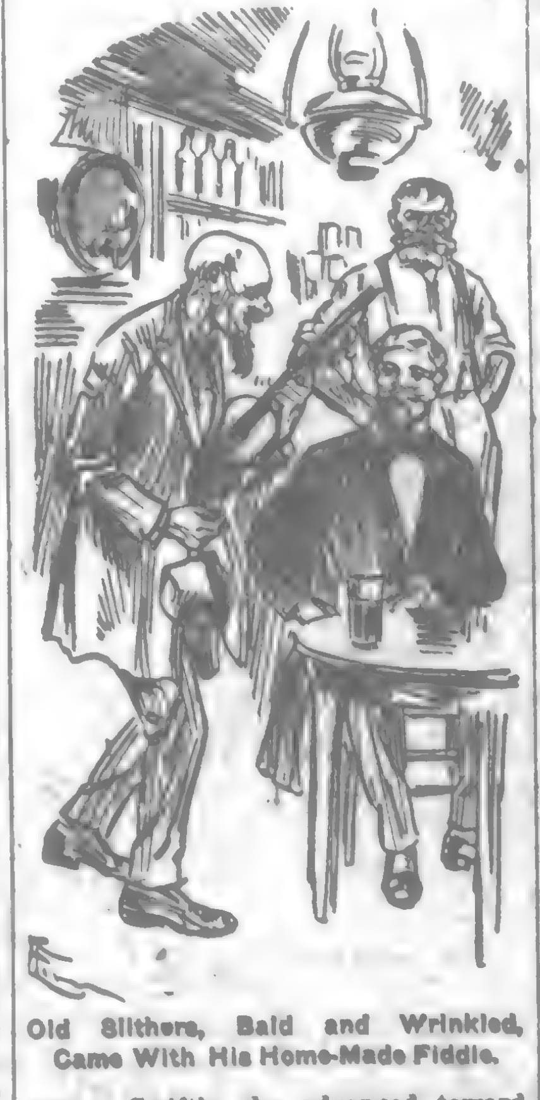
"My dresses they are fine enough. I have the diamonds, too. But you must know that I get lonesome here. I cannot play with the book all the time . . . You are going again to buy cattle in the hills, are you not?"

"I will buy them, yes."

"And you must on Thursday go to the hills?"

"Yes, on the Thursday, I will go."

He fell asleep, for he was tired; and when the sun came about, she drew his chair into the shade. He opened his eyes, patted her hand and slept again. She heard a slight sound, and looking, saw Tones coming through the cane. Swiftly she advanced toward him, with hand upraised, cautioning him.



Old Slithers, Bald and Wrinkled, Came With His Home-Made Fiddle.

"You must make no noise. He is asleep."

"But I have come to tell him that the carpetbagger spy he gone to come back not again."

"Go away, and you can come back and tell him."

"No, I stay and talk to you."

Stepho's voice called out. "Tones, come. I am here."

She did not wish to hear them talk. She looked at the Portuguese and mused as she walked away: "You do not know, you scorpion, how close you come to the stab. Your time will come, and I watch you."

CHAPTER VIII

It was a long time before Drace found a boat to set him over to the opposite shore. It was so late when he reached the Bethpage place that he did not go up to his room. The house was so quiet, the hounds themselves asleep, that he stole into the garden to pass the remainder of the night on a couch in the summer house. The air was heavy with roses breathing in through the lattice, and as he straightened out, grateful for repose, this thought came to him:

"[illegible] they call death, but to me it will ever be red. And I have looked [illegible] . . . . [illegible]"

At the breakfast table, [illegible]

[illegible]

Black Hawk and reach there early in the morning."

"I'd like very much to go," answered Drace. "But can we get back before Thursday?"

"Easily by Wednesday morning. Anything important for Thursday?"

"Oh, no. An old fellow down at the ferry wants me to go fishing with him Thursday, and I gave him my word that I'd be on hand. Most remarkable old man, full of fun; quite a character."

"You must mean old Spence. But are you sure it is not that pretty daughter of his that attracts you? You'll have to be a little careful, my son. We may associate with men out of our social running, but not with women. . . . Ah, Tycie! Mr. Drace has just consented to give me his company to Natchez."

* * * * * * *

The Black Hawk's band played a welcome, and the captain came down the plank to conduct the General on board. From a quiet, lazy and almost deserted landing the place leaped into the full throb of life. Negroes and shiftless whites came from their hovels to gaze upon the magic splendor of this journeying palace, and the three-shell man stepped ashore to gather up dollars.

Dinner was a state occasion, and after it, the ball. Then their staterooms—then morning, and Natchez.

The address was to be delivered in the afternoon, and when the time came the General led him over to the hall to hear the speech, imprisoned him without bail in a corner, and there he had to sit. The address was long, academic and dull, and the sufferer mused:

"I don't see why Shottle ever called you a remarkable character."

Everybody came about the General to take his hand. Young women told him that they had never been so thrilled. Drace lied to him, too, swore him an orator.

"Let us walk off alone," said the General.

Slowly they walked at first, but after a time the old gentleman struck a brisker pace, toward the River.

"Now, my boy, as we've got through with those beaters of dust out of old carpets, we'll have some fun. Old Colonel Pemberton wanted me to go home with him, and he has a delightful house, a gracious wife and handsome daughter, but I had to decline. I've stood about as much now as I can. We'll go down to old Tobe Mason's tavern, under the hill. Tobe is a gentle old fellow, never killed but three men."

The tavern was as tough a place as river men could make it. Built of logs, bricks, stone and clapboards, it looked like an architectural stagger, trying to climb the hill. In the main room was the bar.

"Well, I'll be knocked in the head for a steer!" old Tobe cried out, stumping toward the General. "I haven't seed you since the River tuck fire. Well, well! Thinkin' about you the other day. . . . Glad to shake your hand, Mr. Drace. Set right down."

"Tobe, I'm glad to see you," said the General. "And fetch us about two quarts of that summer-grape wine. Let me tell you about it, Drace. We have a wild grape here that gets ripe along in August. It's much larger and is not sour like the fox-grape, and its vine likes to climb about a sassafras sapling. And then you see an umbrella of grapes. Now don't say a word till you've had a good taste of it. Tobe makes it himself, and he'll fetch us some that's at least twenty-five years old. Here we are."

The wine was as red as blood, cool and yet warm. Its flavor was the ripened sweetness of the spirit of autumn, it was as mellow as the scent of the apple at harvest time.

"What do you think of it, hey?"

"Uncle Howard, are you sure that this was not made by Bacchus instead of Tobe?"

"Good, my boy! Enjoying yourself?"

"Yes, I'm doing fine, General. You see, I can't express myself as well as you can. I haven't as much to draw from. You've not only book-knowledge but experience, worth more socially than all the libraries in the world."

"You hit it off well. But what is better than it all? Moral freedom. This table here is rough, with one rheumatic leg slightly drawn; these chairs we sit in, bottomed with strips of hickory bark, would be scorned at a sheriff's sale; but sir, Mark Antony, in his first triumph, his chariot drawn by lions, was not more regal than we are at this moment, enthroned and sceptered with moral freedom. Pour out, for as that same Antony said: 'Scant not my [illegible].'—Tobe, where's that old [illegible] who used to play 'The Arkansaw [illegible]'"

Tobe [illegible] over from the bar.

"You mean old S[illegible]?"

"That's the man. What's become of him?"

"Nothin'. And I [illegible] right now down by [illegible] that ought to be [illegible]"

"[illegible], Tobias. Send a [illegible] after him."

The COTTAGE GARDENER

HOW TO MOVE THE DECIDUOUS PLANTS

Trees and Shrubbery Should Not Be Disturbed While Showing Growth.

Deciduous plants are ordinarily moved when dormant or during the period from a little before the leaves drop in the autumn, until growth starts in the spring. With extra care they may be moved at other times. The secret of successful transplanting is getting a good root growth started before top growth makes too heavy demands upon the roots. In cool moist climates there is not the same care demanded as in warmer or drier ones. If possible, plants should be put in their permanent places immediately. Otherwise, they should be put in the ground temporarily to prevent their drying out, states the United States Department of Agriculture. The soil must be so dry that there will be no danger of its packing hard enough about the roots to bake or become bricklike on drying, and will spring apart again after being squeezed tightly in the hand.

Trees Ready for Planting.

The holes should be dug sufficiently wide to take all the roots without doubling them back, and deep enough to set the plant a little deeper than it grew before and still have 2 or 3 inches of good new soil under it. The good top soil should be saved for putting back in the hole about the roots of the plant, the sub-soil should be taken away and be replaced by good soil. Well rotted manure and ground bone or cotton-seed meal may be liberally mixed with the earth about the roots of the newly set tree. These should be well mixed with the soil but should not come in direct contact with the roots.

The roots should be placed as nearly in the position they grew as is possible, care being taken not to leave them in layers without fine soil between. The plant should be gently worked up and down to be sure there is no opening left under the place from which the roots branch. After the hole is partially filled, the soil must be well tamped to bring the roots and soil into close contact with one another. If the earth is very dry water should be applied before the hole is finally filled. After it has soaked away the balance of the soil should be replaced but without any tamping or firming of any kind. When the work is done in the fall it is well to make a mound about the plant to prevent wind from swaying it and loosening it in the soil. This mound about the tree should be used only in fall transplanting and should be leveled down as early as possible in the spring. If the plant is large it should be securely staked to serve the same purpose. Mulching with coarse manure or straw will aid in [illegible] by preventing frost from penetrating the ground so deeply and in dry countries by holding moisture.

The top of the plant must be pruned [illegible] in proportion to the amount of roots lost [illegible] destroyed in digging. [illegible]

[illegible]

POTTING YOUNG PLANTS

When pots, cans or other vessels are used for potting the young vegetable or flowering plants, preparatory to transplanting in the open when the time arrives, it is necessary to have drainage. A small amount of coarse gravel at the bottom is a good plan. After the plant has grown to a fair size, before the roots begin to mat, it is advisable to remove to a larger pot, to give the roots every possible advantage. Then, when transferred to the open the roots should not be injured.

TO HAVE FRUIT IN THE HOME GARDEN

Bearing Trees, Bushes and Vines May Be Had Within a Very Short Time.

Fruit in the home garden is taken as a matter of course by many cottage gardeners—if they have it, they have it—and if they don't—they don't.

To have fruit, especially the smaller kinds, where the family orchard, usually set out by the pioneers of the vicinity, is not considered, the occupant of the property is the one who usually supplies the vines and bushes.

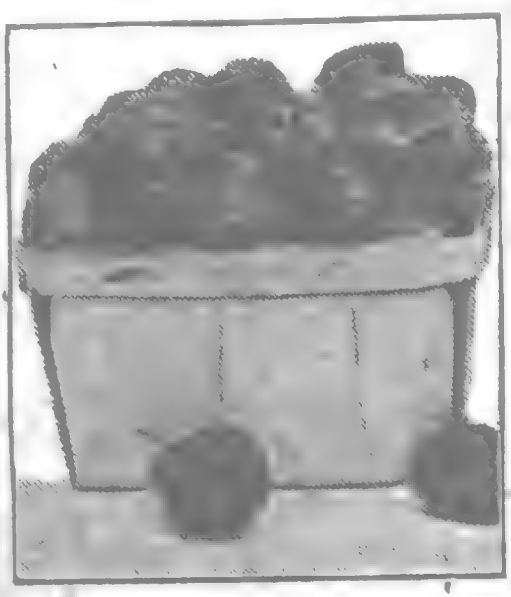
Within a couple of years it is a very easy matter, with proper care, to have a very good bearing strawberry patch, a good blackberry, raspberry, gooseberry and currant patch, and grapes in three or four years.

Two or three hundred everbearing strawberry plants should, under normal conditions, supply berries for the family throughout the season—until frost. A couple of dozen of the larger berry bushes would produce well after the second year; the same with currants and gooseberries.

There is as good argument in favor of freshly picked berries as there is in favor of fresh vegetables taken from the ground just before they are to be used.

Berry crops, of course, cannot be hoped for without some labor; for the bushes must be pruned, fertilized, kept free from weeds, and the dead wood must be removed every season.

Worms must be expected, especially on the currant and gooseberry bushes. The other berry vines have their respective scientifically named diseases, but seldom do these diseases do much damage, and the ordinary gardener pays no attention to them.



First Fruit of the Season.

Every home should have its berry vines and bushes. They are worth the effort—and you have the fruit when it is wanted, and much can be grown for preserving for winter use.

THE SUBSTITUTE FOR CELERY

Celeriac, Easily Grown, if Seeds Are Planted in Box, Then Transplanted.

Celeriac or root celery for those who do not have the time to attend to the building up and cultivation of celery offers an easily grown substitute which needs no more care than a carrot, turnip or other root crop. It has become rather common in vegetable markets during the last year or two and is used chiefly as an ingredient for soups and stews, which may be kept in the cellar as easily as the commoner vegetables where it would be impossible to keep celery. It has precisely the same flavor.

Boiled and sliced cold it is used as a salad. It should be planted now in a box or hotbed and the young plants transplanted into the open ground as soon as it is warm enough. Its culture is much the same as celery and it needs the same conditions of soil and moisture. The best results and the largest roots are obtained if the seedlings are transplanted into individual pots before they are set into the ground.

In order to make the root grow deeper and develop more substance many gardeners rake the soil away from the top of the root as it develops until nearly the entire root is above the ground. This sends the feeding roots down deeper and develops greater [illegible]

CHARACTER TELLS THE STORY!

People throughout this country are giving more thought to hygiene and to the purity of remedies on the market, but no one doubts the purity of Doctor Pierce's vegetable medicines, for they have been so favorably known for over fifty years that everyone knows they are just what they are claimed to be. These medicines are the result of long research by a well-known physician, R. V. Pierce, M. D., who compounded them from health-giving herbs and roots long used in sickness by the Indians. Dr. Pierce's reputation as a leading and honored citizen of Buffalo, is a sufficient guarantee for the purity of that splendid tonic and blood purifier, the Golden Medical Discovery, and the equally fine nerve tonic and system builder for women's ailments, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Removing The Cause of Colds

NORMAL NERVE
PINCHED NERVE

Under-elimination of waste matter puts the body in a run-down condition, and then from lack of internal heat, cold comes into the system. It may express itself in catarrh of the head, in tonsilitis, in sore throat, in bronchitis, or if not checked in time, it may become influenza or pneumonia.

So a cold means many things to many people, but its cause, no matter what form it may expreess itself, is a spinal displacement, causing under-activity of the eliminative organs. If the liver is weak, it throws more work on the skin, excretory organs and lungs, and so it goes. Whichever eliminative organ is weakened it overworks the others. If two or all of them are weakened, and they sometimes break down under the overwork, then pneumonia, influenze, or some of the more extreme diseases may result. The extraordinary record of recoveries in these diseases from chiropractic spinal adjustments is based on the fact that the cause is [illegible] and Nature when given a [illegible] has [illegible] than enough reserve [illegible]. VALUE OF TRUTH

"We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

"The highest loyalty to which men can subject themselves is loyalty to truth."

When Aristotle was asked what a person could gain by uttering a falsehood, he replied "not to be credited when he shall tell the truth."

That indeed would be an inveniable predicament.

But Aristotle was right.

Faith in such a one becomes severely strained, if not altogether shattered.

The moral law is the very backbone of modern civilization.

KNEW ITS CUE

A man who believed he knew all about parrots undertook to teach what he thought to be a young, mute bird to say "Hello!" in one lesson. Going up to the cage, he repeated that word in a clear voice for several minutes, the parrot paying not the slightest attention. At the final "Hello" the bird opened one eye, gazed at the man, and snapped out, "Line's busy."

BETTER ROADS

BREAK ROAD-BUILDING MARKS

During 1922 Fiscal Year 10,000 Miles of Federal-Aid Roads Were Constructed.

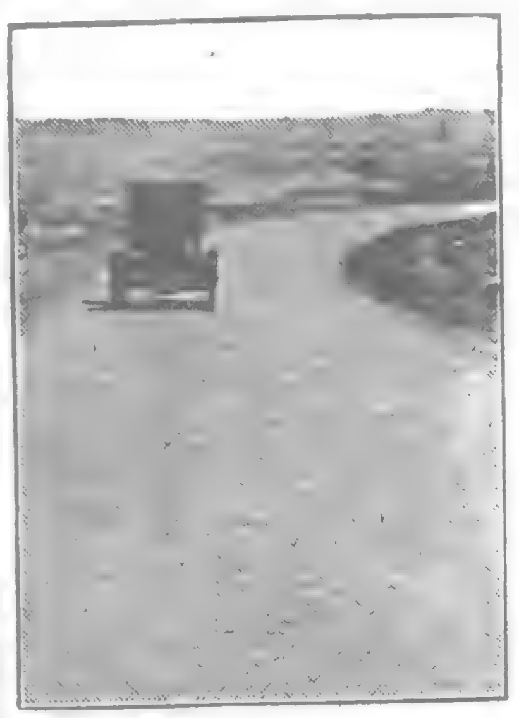
(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

All records for road construction in the United States were broken during the fiscal year 1922, according to the annual report of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture. During that period 10,000 miles of federal-aid roads and more than an equal mileage of highways without federal assistance were constructed.

From the viewpoint of federal-aid progress the year divides itself into two periods, one before and the other after the passage of the federal highway act. The first period was a season of great construction activity, during which the greater part of the work of completing the 10,000 miles was done. It was also one of almost complete stagnation with respect to the initiation of projects.

When the year opened there was an unobligated balance of $18,793,544 of the federal-aid appropriations, and the projects initiated since the beginning of the work aggregated 35,402 miles. By the end of October, 1921, the unobligated balance had been reduced to $11,714,828, the lowest it had been since 1918. Only two states at that time had a balance of more than $1,000,000 to draw upon for new projects, and a number were so reduced that their balance was not sufficient to pay for another mile of road.

Just before the passage of the federal highway act the mileage submitted by the states had not grown during the fiscal year, but had actually diminished as a result of the withdrawal and substitution of projects. The total mileage proposed was only 35,379 miles, as compared with the 35,402 miles of four months before. Immediately upon the approval of the act the initiation of projects took on new life and in the months of March and June reached the unprecedented total of 1,250 miles a month. At the close of the year the submitted mileage is 39,940 miles, 4,538 miles greater than at the close of the preceding fiscal year.



Well-Constructed Cement Road.

At the close of the preceding year projects completed aggregated 7,469 miles, and there were 17,978 miles under construction, which were estimated as 50 per cent complete. In one year the completed mileage has grown to 17,716 miles, an increase of more than 10,000 miles, and there still remain under construction 14,518 miles which are estimated as 56 per cent complete. The federal aid earned by the states on completed and uncompleted projects amounts to $194,560,135, of which $166,911,552 have actually been paid.

The total length of projects in all stages, including those which have been completed and those which are in the stages preliminary to construction, is 39,940 miles.

The roads brought to completion during the year average over 200 miles for each state. The greatest increase in completed mileage is in Texas, which has added during the year 933 miles to its completed highway. Arkansas, Georgia, Iowa, Minnesota and North Carolina, each with an increase of more than 500 miles, and Montana and Wisconsin, with more than 400 miles, made notable advances toward the goal of a completed highway system.

A number of smaller states, such as Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, made very substantial increases in proportion to their size.

The largest payment of federal aid during the year also went to Texas, which received from the government $[illegible] and earned nearly $[illegible] more. Other large payments were made to Illinois, Iowa, Ohio and Pennsylvania, each of which received from $[illegible] to $[illegible] or more during the year.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 18

JESUS AND ZACCHAEUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost—Luke 19:10.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Prov. 3:13-18; Matt. 9:9-13; Luke 16:1-13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Having Jesus for a Visitor.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus in the Home of Zacchaeus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Saved an Extortioner.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Standards in Business.

I. Jesus Passing Through Jericho (v. 1).

Jericho is noted as the stronghold of the Canaanites, which was miraculously delivered into the hands of Israel in response to their faith (Josh. 6), and also for the faith of Rahab, which saved her from destruction with the city (Heb. 11:30, 31).

II. Zacchaeus Seeking Jesus (vv. 2-4).

1. His Object (v. 3). He sought to see who Jesus was. Though perhaps prompted by curiosity he eagerly sought Jesus. He doubtless had heard of Jesus' kind treatment of publicans, so was prompted to see what kind of a man He was.

2. His Difficulties (vv. 2, 3). (1) His infamous business (v. 2). He was a tax collector of the Roman government. The very fact that a Jew held such an office under the hated Romans would make him extremely unpopular. Then since he was rich it was evident that he had practiced extortion in collecting the taxes. (2) His shortness of stature (v. 3). He was too small to crowd his way through to Jesus, and being hated by the people they thrust him aside, no doubt with taunts and jeers. (3) His persistence (v. 4). He ran before the multitude and climbed up into a tree. What he lacked in stature he was determined should be made up by the height of the tree. Obstacles placed before him he brushed aside and those he could not brush aside he climbed over, because he had set his heart upon the goal. Though Zacchaeus' legs were too short to enable him to see Jesus they were long enough to run past the crowd and enable him to climb the tree. It was somewhat undignified for this rich man to climb the tree, but his soul was so desirous to see Jesus that he cast his pride to the winds.

III. Jesus Finding Zacchaeus (vv. 5, 6).

While Zacchaeus was trying to see Jesus, Jesus was looking for him. This is always the case. When Jesus saw him he commanded him to come down from the tree and declared his intention to go home with him. Zacchaeus got more than he expected. Jesus did not utter a word which would humiliate Zacchaeus. Jesus knew his heart's desire and dealt accordingly with him. All souls who earnestly seek Jesus shall be found of Him. How wonderful His grace, that regardless of one's past life, that Jesus will receive him as a friend and enter into fellowship with him. Zacchaeus quickly responded. He came down and with joy received Jesus.

IV. Zacchaeus' Conversion (vv. 7-10).

His conversion was sudden and thorough. He was converted before he had reached the ground. It does not take Jesus long to save a soul.

1. What the Crowd Said (v. 7). They said just what they say today when sinners come to Christ. They called to mind the man's former sins. They also reproached Christ, saying that he had come to be a guest of this notorious extortioner, the tax collector. His supreme mission was to save sinners (v. 10). Jesus came not to condemn us, but to save us; not to shame and destroy us, but to save from sin and reconcile us to God our Father.

2. What Zacchaeus Said (v. 8). His conversion was thorough. It took hold upon his heart. His new life was begun with resolution and restitution. He dedicated the half of his goods to the poor. His conversion got hold of his pocketbook. His determination to make restitution wherein he had wrongly exacted taxes shows the genuineness of his conversion. While God forgets the past of a sinner when he comes to Christ, the sinner who is converted will seek to make right all wrongs, be they unkind words or unrighteous deeds.

3. What Jesus Said (vv. 9, 10). "Today is salvation come to thy house." The publican was now a child of God, a son of Abraham. Salvation is a present reality when one receives Christ.

MANY WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Through the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Two Interesting Cases

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Mrs. Edwards Avoids Operation

Wilson, N. C.—"For about a year I was not able to do anything, not even my housework, because of the pains in my sides and the bearing-down pains. I could only lie around the house. The doctor said nothing but an operation would help me, but I tried different medicines which did no good, until my sister insisted on my trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said there was nothing like it. I know that she was right, for I began to improve with the first bottle and it has done me more good than anything else. I am able now to do anything on the farm or in my home and I recommend it to my friends."—LILLIE EDWARDS, R. F. D. 8, Box 44, Wilson, N. C.

Another Operation Avoided

Akron, Ohio.—"I can never praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I had such pains and weakness that the doctor told me nothing but an operation would help me. But my mother had taken the Vegetable Compound and she told me what it had done for her, and so I took it and I am glad to tell every one that it made me a strong woman, and I have had two children since then."—Mrs. R. G. WESTOVER, 325 Grant Street, Akron, Ohio.

Very Remarkable British Case

Church Street, Malpas.
Cheshire, England.

"For eleven years I suffered acute pain and sickness. I consulted several prominent doctors and each had a different opinion. At last I was put under X-Rays. I was suffering from gall stones. My doctors and the specialist at the Royal Infirmary, Chester, told me they were not porous and no medicine would move them, so there remained nothing but an operation. When my wife heard this she told me to get Dodd's Kidney Pills, as they had cured her of black jaundice and gall stones. It is now nineteen years since my wife felt any symptoms of these troubles. I purchased a quantity of Dodd's Kidney Pills and took them. This is seven years ago and I have had no return of the trouble.

"It was a surprise for all the doctors. They had to admit the fact as I was under the X-Rays several times. I am enjoying the best of health and have lost no time through sickness. Dr. Frank Mathews, Welsh Row, Nantwich, has a photo of my kidneys and the stones. I also suffered with rheumatism before I was cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I have recommended these pills to all sufferers I know. They are simply marvelous in relieving sufferers of kidney and rheumatic complaints. I also know of a case of Bright's Disease which they cured."

Signed, GEORGE ROBERTS.

"I declare the foregoing statement to be true." Declared at White Church, in County of Salop, this 4th day of March, 1922. A. W. SMITH, Commissioner for Oaths.

U. S. Clergyman Tells How He Was Saved

Rev. W. H. Warner, 158 E. Ridge St., Nanticoke, Pa., writes:

"My trouble was sciatica. My back was affected and took the form of lumbago. I also had neuralgia, cramps in my muscles, pressure or sharp pain on the top of my head, and nervous, dizzy spells. I had other symptoms showing my kidneys were affected, so I took Dodd's Kidney Pills. They were the means of saving my life."

Rev. Edmund Heslop Calls It A Blessing

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen. He had heart fluttering, fitful appetite, was heavy and sleepy after meals. There were dark circles round his eyes, which were swollen and puffed. He became exhausted at the least exertion, was dizzy and suffered very much from shortness of breath. His limbs were heavy and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that he had no power to move. His skin was dry and harsh. His hands and feet were cold. He has used five boxes of DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS, and the swelling is all gone, and he looks like himself. He says he has been benefitted and blessed by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"On December 29, 1910, I write to say that I have not changed my faith in the value of your remedy since the publication of the above statement was authorized, and I have no change to make in the same."

(Signed) REV. EDMUND HESLOP.
Wigton, Pa.

NOTE.—In April of this year, Rev. Heslop wrote us that at 84 years of age, he is still hale and hearty.

A U. S. Judge in Trouble

"I took about six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills for heart trouble, from which I had suffered for five years. I had dizzy spells, my eyes puffed, my breath was short and I had chills and backache. I took the pills about a year ago and have had no palpitations. Am now 63 years old, able to do lots of manual labor, am well and hearty, weigh about 200 pounds. I feel very grateful that I found Dodd's Kidney Pills." Judge of Gray County, PHILIP MILLER, Cimmaron, Kan.

DECLARES TANLAC "IS BEST OF ALL"

St. Paul Woman Says Stomach Trouble Is Gone and She Has Gained 10 Pounds.

"Tanlac has meant health and happiness to me, and I think it has no equal," declared Mrs. Albert Kaping, highly-respected resident of 29 E. 10th St., St. Paul, Minn.

"I was so terribly run down my housework seemed like a mountain to me, and lots of times I had to give up and rest. I was nervous, weak, and had splitting headaches and awful dizzy spells. My stomach was so badly out of order almost everything I ate would sour and I suffered terribly from gas, heartburn and a distressing smothering feeling. I could not sleep nights, my back ached terribly, I lost weight till my clothes didn't fit, and was in a generally wretched condition.

"But now I get real joy out of caring for my house. Since taking Tanlac I have gained ten pounds, never have indigestion and all my aches and pains are gone. I take pleasure in recommending Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

BELL-ANS

2 SENATORS IN HOT ENCOUNTER

Fist Fight Between Cravens and Daily Is Narrowly Averted.

SUNDAY AS MEMORIAL DAY

Measure Introduced in Senate to Serve as Compromise in Speedway Debate—Lutz Highway Building Bill Is Killed.

Indianapolis.—A fight which started in the morning on the floor of the senate became so heated in the afternoon that it was necessary for doorkeepers to rush between two senators to keep them from coming to blows, and when visitors began to applaud remarks made on the floor the chair threatened to clear the chamber of all spectators.

The wrangle arose over the protest of Senator Joseph M. Cravens of Madison, Democratic floor leader, against the auditor of state and the state board of finance for failing to comply with a resolution adopted early in the session, calling for an estimate of the state's financial needs for the coming two years.

At one point Senator Cravens made what appeared to be a determined effort to attack Senator Thomas A. Daily, Republican, of Indianapolis, who had criticized the Democratic leader.

After a short and rather stormy debate, the protest was laid on the table on motion of Senator Clem J. Richards of Terre Haute, Republican, acting floor leader in the absence of Senator James J. Nejdl of Whiting, who is ill.

Sunday for Memorial Day.

A bill which would change Memorial day from May 30 to the last Sunday in May was introduced jointly in the senate by Senators William E. English and Winfield Miller of Indianapolis.

"I think that by changing the date," said Senator English, "a double purpose would be accomplished in that it would overcome the seeming difficulty which has arisen over the sports bill and place the observance on a sacred day, which is a logical day for paying tribute to dead soldier heroes.

"If this bill is passed, we shall have no question about sports on Memorial day, and that will be true without legislating against sports and games."

Repulse Democratic Attack.

Republican members of the house of representatives repulsed a Democratic attack on a $2,000,000 appropriation to be used in completing the new Indiana reformatory near Pendleton during the most vivid session of the lower branch this year. The 50 to 45 vote, which defeated an effort to require the abrogation of all reformatory cost-plus contracts and to set a limit of $750,000 on the cost of completion, followed a day of clock-like defeats for Democratic harassing amendments.

Lutz Road Bill Killed.

After lively debate in the senate Senator Jacob Lutz' bill to give county commissioners power to build roads was indefinitely postponed. Boards of commissioners would be permitted to buy materials and hire labor for road building in the event no bid was as low as they thought it should be, under provisions of the measure.

"This is one of the most vicious bills ever introduced in this senate," asserted Senator Frank M. Adams of Rockville. "It does not provide that the commissioners should spend less than the lowest bid, and thereby leaves open a path for payment of political debts by commissioners."

Rainey Bill Advanced.

A report favoring passage of the Rainey marriage and divorce bill was adopted by the house of representatives. The house committee on public morals, which has had the bill since it was introduced, reported the bill out with several amendments.

The session also was marked by the introduction of a bill to abolish the state conservation department and an unsuccessful attempt to hurry through the bill to increase the field of opportunities for fees for coroners.

The morals committee amended the Rainey bill so that drunkenness, drug addiction and impotency at time of marriage would be made additional causes for divorce. The bill originally provided that abandonment for one year on failure to husband to provide for that time, were causes for divorce but the bill was amended to make the time two years. An amendment eliminated insanity as a ground for divorce, as provided for in the original bill.

INDIANA BREVITIES

New Albany.—The Tenth district of the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations at a meeting discussed membership plans and local problems affecting farmers in the district, which is composed of the counties of Floyd, Clark, Harrison, Crawford, Orange, Washington and Scott. Presidents and secretaries of the county farm bureaus, county agents and more than 100 farmers were in attendance. Clyde Martin, director of the district, presided. C. R. George of Indianapolis explained cream, poultry and egg marketing.

Terre Haute.—The Terre Haute Training School of Religious Education held its first meeting at the Centenary Methodist church. The list of instructors includes the Rev. Roy B. Deer, pastor of the First Baptist church; the Rev. B. W. Tyler, of the Central Presbyterian church; the Rev. F. LeRoy Brown, of the Washington Avenue Presbyterian church; the Rev. C. K. Mahoney, of the First Methodist church, and Miss Gertrude Soules, principal of the Rea school.

Brazil.—A jury in the Clay Circuit court returned a verdict for $3,800 in favor of George McDermott of Terre Haute in his suit against the Terre Haute, Indianapolis & Eastern Traction company. McDermott sought $10,000 damages for injuries suffered by his six-year-old son, who was injured when struck by a street car in Terre Haute.

Winchester.—At the annual meeting of the board of directors of the James Moorman Orphans' home at Winchester, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Thomas Henry Clark, president; E. E. Hill, vice president; Thomas F. Moorman, treasurer, and F. C. Focht, secretary.

Hartford City.—A compromise was reached in the Blackford Circuit court in the contest suit over the office of county auditor, whereby only 77 ballots will be presented to the court, instead of all the ballots cast in the election. The contestants are: Walter Hughes, Democrat, and Miss Ruth Werber, Republican.

Columbus.—Attorneys for David C. Dunn, former trustee of Clay township, received word from the Indiana board of tax commissioners that the board had denied authority for an issue of bonds in the sum of $54,000 to build a new consolidated school building in Clay township.

Shelbyville.—The Shelby county Board of Childrens' Guardians elected Claude R. Henry, president; Frank C. Sheldon, vice president; Mrs. Ed K. Adams, treasurer, and Mrs. Harry H. Walker, secretary. Mrs. Morris H. Sleeth and Mrs. E. W. McDaniel are other members of the board

Indianapolis.—The Indiana Bell Telephone company appraises the value of all its property in the state for rate-making purposes at $42,611,590.93, as shown by an exhibit filed with the public service commission in the consolidated Bell rate hearing.

Winchester.—The following officers were elected by the Randolph County Poultry association: President, Max Diggs; vice president, H. H. Brown; secretary-treasurer, L. L. Hinshaw; directors, Wayne Whitehead, Perry Baker and W. H. Pegg.

Greensburg.—Officers elected by the builders' class of the Sardinia Baptist church are: Mrs. Lennie Hern, president; Mrs. Maude Albert, vice president; Mrs. Ethel Owens, secretary, and Dr. Charles Owens, treasurer.

Salem.—Otto Enlow, of French Lick, was acquitted of the charge of manslaughter in the Washington Circuit court. In May, 1920, Glen Leffler was run over by Enlow's automobile in West Baden and he died of his injuries.

New Albany.—The Calumet club, an organization of young men, has called a meeting at the Calumet clubhouse to consider the organization of a safety council. Civic organizations and city officials will be asked to participate.

Versailles.—John Cuneo, living at Dabney, about six miles from here, was arrested on a charge of violating the prohibition law. His place was searched and some liquor and part of a still were found.

Indianapolis. — Indiana's tobacco yield in 1922 was sold for $2,754,000, according to figures in the office of George C. Bryant, statistician in this state for the United States Department of Agriculture.

The Turk and His Taxes.

The Turk is certainly to be sympathized with when it comes to taxation. He has often to pay taxes to get an egg to market. He must pay, of course, tax on his land, he must often pay a tax on each hen, on the food he feeds to his hen, and on the cart he carries his eggs in, on his horse or mule, if he has one, and, lastly, he must pay a tax on every egg and everything else he takes into the city. He must pay a road tax every year, which is not used on the roads. Generally, he can get out of paying very much in some of these cases by paying a bribe to the collector.

Famous Pool Dries Up.

The romantic and mysterious "silent pool" at Albury, Surrey, England, whose creeping legends, including death pacts, go back to King John's day, has dried up and disappeared. The drought of 1921 is blamed for the exhaustion of the springs which fed the pool.

Experience may be a great teacher, but a man's experience with a woman doesn't teach him sense.

LABOR IN EAST AND WEST

Observant Visitor Points Out the Fundamental Difference Existing Between the Two.

Having come out of China, the observant Charles Merz writes thus:

"Head bent close above an oil light's shadows dancing on his table-cloth a Chinese workman hammers out a round brass bowl or pegs a pair of yellow slippers.

"The old-style Chinese workman does not pass his day with one hand or foot steadily laboring the same pedal of the same machine; he does not make over and over scores of times each day, the same small part of the same old stove or carpet-sweeper.

"Instead, with a lump of brass or a strip of leather, he follows his product through from raw material to the finished article.

"He is his own foreman, if he likes, his own designer. He may weave two circles in his rug instead of one, put three handles on his bowl instead of two.

"If he were working in America and put three handles on a bathtub, inevitably he'd cease to be an economic factor."—Chicago Journal.

CENTRAL FACT OF HINDUISM

According to Leader, "Cow Protection" Is the Gift of That Cult to the World.

Mahatma Gandhi, the Indian leader, says that the central fact in Hinduism is cow protection. "The cow was in India the best companion," declares Gandhi. "She was the giver of plenty. Not only did she give milk, but she also made agriculture possible. She is the mother of millions of Indian mankind. The ancient seer, whoever he is, began with the cow. Cow protection is the gift of Hinduism to the world. And Hinduism will live as long as there are Hindus to protect the cow.

"The way to protect is to die for her. It is a denial of Hinduism to kill a human being to protect a cow: Hindus are enjoined to protect the cow by self-purification, by self-sacrifice. The present-day cow protection has degenerated into a perpetual feud with the Mussulman, whereas cow protection means conquering the Mussulman by our love."

When you hear a man always prating about honesty, set him down as a deadbeat.

What is good health worth to you?

HEALTH is priceless. You wouldn't knowingly part with it for anything in the world.

Why then do you risk it needlessly for the sake of a few cups of coffee? Coffee contains caffeine, a harmful drug which often interferes with nerves and digestion.

There's an easy, pleasant way to avoid this menace to health, without any sacrifice of comfort or satisfaction. Drink Postum instead of coffee.

Postum is a pure cereal beverage—wholesome and delicious—a safeguard for health.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

Winona To Entertain International Conference

An instructive conference to be known as the Consultative International Christian Citizenship Conference will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, this summer July 1st to 8th, under the direction of the National Reform Association of which Dr. James S. Martin of Pittsburgh is General Superintendent.

This organization has conducted for a number of years, an institute of national interest at Winona each season. Their original plan for 1923 was to be known as a World Conference with all the civilized nations represented by men of international reputation who could speak authoritatively for and about their countries. Conditions are such in Europe today that the attendance of such persons cannot be assured as they cannot leave their important governmental tasks to come to America at this time when conditions abroad are so acute and menacing. Because of this unavoidable situation added emphasis is being given to the securing of American speakers, as well as delegates and speakers from as many foreign contries as can participate in such a conference at this time.

Already United States Senators, Congressmen, educators, Governors, and nationally known men have agreed to be present in such numbers as to insure one of the greatest gatherings of its kind ever held in our country.

All sessions of this great conference will be open to everyo e. Owing to the type of speakers who will consitute the program, and the added interest created by a large choir and musical numbers, predictions are already made that record breaking crowds will be in attendance.

Operated On For Appendicitis

Arden Morr, son of Mr and Mrs. S. C. Morr, of near Concord, was operated on at a Fort Wayne hospital last Thursday at 2:30 o'clock p. m. for appendicitis.

Arden was employed in Fort Wayne by the Standard Oil Company and roomed there. He awoke at three o'clock Thursday morning suffering intensly and he aroused the land lady who called medical aid. After an examination an operation was advised and he was rushed to the hospital.

Arden stood the operation fine and a late report is that he is getting along alright.

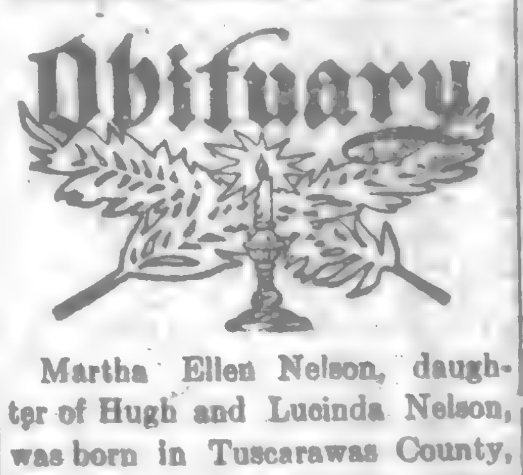
"The Father of Our Country"



Obituary

Martha Ellen Nelson, daughter of Hugh and Lucinda Nelson, was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, September 30, 1858. With her parents she moved to DeKalb Countp at the age of four. On May 21, 1875, she was united in marriage to Willard C. Patterson to whom were born, Bessie Gale and Ralph Waldo. She was a member of Wesley Chapel Church in Newville Township for several years and later joined St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church of which she was a member until her death. She departed this life on Sunday, Feb. 18th 1923, at Springfield, Ohio, where her daughter and son are now located.

The body was shipped to St. Joe Tuesday, where it laid in state at the deceased's home until Wednesday at two o'clock. The funeral was conducted from the Lutheran church, Rev. F. A Dressel officiating. Burial in Riverside cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

A TRIBUTE

"I would not live alway: I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way;
The few lurid mornings that dawn on us here
Are enough for life's woes, full enough for its cheer.

Who, who would live alway, away from his God;
Away from yonr heaven, that blissful abode,
Where the rivers of pleasure flow o'er the bright plains,
And the noontide of glory eternally reigns?"

This was one of the many songs of faith and hope that Mrs. Patterson delighted to sing. There was music in her soul. It was evident not only in her voice, but in the movement of her body, in her smile, and in the atmosphere which radiated from her genial presence.

Here was a rare spirit. Nature was kind in [illegible] her [illegible] personal [illegible] ed hosts of [illegible] went. We [illegible] We shall [illegible] was our friend.

[illegible]

[illegible]

heart. Again and again she served as an officer in the Synodical Society where she was always not only honored and esteemed but loved throughout the Synod.

Quietly and unostentatiously she labored, ministering here and there, always in honor preferring another. To those who knew her intimately, she was a most enjoyable soul, full of droll humor which would convulse a friend with laughter. How we remember the cheerful spirit.

Her memory is lustrous. It spreads afar, like sweet fragrance wafted on the wings of air. Her beautiful christian character can never be effaced. Her fortitude in tribulation was "endured as seeing Him who is invisible."

The loss to her dear children is irreparable. Her devotion and self-sacrifice as a mother knew no limit. They must rise up and call her "Blessed."

She is not dead. Neither does she sleep. She lives. She is united in glory with her companion. They are enjoying each other in the home eternal in the presence of their Redeemer. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire in this manner to extend our appreciation and thanks to our neighbors and friends for their sympathy and help in the burial of our mother, and also for the flowers.

The children.

Culture Club Guest Evening

Guest evening, the annual event of the Culture Club, was held on the evening of Valentine day, February 14th., in the spacious country home of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Widney. Fifty members and guests were present.

Stunts, contests and eats were so combined by the committee in charge as to make the occasion exceedingly enjoyable and one to be long remembered by all present. The rooms were beautifully decorated with the emblems of Saint Valentines. Hearts, cupids, streamers and birds were used to give the atmosphere of festivity and lovers day.

The program was as follows: Song, Comin' Thro' the Rye; Greeting by the hostess, Mrs. Widney; Response, Mr. O. E. Ginther; Piano solo, Mrs. Wm. Hamilton; Origin of St. Valentine, Mrs. O. E. Ginther; Reading, Mrs. C. R. Price; Violin solo, Dorothy Ginther; Reading, DuWayne Kinsey; Reading, Margaret Elnor Hamilton; Reading, Della Hoffman; Monologue, Eloise Bowman; Reading, Virginia Ginther, Illustrated songs and Silhouettes.

Each number was well given and greatly enjoyed. The illustrated songs were novel as well as beautiful. They consisted of a few popular songs adapted to the purpose which were sung by Mesdames F. R. Bowman, H. M. Widney and B. V. Widney. Each song was illustrated in costume by Mesdames F. D. Tope and Earl B. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Ginther, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Jenkins and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hursh.

Silhouettes, or shadow pictures, were received with much mirth. The subjects or shadows projected were, "The Operation", by Mesdames C. R. Price, A. Copp and H. M. Widney; "Carrie Nation" by Mrs. Frank Bowman; "Wash Day" by Mrs. Belle Ridgway and Mr. B. V. Widney and "The Milliner Shop" by Mesdames Ray Reasoner, Wm. Hamilton, F. A. Jenkins, A. Copp and Belle Ridgway.

The committees in charge of the evening were, program, Mesdames E. R. Kinsey, C. R. Price, F. R. Bowman and B. V. Widney, and banquet committee, Mesdames A. Copp, F. A. Jenkins, Wm. Hamilton and H. M. Widney. The splendor of the occasion, the well arranged program, the perfect organisation of every detail, and the ease with which the large company was handled and e tertained, all, spoke volumes for the ability of the committees responsible for the event.

The guests departed at a late hour, astonished at the fleetness of the evening, aware that they had enjoyed one of the best times in their lives, and looking forward in fond anticipation to the next guest evening for 1924.

CO-OPERATIVE PLAN WORKS WELL IN OHIO

Farmers Are Cutting Out One of Curves in Road From Producer to Consumer.

Approximately half of the dairy products of Ohio are being marketed co-operatively, according to estimates compiled by the Ohio Farm Bureau federation. Thus a large number of Ohio farmers are cutting out one of the curves in the road from the producer to the consumer. Almost 40,000 Ohio farmers belong to one of the nine main co-operative dairy sales associations now marketing or about to market cream and milk co-operatively.

Nine groups represent an equal number of the principal markets. Some of these organizations specialize in the handling of milk, others in cream, while most of them handle both milk and cream. The largest fluid milk organizations are those supplying the Cleveland, Pittsburgh, and Cincinnati markets. The co-operatives furnish a sizable portion of the Toledo supply, but put a larger portion through their co-operative cream stations and condenseries.

Co-operatives are now forming, with the aid of E. D. Waid, of the state farm bureau, in the Miami, Muskingum, and Scioto valleys to supply the Dayton, Springfield, Zanesville, and Columbus markets respectively.

The producers sell their products through a sales committee of the organization to which they belong. This committee dickers with the distributors for a given volume and at a price to run for a certain period. A sliding scale is arranged whereby the producer gets a larger price during the seasons of restricted production.

Co-operative cream shipping, through local buying stations, is said to have become particularly popular during the past two years, the first one having been started at Centerburg, Knox county, in December, 1920. Cream is now being sold to approximately 50 local co-operative stations in all parts of Ohio, set up by the co-operative organizations. Each is handling an average of a ton of butterfat a week. In most small communities there are a number of cream buyers. "Through the pooling of the product, however, one station is able to handle the volume formerly divided among several stations, and thus the cost of local marketing has been reduced to three cents a pound," says F. C. Dean of the federation.

"Through the co-operative effort and the supervision which the sales organizations have given, the standard of cream has increased in an unusual degree. Buyers formerly had difficulty in obtaining as much as 10 to 25 per cent of No. 1 cream from their private stations. Now they are getting as much as 70 to 75 per cent of No. 1 cream through the co-operative stations.

"The main co-operative organizations in Ohio at the present time and the number of members that they represent are as follows:

"Dairyman's Co-operative Sales company, supplying eastern Ohio and Pittsburgh markets, 12,000 members. Ohio Farmers' Co-operative Milk company, Cleveland, 4,000 members. Northwestern Co-operative Sales company, Toledo, and surrounding cities, 4,000 members. North Central Co-operative Sales association, in the region of Marion and Bucyrus, 2,000 members. Lima Equity association, Lima, 2,000 members. Miami Valley Co-operative Milk Producers' association, Springfield, Dayton, and Xenia, 3,000 members. Queen City Milk Producers' association, Cincinnati, 4,000 members. Southwestern Ohio Co-operative Sales association, a cream agency for Clermont, Highland, Brown and Adams counties, 2,000 members. Scioto Valley Co-operative Milk Producers' association, [illegible] members. [illegible] organization, 4,000 members."

RICE GROWERS MEET WITH MUCH SUCCESS

Membership of Louisiana Association Increased Rapidly in Very Short Period.

The first outstanding success of the farm bureau in Louisiana was the establishment of the Farm Bureau Rice Growers' association, with headquarters at Crowley, in the center of the great southwestern rice belt.

The association was incorporated early in September, 1922, with a membership of 320 growers, with a little more than 900,000 bushels of rice pledged under a five-year commodity marketing contract. By December 1 the membership had been increased to 500, with pledges of more than 1,500,000 bushels of rice, and enough prospective members had been lined up to increase the total volume of grain to be handled in 1923 to 4,000,000 bushels.

Actual advances to association members to December 1 on the basis of 60 per cent of market value amounted to $500,000, all of which was advanced by banks in the rice belt and in New Orleans. Additional credits for $1,500,000 have been secured from New Orleans banks and the War Finance corporation, to complete the marketing program of the association.

The financial affairs of the association have been so arranged that, although 6 per cent interest is paid on all loans, the individual farmer to whom an advance is made is actually required to pay less than one per cent. This is accomplished by selling in an orderly manner each month enough rice to pay off the outstanding indebtedness of the organization, and applying funds returned in this way to finance other growers, thus using the same money several times over during the period of the loan. Each farmer receives a check for 60 per cent of the value of his rice as soon as it is received at the warehouse and graded.

The Federal Rice mill, at Crowley, with a capacity of 6,000 bushels a day, has been leased by the association for cleaning and processing the rice, and negotiations are now under way to secure a second mill in the vicinity of New Orleans.

M. G. Graham, formerly with the field service of the state farm bureau federation, has been appointed field manager of the rice growers' association. Officers of the association are Floyd Williams, president; C. E. Carnes, vice president and general manager; L. P. Erickson, vice president; John Nugier, treasurer; L. H. Clark, secretary. The board of directors is composed of 18 representative rice growers of the state.

Farm Bureau Plan for Selling Potatoes and Grain in Wisconsin County Successful.

The farm bureau plan for the co-operative marketing of the potato and grain crop in Door county, Wis., has gone over the top. Already considerably more than the minimum of 100 contracts have been signed, and more are coming in every day to avail themselves of this co-operative marketing machinery.

The contracts signed in the vicinity of Sturgeon Bay already include over 75,000 bushels of potatoes. This, with the volume of business of the [illegible] Bay association, which began operating under a similar contract last year, insures a total of over [illegible] bushels of potatoes to be marketed co-operatively this fall.

The COTTAGE GARDENER

HOW TO HAVE AN ATTRACTIVE LAWN

Frequent Seeding, With Use of Suitable Fertilizers Will Give Results.

When there is a partial stand of grass on a lawn, even though the ground is not more than one-fourth covered, the best plan is to seed freely about twice a year and apply suitable fertilizers at frequent intervals, the United States Department of Agriculture advises. If soil is composed partially of clay or is a clay subsoil, then Kentucky blue grass and redtop would be suitable to use in equal quantities, by weight. If in shade as much red fescue as either of the other grasses should be added. If, however, the soil is largely sand, redtop, red fescue, and, if obtainable, creeping bent or Rhode Island bent should be used in equal parts by weight. For Kentucky blue grass the soil needs to be alkaline. This can be assured by applying lime or unleached wood ashes at the rate of one to three tons per acre. If there is half a stand of grass one would use seed at the rate of 50 pounds per acre or one pound for every 1,000 square feet of surface. With less grass, one would use more seed.

Lawn and Shrubbery.

It is well to seed in March and the last of August or first of September. To stimulate as vigorous a growth of grass as possible a liberal application of either ground bone or one of the prepared stock yard manures, like prepared sheep manure or prepared cow manure, should be broadcast on the surface. From one to one and one-half tons of bone per acre is required, and of the prepared manures an even larger quantity. After the grass has well started, nitrate of soda could be used to advantage at the rate of 50 pounds per acre. This could be repeated a month later, although as a rule it is not advisable to use this material after the beginning of September. It should be applied when the ground is wet either from rain or from watering.

Bone or stock yard manure should be applied late each fall and nitrate of soda could be used as a stimulant from June to September at intervals of a month. Reseeding is desirable each March and August until a really good lawn is secured, when the August seeding may be omitted.

Clipping the lawn should begin as soon as the lawn mower will cut the tops when set high. It should be repeated at intervals of five days or a week. The clippings should be permitted to remain about the roots of the grass.

Watering should not be oftener than once in five days but should wet the soil to a depth of four inches when applied. Usually watering is too light and too frequent.

[illegible]

ROLL THE LAWN

A good, heavy roller is a valuable asset to the painstaking lawn lover. A roller is easy to make. Obtain a rimless tile, provide a piece of gas pipe to run through the center, then pour the tile full of cement and sand mixed. A gas pipe or wood handle can be arranged to suit. Frequent use of the roller in the early spring will roll down the bumps in the lawn caused by freezing.

POSIES AND SHRUBS FOR HOME GROUNDS

Rich Blossoms and Colorful Foliage Add to the Appearance of Yard.

"Man shall not live by bread alone," even with the addition of a few vegetables. In planning a home garden some space should be devoted to shrubbery and a few flowers to delight the eye and add to the beauty of the home surroundings, the United States Department of Agriculture advises. Although many flowers are suitable for planting close to the house, it may be more desirable to place permanent shrubbery against the foundations of the house and give the annual flowering plants a place in the garden proper or as a border. A bed of flowers may well be used to separate the lawn from a neighboring property or from the vegetable garden.

Old-fashioned zinnias, petunias, bachelor's buttons, cockscomb, scarlet sage, cosmos, are among the most easily cultivated flowers which serve to brighten up the exterior of the home. Where space is available, one may choose plants that will furnish cut flowers for the house as well as beautify the surroundings. Dahlias, asters, peonies, roses and gladioli are among the many excellent flowering plants for this purpose.

Dahlias are propagated in two ways, by the tubers, which look something like small sweet potatoes, and by cuttings. By the tuber method of propagation a single root or tuber is placed in each hill and allowed to develop a cluster of stems. These tubers may be placed in pots or boxes in the house to form roots and make a start before they are set in the open ground, but as dahlias are primarily a late summer and fall flowering plant there is no particular need of getting them started early and the bulbs can be planted right where the plants are to stand. The other method of propagating, by cuttings, is practiced by florists. By this method the tubers are planted during January in the greenhouse and as the young shoots form about three leaves they are cut off, the leaves trimmed slightly, and the cutting rooted in a warm bed of sand. After the roots are formed the cuttings are potted in rich soil and grown to good sized plants in five or six-inch pots. The tuber method of propagation is the only practical one for the average person.

Flowers and Vines.

SHOULD PLANT PEAS EARLY

Seed May Be Put Into Ground as Soon as Freezing Weather Is Over.

Peas can be planted almost as soon as the frost is out of the ground, the United States Department of Agriculture says. One pint of seed will plant 100 feet of row. One hundred feet of row will yield four to six pickings of sufficient quantity to supply a family of five over a period of about eight or ten days. The important point in providing a continuous supply of peas is to make at least three, [illegible] plantings. The [illegible]

Why Farmers are Turning to

CHEVROLET

for Economical Transportation

In 1922 Chevrolet jumped from seventh to second place in sales of all cars, and to first place in sales of fully equipped modern cars.

Purchases by farmers were the chief factor in this remarkable development.

Farmers want automobiles not only of low first price, but also of low later cost for operation and maintenance.

They want room, comfort, and the ability to stand up under hard conditions.

They find that Chevrolet, fully equipped as sold, is the best value per dollar in the low-priced field, and neighbors tell them it costs less per mile to operate.

"NADINE!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife. Drace penetrates into the wilderness, discovers Periwinkle House and finds Nadine alone. She is much alarmed and warns him her father will shoot him. He makes love to her and to get him to go she agrees to meet him again the following Thursday. On his way home Drace is accosted by three men who ask to be set across the river. They overpower him and bind him with ropes. Led by Tony they throw Drace into an old cabin. Tony taunts Drace and avows his love for Nadine, while the others collect fuel. Tony sets fire to the cabin and the three go off laughing. Nadine rescues him and agrees to meet him again.

The General roared his delight, said that he would go on the stand to swear against Sour Socrates in favor of the fiddler's dialogue. "Tobe," he shouted, "fetch in the buck-and-wing dancers."

Tobe went to the door, yelled as if calling hogs; and in came two big negroes, a throng of idlers following them. At it they went, shaking the house, and when weariness threatened to seize them, for refreshment they drew off, and leaping, butted their heads together like goats. After a time the General gave them a dollar apiece, dismissed them—gave the fiddler five, with an order to play that old tune again. Old Tobe was now lighting his evening lamps. The General called to him.

"Toby, what have you for supper?"

The old fellow closed one eye.

"'What have I got?' he says. Ah, that's it. An' I'll tell you. I've got hoe-cake and roasted doves."

"No, you don't mean it!"

"Hoe-cake and roasted doves, I said."

"Good, by Gideon's Band. Fetch us, Tobias. And mark you, along with it all bring about a trowel full of that wild plum jelly.

The doves and the strips of bacon and the hoe-cake and the jelly came on, and arising the General saluted the repast.

"Talk about quail! Quail, sir, is insipid, white, dry and tasteless compared with the dark richness of the dove. And look at this bread, made of mealed pearl. You never tasted any bacon like that, my son, fed on acorns showered down from Olympus. . . . The sweet of the night!"

They had finished the meal and were sitting back, smoking, sipping wine, when Drace noticed a sudden change in the General's countenance, a tightening, a grimness; and turning about, he saw standing against the wall a strange figure—a man not tall, but broad of shoulder, his body sloping lithely down to feet expressively of sinewy restlessness. His mass of hair was like tangled flax straw, dark and yet gray. Like the bristles of a wild boar, his short mustache stuck out and his heavy eyebrows looked like great hairy caterpillars crawling across his lower forehead. In his dress there was a wild touch, a barbaric aspect. Slowly he came forward.

"This is General Bethpage, heh?"

"That is my name, yes. What do you want with me?"

"Whut I want; heh? I come to 'pologize to think them mule be mine."

"Well, go on away. I don't want any apology from you."

"No? You put pistol at me. That was in Louisiana. This is Mississip'. An' I tell you here you haf turn' carpethagger."

"What! If General Andrew Jackson should arise out of his grave and tell me that, do you know what I would say to him?"

"You would beg hees pardon as you will mine, heh?"

"I would say to him as I now say to you: You are an infamous liar."

Drace sprang between them and seized the man by the wrist; a dirk fell from his hand.

"Stand back, General," cried Drace. "There is not going to be a fight here. Stand back, Tobe!"

The dark-faced man looked Drace in the eye.

"Monsieur was ver' strong. But—I see him some other day."

Turning, the fellow made off.

"Now, who the devil was that?" asked Drace.

"That, my dear Drace," replied the General, "was the fellow you asked about the other day—Stepho la Vitte."

To Drace this encounter with Stepho la Vitte, the father of the girl he loved—and the outlaw upon whom he had sworn to wreak vengeance—was disturbing indeed. The General, however, was not at all upset by the fact that he had been barely saved from Stepho's knife, and when a short time later they boarded the Bumblebee on their return, he gripped Major Pewitt's hand and said:

"Major, Mr. Drace and I have in our precious possession three quarts of old Tobe's wild grape."

"Ha—which is as much as to say that you have three quarts stewed out of the heart of Venus. I'll find Hawkins and the four of us will gather in the Texas and—and flatter the stars, by gad! But Tobe lied—said he didn't have any of the old stock left."

"And a liar's wine is sweet, my dear Major. Come, Virgil, my boy, put all brooding out of your mind. Brooding is for the poet when the nag is tired, and not for us. We'll have a night of it, and then we'll return to respectable servitude and slow moral decay. My dear Major, lead on. We follow."

The remainder of the trip back to Bethpage was a matter of moral freedom at the gaming table for the General. For Drace it was occupied with the hot struggle between thoughts of his grim mission against Stepho, and his longing for Nadine. For the time being, however, the beautiful girl who had rescued him from the burning hut triumphed. She had promised to see him once more on Thursday. He would keep the tryst.

Presently the Bumblebee made Bethpage Landing. And the General's hospitality was at once so warm and so gracious that Drace felt no hesitancy in remaining for the time being under his roof—until Shottle's return, at least. That night after dinner when his wife, Tycie, had left, the old gentleman lit a cigar and for a long time sat smoking in silence; and Drace was silent, too, looking through the lattice at the moon, love's slow timepiece stopped and stagnant in the sky.

"Virgil?"

"Yes, General."

"Have you a pistol, sir?"

"No; I had one, but I lost it."

"Well, provide yourself with another. In saving me from a deadly assault you have mortally offended old La Vitte. He is in no wise afraid; but neither is he gallant, and would shoot you without warning. You told me, you remember, of your appointment to meet old Spence tomorrow. I haven't any too much confidence in him; he might play you into the hands of Stepho, and I advise you not to go fishing with him."

"Spence. No that's not the name of the old fellow I'm going with. His name is—Spillers, I think."

"I don't know a [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] yourself [illegible]."

And then [illegible] silence, [illegible] the night.

CHAPTER IX

[illegible] out from the window. Her father had come in late and was to depart again early for the hills, but she was afraid lest he might have changed his mind. She heard him moving about, but she waited a long time before she went to meet him, so sweet it was to stand there at the window to catch the first ray of the sun.

The old man hummed a jagged tune; in a garden of melody it would have been a briar. Nadine came out, and gallantly he kissed her hand, laughing softly; and then as was his wont, he kissed her hair.

Her duties about the house were light, but he helped her, and when their queer assortment of plates and dishes, gold-rimmed china, crockery, stoneware and tin plate had been washed and put away, they sat in the shade of the house, the girl anxious and wondering.

"I have sent Tony back to the ceety, as I tell you I will," he said to her. "He does the good work to burn the spy, the carpetbaggair. Now he have spree, with the red wine an' the white. When the time come, he be back. I have need of heem with the cattle that I buy. He drive them . . . Up to the town Natches I have trouble. The ol' scoun'rel Bethpage! I go in the tav', an' he is there, sing, laugh, eat an' look at the darky dance. I wait. Then I go up. We have words. He jump up. Then the young man, big, he grab my wrist like this. He squeeze. I say: 'Monsieur you was ver' strong, I see you again.' An' when I do, I keel heem. I hear old Bethpage call him Vergeel. The old man I keel too, eh?"

"Oh, no—no!" she cried . . . "Let us go away somewhere. They will never let you alone. It will be better to be in the city than here."

"Just a little while longer we stay in this place, eh? Then we meet Monsieur Boyce in Memphis, an' you marry him, an' he take you away for the honeymoon, per'aps to France. An' he buy you the silk dresses, an' many beautiful things. An' then I come and join you, an' we all live happy—eh?"

"But—but I do not like Monsieur Boyce!"

"Ha! You learn soon. He is a fine man. Wait till we see him in Memphis an' you know him better. You will love him then, an' be happy. . . . I go now. Au revoir, ma p'tite."

Stepho went down to his boat, feeling that he had outwitted her impatience of the swamp, and she ran back to her room to gaze through the window. But soon she came out with a big leatherbound book of plays and put it on the ground beneath the oaks. Then with a broom made of stiff twigs she swept the ground, unstrung a caterpillar swinging down and carried it away out of the range of her stage. From the house she brought a narrow strip of rush matting, spread it beneath a tree, raising one edge as if to form of it a sort of back, a sofa. From the house she brought a box, to serve for a table, and from out beyond the palisade of cane she gathered lilies, plucking from the bank a great bloom that looked like a trumpet. These she hung on the low-swaying branches of her playhouse trees, or with sharp thorns pinned them to the rugged back, a curtain to drape the wall above her "pretend-like" divan. She sat down and waited a long time. The cane stirred, and she seized her book, opened where a lily-stem marked her favorite play, and made herself believe that she was reading.

It was only a breeze that rustled in the cane. She could hear it now, lisping amid the glossy leaves above her. Why should she be impatient? She could wait. Had she not waited night after night for her father's footstep? Had she not sat in the house, alone and not afraid, when the storm tangled the tops of the cypress trees and lashed the bayou mad? . . . She had not heard a sound, but looking by chance, she saw Drace coming through the cane, and she sprang up to meet him, the play-book pressed against her bosom.

"Nadine."

"Monsieur!"

"Don't call me 'Monsieur.' Call me Virgil."

She dropped her book. He bent to pick it up, but she snatched it from beneath his reaching hand and stood back from him.

"Oh, it was you, then! It was you the so strong man that would break my father's wrist. It was you!"

"Nadine, it was not to hurt him. With a knife he would have killed an old man; and then they would have hanged him. Nadine, my other hand held yours, to protect you."

"It must be true. I will believe you—Virgil. I know you brave and not wish to hurt an old man. No, you could not do that. You will forgive me, yes?"

She held forth her hand and taking it tenderly, he touched it with his lips; and like a princess she accepted the homage due her rank and her beauty.

"Come, now, we play," she said, [illegible]. "And it must be [illegible] the boy and the girl. But [illegible] down here and tell me."

[illegible] do you know what I said [illegible]?" I said: "You are to [illegible]."

CLASS NOTES

FRESHMEN:

We are to have a debate in Civics class next Tuesday. The topic is, "Resolved: That the Volstead Act and 18th Amendment have failed in their purpose."

A show entitled, "Pots and Pans. Peggy," is to be given at the school building on March 2. Price of admission will be 15 and 25 cents. All under sixteen years of age will be admitted for 15 cents, owing to the fact that it is a child's play. Come!

Every day in every way our class is getting smaller and smaller. There were only eight of the Freshman class on duty Monday morning. L.M.C.

SOPHOMORE:

We were glad to see that two of our members who had geen on the sick list are able to be in school again. L. E.K.

JUNIOR:

Once again I find that I'm called upon to write the notes for the Juniors because of the absence of our class reporter, and really there is nothing going on a bit newsy.

Oh! yes, we Juniors are planning an entertainment for you next Saturday night. We have scheduled another Priscilla Dean picture entitled, "A Woman Knows," and in connection with the picture we are preparing a few specialties to help pass the time which is necessary for the changing of reals. Saturday, February 24.

We find ourselves struggling through the agonies of the Civil War, in our American History class and really we find it almost as bad as actual service.

We are happy to see that some of us who have been hibernating for the last few days are among us again. Yet there are three of our number who are absent because of sickness. V. L.

SENIOR:

Just think, there are only three more months until school is out. And, by the way, don't forget to be saving your pennies for the Senior class play. Several things may come up during the latter part of the year for which we will appreciate your patronage.

Eye-minded People Of To-day

Most people today are eye-minded. They need to be ear-minded.

Your grandfather was ear-minded. If he did not agree with a thing he said, "It goes in one ear and out the other."

You do not say that. You say, "I cannot see that," or "I do not see it that way."

The old generation was ear-minded. The new generation is eye-minded. The old generation listened. The new generation looks.

Not so long ago men and women gathered the knowledge for which their minds were hungry by listening and talking. People went to lectures. Every great man went on lecture tours, and thousands thronged to hear him. People went to church more, too, to hear things said to them. Education, knowledge, advancement, came through the ear.

Now it comes through the eye. Jokes are passed around in comic strips rather than by telling. Many advertisements are nearly all pictures.

The actor who ranted and roused his emotions is supplanted by the silent shadow of the actor who touches our minds and hearts through our eyes.

Even things that are written—news, fiction and every kind of article that appears in the press—is told in words that evoke pictures and usually with actual illustrations, photographs or drawings.

This is an age when people want facts, and the eyes are less deceptive than the ears. They want many facts, quickly, tersely, brilliantly presented by experts. Even fiction must be as true as life. The way to change a tire must be shown by a graphic diagram.

You can see it all around you. It's progress. Printing has much to do with making people eye-minded. In three centuries printing unchained the intelligence of mankind. In three more centuries it may develope that intelligence to undreamed-of heights.

For mankind wants more intelligence. Men want to know more—always more.

It is the business of your paper to serve to this end.

Fire Destroys Farm Home

The dwelling of R. McMellan, on the old David Metcalf farm, one mile southwest of Spencerville, burned to the ground Monday morning.

The blaze was discovered at about 9 o'clock making its headway about the chimney which, it is supposed, became over heated. Help was called which arrived in time to have done some good had there been any water accessable. But both cistern and well happened to be frozen and could not be thawed in time.

All that could be done was to remove those things from the house that would be possible to remove. Everything on the lower floor was saved but the things that were stored in the half story over head were burned.

The wood house attached to the rear of the dwelling was burned as well. The estimate of the loss was not learned.

The McMellan family have lived here for about one year.

COUNTY AGENT'S WORK ADVANCING

County Agent Points Out to Members of Boys' Club Good Qualities of Their Calves.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If county agent work continues to advance in the 33 northern and western states at the average rate it has maintained during the past 11 years, or since its beginning, every county in these states will have a resident agent within the next three years. Of the 1,616 agricultural counties in these states, 1,239 have agents, according to the report issued by the United States Department of Agriculture as Department Circular 244, on the Status and Results of County Agent Work in the Northern and Western States, 1921.

The county agent work, says the report, made a conservative and uniform growth from 1913 to 1917 of about 100 new counties each year. Then came the artificial stimulation of the large appropriation authorized by the war emergency act, which provided for national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products. In a period of about 10 months during 1918, 544 agents were appointed. The conclusion of the war so soon after the appointment of this large additional force and the withdrawal of more than a million dollars of federal support, brought a real crisis in the development of the work. A considerable loss of agents was commonly forecasted. Farmers rallied to the support of the work, however, in these new counties in a most surprising way. Agricultural colleges sacrificed some other lines of work in order to retain contact with the county. Instead of a loss, there was an increase of 29 agents the first year after the war.

Work Should Go On.

About 80 per cent of the agricultural counties of the North and West are now reached by a resident agent, and these counties contain 77 per cent of the total number of farms of the 33 states according to the 1920 census. It would seem, therefore, says the writer of this report, that, at least from the standpoint of the number of farms per county, the average county without an agent is relatively as important as those with agents, and that the work should go on to rapid completion, or at least go forward at the rate maintained before the war. Commenting further on the status of the county agent, the report says:

County Agent Demonstrates Culling of Poultry.

"There is gradually developing in some states a definite plan or agricultural program of work looking toward the future and having in mind a permanent agriculture based on the character of the population, soil, labor distribution and marketing conditions. The need of such a program has long been recognized and its absence lamented as the chief limiting factor in the effectiveness of extension work. Such a program requires [illegible] study and [illegible] [illegible] few institutions [illegible] [illegible] work. [illegible] applied if the basic agricultural program is not carefully thought out and the extension services of the colleges and department organized to meet these conditions. This is a matter which the county agents have to consider with the farmers in developing a county and the community program of work, and the questions raised by them have served to give renewed emphasis to the need of state programs in agricultural improvement. Such state plans as have been developed in the past two years have for the most part been a combination and elaboration of the county programs worked out by county agents in cooperation with farmers' committees, and these county plans will go far in helping to supply the raw materials for the complete working out of a permanent state plan of work. The analysis of county extension programs in relation to agricultural statistics is calling attention to deficiencies or wrong emphasis, and so making for county programs based on real rather than apparent agricultural needs."

Cover Wide Range.

A considerable part of the report is given over to an interesting discussion of a number of examples of demonstration work covering a wide range of subjects which have served to give the work a reputation for accomplishing results and to make it a more firmly established activity in agricultural and rural progress.

This circular is the last of a series of reports of this kind on the work in the northern and western states, since, with the combining of the office of extension work in the North and West with the office of extension work in the South, the work will in the future be given a national rather than a regional consideration. Copies of this circular may be obtained by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

UNFAVORABLE WINTER WEATHER IS HARMFUL

Conditions in Fall Do Not Materially Affect Wheat.

Damage to Grains in Severe Weather Usually Grouped Under Four Heads: Heaving, Smothering, Low Temperature and Drought.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

While unfavorable winter weather occasionally damages fall-sown grains to a considerable extent, statistical studies indicate that conditions during the fall do not bear, in general, any material relation to the yield of wheat the following summer, but that the weather during the winter, spring, and early summer months, especially from March to June, has a much greater influence on the final output. Consequently, the weather bureau, United States Department of Agriculture, points out, wheat may be in poor condition at the beginning of the winter, and with favorable weather later the improvement may be such as to produce satisfactory yields.

When the weather is favorable during the fall months, grains usually establish a good root system and are less liable to winter injury than when fall weather is unfavorable. Winter damage to grains is usually grouped under four main heads: Heaving, smothering, direct effect of low temperature, and drought.

Heaving occurs usually on poorly drained soil in the spring, and is due to alternate freezing and thawing which breaks the roots or lifts the plants from the soil and leaves the roots exposed to the air.

ROAD BUILDING

COLORADO DOUBLES MILEAGE

More Than 60 Per Cent of Roads Have Been Improved During Past Seven Years.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Colorado has more than doubled its mileage of improved road in the last seven years, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has made an extensive investigation as to the highway mileage and revenue of the state.

In 1914 there was 13,298 miles of improved road and a total of 39,780 miles, while in 1921 the improved mileage had increased to 29,540 miles and a total of 48,148 miles.

The improved road at the present time is classified as follows: Graded and drained, 24,941 miles; sand, clay and gravel, 4,397 miles; macadam, 131 miles; other types of surfacing, 71 miles.

While most of the improved road in this state is what is known as low-type road, the fact that more than 60 per cent of the total mileage has been improved constitutes a record that will be envied by many.

A Concrete Cement Road in Colorado.

For each square mile of area the road revenue amounts to $85.56, and there is one-half mile of road. The total road revenue amounts to $9.35 per capita, $182.07 per mile of road, and totals $8,765,443.

DIRT ROADS WASTE GASOLINE

Gallon of Fuel Necessary to Drive Car Six Miles on Earth and Twelve on Hard.

An investigation carried on by an automobile manufacturer showed that the consumption of a gallon of gasoline was necessary to drive a machine six miles on the average earth roads as against twelve miles on the hard-surfaced roads, according to Automobile Topics. These figures would indicate a saving in gasoline, on the basis of 400 vehicles per mile a day, of 50,000,000 gallons on 10,000 miles of improved roads. At 24 cents a gallon this amounts to $12,000,000, or more than enough to pay 5 per cent interest on the investment.

One billion, seven hundred million dollars per year will pay $15,500,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds (principal and interest) in a little less than twelve years. In other words, if we could immediately lay down 2,500,000 miles of public highway at a cost of $15,500,000,000, borrowing the money to do it with at 5 per cent interest, the $1,700,000,000 saved to the producers of farm products in the one item of reduced cost of moving their annual crops to market would pay off the debt, principal and interest, in less than twelve years.

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 25

THE PARABLE OF THE POUNDS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:11-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much.—Luke 16:10.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matt. 25:14-30; I Tim. 4:13-16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Working for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Faithful and Unfaithful Workers.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Fidelity That Jesus Expects.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Returns Does Christ Require of Us?

The purpose of this parable was to correct the misapprehension of the disciples as to the immediate establishment of the kingdom. They were on the way to Jerusalem and they thought that immediately upon their arrival there Jesus would begin the exercise of His kingdom rule. It is to be noted that Jesus did not correct them for believing in the reality of the kingdom, but for believing that it would immediately appear.

I. The Absent Lord (v. 12).

He pictures His going back to God as a nobleman going to receive a kingdom. This was a common occurrence among them. They knew how some of the Herodian family had thus done—gone to Rome and secured their appointment to rule over Palestine. Jesus ascended on high to receive from God, the Father, a kingdom. Let no one mistake the certainty of His return, though the time be unknown, and the event delayed.

II. The Distribution of the Pounds (v. 12).

These pounds represent Christ's gifts to His servants. When Christ ascended He gave gifts to men (Eph. 4:7, 8, 11, 12). To each servant was given the same amount, showing that to all a certain gift has been given and therefore all will be held responsible for its use. The distribution was made by the sovereign. It was also a purposeful distribution. They were to put their gifts to use during His absence. What the nobleman demanded was faithfulness. The pounds were to be used for the Master, not for the selfish enjoyment of the servant.

III. The Rebellious Citizens (v. 14).

They hated Him and sent messengers after Him, notifying Him of their refusal to be subject to Him. This pictures the unbelief of the Jews after Christ's ascension and their repudiation of His rule. It also pictures the unbelieving world in its hatred and rejection of Christ.

IV. The Accounting (vv. 15-27).

1. Its Certainty. Christ will surely bring everyone to account for the use made of His gifts. He has appointed a day in which He shall judge the world (Acts 17:31).

2. Time Of (v. 15). It will take place when Jesus comes back to earth. At that time He will summon His servants and reckon with them. This will take place when He has received His kingdom. He will receive His kingdom when he asks the Father (Ps. 2:8).

3. Rewards Given for Faithfulness (vv. 16-19). (1) The first report (vv. 16, 17). The pound had gained ten pounds. He did not say, "I have made ten pounds," but "Thy pound hath gained ten pounds." He recognized the Lord's ownership. To this the Lord replied by commendation. He praised him and promoted him. He was made ruler over ten cities. (2) The second report (v. 18). In this case the pound had gained five pounds. He did not get the Lord's commendation for he had not done so well, but he was appointed to a place of rulership over five cities. The reward in each case was proportioned to faithfulness during the Lord's absence. The principle of reward was shown to be that faithfulness in very small things prepares for larger responsibilities.

4. Judgment Upon the Unfaithful (vv. 20-27). (1) His report (vv. 20,21). This report was entirely bad. He had not put the pound to use, but laid it away, throwing the blame upon the Lord. He asserted that the character of the Lord was such as to produce fear. Men are failing today in their service because they have wrong conceptions of Christ. (2) Commendation (vv. 22, 23). The wicked servant is judged out of his own mouth. His excuse increased his guilt. He is called wicked. (3) Stripped of the pound (vv. 24-26). To fail to use one's gifts means to lose them. One of the losses of the next world will be the deprivation of what we have now. (4) Warning (v. 27). Those who reject Christ, refusing to submit to His authority, shall share the same deprivation as those who are [illegible] in His service.

Hypocrisy.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT STAND

Says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Well and Strong

Glens Falls, N. Y.—"For over two months I was so sick I was not able to stand on my feet, and my husband did my housework. The doctor said an operation might be necessary. I read testimonial letters about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began to take it. Before I had finished taking the first bottle I saw what good it was doing me. I am now well and strong, doing all my work for a family of four, all my washing and my sewing, which I think is remarkable, as I had not dared to run my sewing machine, but had done all my sewing by hand. I truly feel that were it not for your medicine I would not be here today as my case seemed very serious."—Mrs. GEORGE W. BURCHELL, Glens Falls, N. Y.

HOUSE PASSES BUDGET BILL

Measure Carrying $1,500,000 for New State Reformatory Is Approved.

SOLDIER BONUS IS PASSED

Goes Over in Lower Chamber by Vote of 79 to 14—Measure Like One Killed in 1921 Except for Referendum.

Indianapolis.—At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in the middle of a routine session in the house of representatives, the administration's appropriation bill, including the $1,500,000 reformatory item, was handed down for third reading and passage and, after an hour of heated debate, passed the house by a margin of two votes. The vote was 53 to 42.

The constitutional majority necessary for passage was 51. Two Democrats, Representative Myron H. Post of Anderson and Representative Harry M. Punshon of Evansville, voted for the bill. One Republican, Perry Johnson of Hamilton county, was absent. The vote was as follows:

For Passage.—Republicans—Addington, Ahlgren, Brown, Carter, Cline, Davis, Day, DuComb, Duffey, Farley, Freeman, Graham, Haines, Hammitt, Harris, Harrison, Hill, Hull, Hurty, Isenberger, Johnson of Monroe, Knapp, Kretchman, Lafuze, Leslie, Love, McCutcheon, Matthews, Miller, Murden, Murray, Myers, Ogden, Phillips, Pittenger, Pulse, Rainey, Rich, Rowbottom, Sherwood, Shull, Smith, Thiel, Traub, Trent, Trowbridge, Updike, Waters, Wedeking, Wysong, Morgan,—51.

Democrats—Post, Punshon.—2.

Against.—Democrats—Bender, Bierly, Butt, Carlos, Clapp, Collins, Core, Custer, Drake, Eickhoff, Fagin, Flock, Gill, Gottschalk, Hall, Hobbs, Hoffman, Holman, Jackson, Johnson of Gibson, Jones, Kenney, Kitch, Larrabee, Leveron, Livingston, Loew, McCloskey, Mabbitt, Nolan, Ortlieb, Perkins, Peterson, Riede, Ringo, Schaefer, Schwartz, Schwing, Shafer, Steilhorn, Thomas, Thursten.—42.

Absent—Johnson of Hamilton, Republican; Powell, Scott, Townsend, Hart, Democrats.

Assail "Cost Plus."

The attack on the bill by the Democrats centered on the section concerning the construction of the reformatory at Pendleton, with an appropriation of $1,500,000. In an amendment introduced by Republican members the reformatory appropriation had been cut from $2,000,000 to $1,500,000. Democrats declared the chief objection was the "cost plus" system provided in the contracts, which the budget bill approved. A bitter fight was made by the Democrats to do away with the "cost plus" system, substitute a straight contract basis and appropriate only $750,000 to carry on the work.

Bonus Bill Passes House.

The house of representatives passed the soldier bonus bill, carrying with it provision for a referendum on the question at the general election in November, 1924. The vote was 79 to 14. The measure now goes to the senate. It applies to veterans of the Spanish-American and World wars.

There was no debate when the bill was handed down by Speaker Raymond C. Morgan on third reading. One amendment was adopted, providing that if any part of the bill is declared unconstitutional the entire act shall become ineffective. The vote was as follows:

For Passage.—Republicans—Addington, Ahlgren, Brown, Carter, Cline, Davis, Day, Duffey, Farley, Freeman, Graham, Haines, Hammitt, Harris, Harrison, Hill, Hurty, Hull, Isenbarger, Knapp, Kretschman, Leslie, Love, McCutcheon, Matthews, Miller, Murden, Murray, Myers, Ogden, Phillips, Pittenger, Pulse, Rainey, Rich, Rowbottom, Sherwood, Shull, Smith, Thiel, Traub, Trent, Updike, Wedeking—44.

Democrats—Bierly, Butt, Clapp, Collins, Core, Eickhoff, Fagin, Flock, Gottschalk, Hall, Hart, Hobbs, Holman, Jackson, Johnson of Gibson, Jones, Kenney, Larrabee, Leveron, Livingston, Lowe, McCloskey, Mabbitt, Nolan, Ortlieb, Post, Punshon, Riede, Ringo, Schwartz, Schwing, Shafer, Steilhorn, Thomas, Thursten—35.

Against — Republicans — Ducomb, Johnson of Monroe, Lafuze, Trowbridge, Waters—5.

Democrats—Bender, Custer, Drake, Gill, Hoffman, Kitch, Perkins, Peterson, Schaefer—9.

Absent—Johnson of Hamilton and Wysong, Republicans; Carlos, Powell, Scott and Townsend, Democrats—6.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Noblesville.—Mrs. Jennie Rickman, colored, has filed suit in the Hamilton Circuit court against her husband, Wilbur Rickman, for a divorce. She bases her suit on the allegation that Rickman is a white man and that she never learned until recently of his claim not to have colored blood in his veins. They have been married 12 years and are the parents of four children. Rickman has a petition pending in the court to have himself declared of the white race.

Terre Haute.—Ora Davis, mayor of Terre Haute; Carl Bauermeister, member of the park board, and D. B. Shrouds, architect, left to inspect the University of Kansas stadium, which, members of the park board believe, will best suit Terre Haute's needs. It seats 32,000 and is U-shaped, with a roof over all the seats and with the space under the seats floored with concrete.

Laporte.—The tract of land bordering Lake Michigan, at Gary which recently was awarded to Mrs. Rusilla Carr by a decision in the Superior court at Michigan City soon will be involved in dispute again, it is said. The rival claimants, heirs of Robert R. Hitt, will file a motion for a new trial, it is said. The value of the land has been estimated at $2,000,000.

English.—The February term of Crawford Circuit court convened. Seven cases have been set for trial, the most important being that of Thomas Green, of Milltown, charged with manslaughter. Green is alleged to have slashed Mont Sutton with a knife, inflicting injuries which caused Sutton's death.

Columbus.—Bartholomew county is now 100 per cent organized in the farm bureau, following the action of Jackson township farmers in a meeting at Waymansville in organizing a local body. Edward Borgman was elected president of the organization; Frank Aldenhagen, secretary, and Benjamin Hoeng, treasurer.

Shelbyville.—Face brick to be used in the construction of the Major hospital in this city will be provided by the Interstate Clay Products Company of Indianapolis, the successful bidder before the city council. The council contracted for 28,000 brick at $2.75 a thousand, to be delivered at once.

Shelbyville.—General Azgapetyan, an Armenian, spoke to the pupils of the high school and addressed a meeting of Shelby county farmers at Flat Rock. He asked the support of the Shelby county farmers in a drive for grain soon to be made for the relief of his countrymen.

Marion.—The Grant County Beekeepers' association was organized. H. E. Schroeder, county agent, is chairman and Mrs. William Ludwig secretary and treasurer. C. O. Yost of the state department of conservation, attended the meeting.

South Bend.—The Northern Indiana Oratorical league, including the high schools of South Bend, Laporte, Michigan City, Mishawaka, Elkhart and Plymouth, has been organized. The league will conduct contests which will start in April.

Wabash.—The county commissioners said that they would not accept the O. H. Mason brick road in Liberty township until repairs had been made. The road was constructed by the Grossnickle Construction company of North Manchester recently.

Fort Wayne.—There are more than 2,500 cases of influenza and grip in Fort Wayne, according to health officers. Hundreds of pupils and 20 regular teachers of the public schools are ill.

Fort Wayne.—Fifty-eight aliens were admitted to citizenship after a hearing before Judge Sol A. Wood in the Allen Circuit court here. A class of 88 had been expected, but many did not put in an appearance.

Martinsville.—Herbert Champlin of this city and Arch Hobbs of Indianapolis organized a new Tribe of Red Men at Nashville, to be known as Klee Tribe No. 580. The new lodge starts with more than 100 charter members.

Huntington.—Post No. 7, American Legion, of this city, is anxious to find Meredith McIlvaine, formerly a resident of this city, and an ex-service man. An important government letter was sent to this city for McIlvaine.

Michigan City.—Mrs. Howard H. Spaulding, Jr., of Chicago and Michigan City, presented a gift of $5,000 to the Michigan City Young Women's Christian association.

Laporte.—The resignation of Albert Knaak, for the last six years probation officer of Laporte county, was announced by P. L. Crumpacker, judge of the Laporte Superior court.

Speaking in Tons.

Billy was eight and good at figures. He had learned the number of ounces in a pound, and pounds in a ton, among other things, and one day he began quizzing his mother about the distances from Indiana to California and to Florida. She said it was about 3,000 miles to California and 2,000 miles to Florida. Wishing to see whether he knew the distance between the two states she asked him, and his reply was "a half a ton."

MADE COURTROOM OF SALOON

Innumerable Good Stories of Character Once Well Known Throughout Western Texas.

Roy Bean was the greatest joke (and one of the greatest tragedies at times) that western Texas had ever known. He was a saloon man. And he "held court" in his saloon and "court" sessions were opened and adjourned at least 20 times each day.

It was not considered "good form" to pull a gun in "Roy Bean's place." For instance: A tourist from the East stepped off the train one day, went into "Bean's Place" and ordered a bottle of beer (ordinarily cost 50 cents) and laid a $20 gold piece on the bar to pay for it. Bean politely pocketed the $20 and when the stranger asked for his "change" and, on being denied, started an argument, oh boy! Roy Bean declared, "court's in session" and fined the man $19.50 for disturbing the peace.—Adventure Magazine.

Pianos for the Japanese.

The piano is becoming a part of the Japanese household equipment, as it has become the favorite instrument with the younger element as well as other instruments from the western countries. The koto, which is the national harp, and the samisen have not been entirely abandoned, but as the younger natives come along they are showing a marked preference for the imported musical instruments. This is of course making a revolution in the character of the Japanese music.

Wise is the man who doesn't know more than he should.

Canada Offers Farmers their chance to get ahead

IF your hard work and investments are not giving you the return they should—if high land prices and high rentals are blocking your road to Success—if you are beginning to see how hard it is to compete with low-priced lands that are equally fertile, you owe it to yourself and your family to get the facts about farm opportunities in Canada. Lower-priced land—lower overhead—lower taxes and operating costs—may be the solution of your problem.

Low-Priced Land—the Secret

Virgin prairie land at $15 to $30 an acre, with long terms, if you want them, close to railways and market towns, schools, churches, telephones, highways—these vast virgin prairies offer you the last great farm opportunity. The fortunes of the United States were built on low-priced land. Those lands are now dear—perhaps beyond your reach—but Canada's lands are still low-priced. You may have missed the first chance—don't miss the last.

Your Own Farm—Prosperity, Happiness

The opportunity that fits your particular financial and family needs awaits you in Canada, and the Canadian Government Agent will help you find it. Land of great and continuous fertility, (Western Canada's wheat crop in 1922 was the biggest in history), land suitable for stock-raising, dairying, mixed farming, fodder crops, market gardening, to suit your experience and your pocketbook. Land that will pay for itself in a few years' crops; hundreds of Canadian farms have produced crops in one year worth more than the price of the land.

Rent If You Prefer—Pay Out of Profits

The Canadian Government has devised a means by which you can "try out" a farm for a year or two before investing, and at the same time increase your capital for the day when you are ready to buy a farm of your own. Many Canadian land owners are willing to rent a portion of their holdings; others are already retiring and will rent on easy terms, in some cases giving an option of purchase. If you have a farm outfit, or the means of buying it, even if your other capital is small, this is your chance to try out the country for yourself. Seeing is believing. See for yourself. A year or two on a rented farm may be the road to success. If you have present holdings which you cannot sell to advantage, hold them another year or two, conditions may improve, but start in Canada at once. Lands are being taken up; nothing is gained by delay.

Taxes Favor the Producing Farmer

Western Canada's tax system encourages farm production and the improvement of property. Taxes on an improved farm are less than on an unimproved one, and there are no taxes at all on the farmer's buildings, machinery, live stock, automobile, crops, or personal effects. Tax laws are designed to aid the farmer in building up a home of his own.

Get the Facts—Costs You Nothing

The Canadian Government maintains Information Bureaus where you can get the facts—dependable Government information—without cost. The officials are not land agents—they have nothing personally to sell—they are salaried officials of the Government of Canada, maintained to be of service to you, without any charge. Let us know something of your position, and receive free book with maps, and the free service of the Canadian Government Agent in your territory; also information how special railway rates can be arranged for a trip of inspection.

'UPSTAIRS' HAD TWO APPEALS

But of Course the First One Was the Stronger in Little Elizabeth's Heart.

Although but four years old, Elizabeth, a minister's daughter, had not been considered two young for careful instruction in spiritual matters and though yet "of the earth earthy," fully appreciated the interest of her parents in her spiritual growth.

One day she was called downstairs from an absorbing morning with her toys by her mother, who insisted that she should not go back until little brother had finished his nap.

"But, mother, may I go and get just one doll?"

"Yes, if you can get it quietly."

A few minutes intermission, the doll is procured and Elizabeth rushes into her mother's arms smiling radiantly.

"Mother," she says, "every time I go upstairs the Lord comes into my heart."

With husky voice and moist eyes the mother clasps her child in her arms.

"Now, mother," said Elizabeth, "may I go upstairs and play?"—Judge.

Small Boy Had Changed His Shoes, as Directed, Though With Little Better Results.

The favorite son was going to church with his mother and older brother when the discovery was suddenly made that he had on one of his own shoes and one of a pair belonging to his brother. His mother impressed upon him the fact that he ought to have been more careful; that he should wear his own things, and should refrain from using those of another.

The favorite son agreed to all this and returned meekly to the house. Mother and brother waited for him to change his shoes. In a few minutes he was back with mates. The walk to church was resumed and the destination reached just as the service started.

Mother and the two boys took a seat well forward, the minister was making some announcements, and the church seemed particularly quiet. Suddenly came a loud whisper from the favorite son.

"Gosh!" he said, "I got both of Bob's shoes on now. I changed the wrong one!"

Be sincere, but never mind expressing an opinion on everything.

Has your mealtime drink said "Pay up!"

A GOOD many people have had that message from coffee or tea after the drug, caffeine, has had its effect upon nerves or digestion.

Frequently the message comes at night, when nerves won't quiet down and sleep won't come, after the dinner cup of coffee.

There's no unfriendly aftermath from that good cereal beverage, Postum.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXVII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1923 No. 9

Dr. Mimmick Comes To St. Joe

St. Joe and vicinity has certainly been handicapped for medical assistance this winter, especially since Dr. Sheffer has been unable to make any calls or even be at his office a part of the time.

But as a relief to the situation Dr. Mimmick of Grabill, moved here on Wednesday of this week and will set up a practice at once. Dr. Mimmick came here last week and made arrangements for a house. He comes highly recommended by friends at Grabill, and we know that his services will be appreciated here.

In Memoriam

With a heavy heart, we the ladies of the L. L. C. drop a tear to the memory of our efficient member and co-worker, Mrs. Ella Patterson. She was one of Nature's Noble women in its truest sense. Her's was the soul of honor and friends and friendships were sacred to her. It is something to have lived. It is more to have lived for others. We realize her place in our circle can never be filled. To the bereaved family we extend our heartfelt sympathy and when they have drained the cup of sorrow may the peace that passeth all understanding come to them from One who cares for each little sorrow that falls.

Taken to Garrett Hospital

Frank Terman who has been declining in health for several months past was taken to the Garrett hospital Tuesday morning where he will receive treatment. The doctors have admitted that nothing short of an operation would set him on the mend, but on account of the weak condition of his heart it would be necessary for him to have the best of treatment to build that member up to the point when he could stand an operation. Mr. Terman's friends wish him speedy recovery.

Her Life's Record Closed

With sad hearts, we, the members of the W. C. T. U., chronicle the death of our beloved sister and co-worker, Ella Patterson. We realize her place in our circle can never be filled, for she possessed a kind and generous heart, a sunny and unselfish nature, always careful to be just in her decisions. Her lovely character had its benign influence and years shall roll into the gulf of time, before sweet recollection of our departed sister shall fade from our memories. To the bereaved family, we extend extend our sympathy, in your sorrow we commend you, to him whose wisdom is infinite and whose love is as the mighty deep.

E. Saylor vs H. Shroyer

According to a decision rendered in the court of T. C. Ford, justice of the peace, in Auburn Monday afternoon, Henry W. Shroyer of Concord township, would have been money ahead had he paid the market price for eighteen and a half bushels of seed wheat in May, 1917.

The suit, which was instituted by Elijah Saylor of Concord township, arose over a controversy between the two men about a difference in the price of seed wheat, and was venued from the court of Merritt Baker, justice of the peace in Concord township.

According to Saylor's testimony, Shroyer bought eighteen and a half bushels of seed wheat from him in 1916. Saylor set no price on this wheat at the time although the market price was then $1.42 a bushel. Shroyer paid $10 and when he desired to pay the balance, which was in May, 1917, Saylor asked the market price of the wheat at this later date. Wheat had advanced from $1.42 to $2.75 a bushel.

Shroyer then notified Saylor that he had counter claims against him for various things such as stacking straw, pasturing his cattle and sheep and exchanging work. He also claimed Saylor bought some posts from him for $3.05 and entered a specific claim for $2 in payment of some work.

The eighteen and a half bushels of wheat at $2.75 amounted to $50.88. Justice Ford, in rendering a decision, decided to deduct the $10 payment together with the claims of $3.05 and $2 and render a judgment in favor of Saylor for the balance, $35.8 plus the costs in the action amounting to $6.20.

M. P. Church to have Young People's Convention

The Methodist Protestant church of St. Joe is to have the honor of entertaining the Young People's Convention of the Indiana Conference which will be held here May 8 and 9 at the Methodist church.

A program is being planned that will include many inseresting features. Dr. Harlan H. Feeman, President of Adrian College, Adrian Mich., is scheduled to address the convention. Lyman E. Davis, editor of the Methodist Recorder, will come to St Joe from Pittsburgh for a part in the program.

It is interesting to note that the first Young People's Society of Indiana was organized at Concord with Mrs. Florence Buchanan as president. Mrs. Buchanan is to give an interesting account of the early young people's work.

Rev. Clyde H. Havens leaves Thursday for Marion, Indiana, to assist in arranging more definitely the convention program.

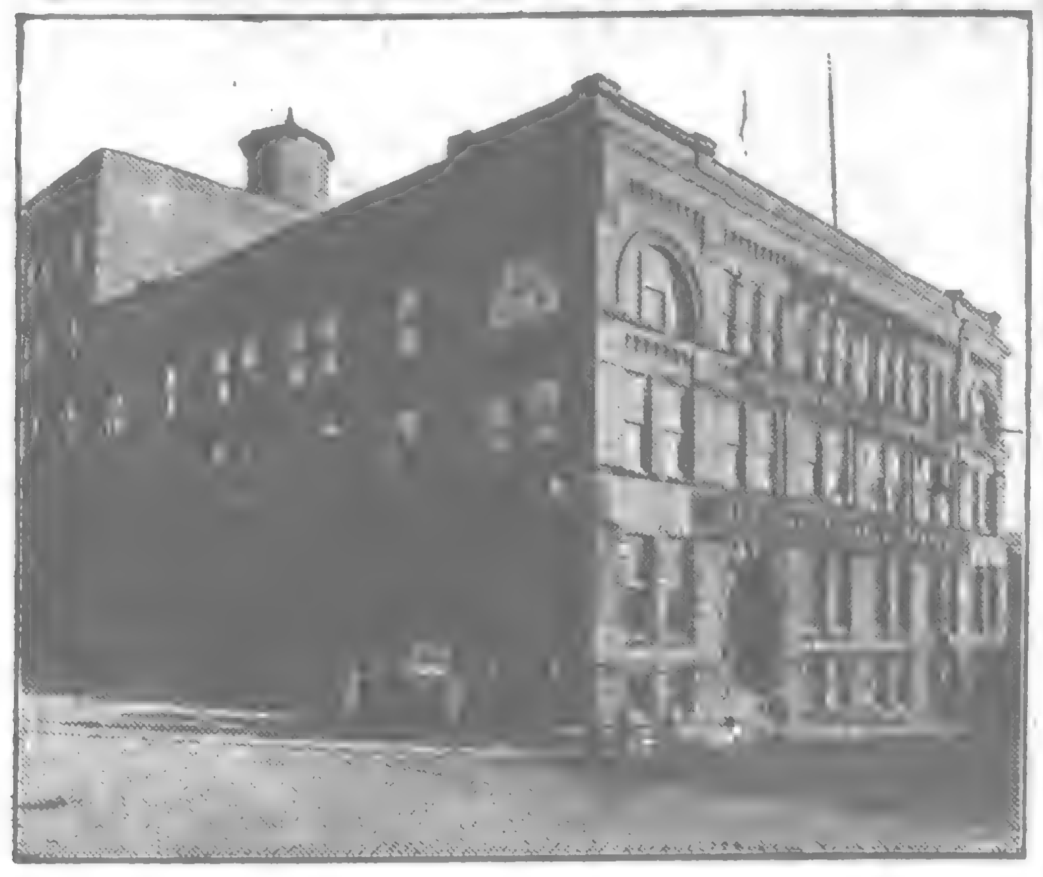
American Farm Bureau



Warehouse of the West Virginia Farm Bureau Federation, Where West Virginia's First Wool Pool Was Stored.

More than $10,000 was earned for the Farm Bureau members in West Virginia by the wool pool this year, as indicated by the reports of the sale of the wool which was made at Clarksburg, December 22. The gross sale price on approximately 70,000 pounds was 51.65 cents f. o. b. Clarksburg, which means a net price to the growers of 48.65 cents on the average.

The average general price for wool sold to dealers in West Virginia this year was between 30 and 35 cents. Very little wool was sold above 40 cents. Taking 35 cents as an average price this means profit of almost 14 cents per pound to the man who pooled his wool.

If the 3,000,000 pounds of wool produced in West Virginia this year had all been handled through the wool pool it would have brought the farmers of the state the neat profit of more than $400,000 above what they received on local markets.

Everywhere there has been expressed the greatest satisfaction over the results of the sale. Beyond doubt the wool pool as a whole is the most successful that has ever been made in the state and will be repeated again next year.

MINNESOTA COW NOW AMERICA'S CHAMPION

May Walker Ollie Homestead Produced 1,218.59 Pounds of Butterfat in 1922.

With a production of 1,218.59 pounds of butterfat during the past year, May Walker Ollie Homestead, a Holstein, is America's new champion butter producing cow over all breeds and ages. She is owned by the Minnesota Holstein company of Austin, Minnesota.

During the year, the new champion produced 31,610.6 pounds of milk having a butterfat test of 3.85 pounds. Stacked up on the consumers' back porch this record production would mean 1,523 pound packages of butter or 15,800 quart bottles of milk. The average production of all dairy cows in the United States is 4,000 pounds milk and 160 pounds butterfat, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

The new champion is a seven-year-old daughter of Piebe Laura Ollie Homestead King and May Walker of Arden, both of whom are of high-producing and show-winning ancestry. Her weight, 1,765 pounds, combined with dairy temperament and refinement also marks her as an excellent type of dairy cow.

May Walker Ollie Homestead, New American Butter Producer.

Her grain ration during this test consisted of bran, ground oats, distillers' grains, hominy, oil meal, gluten and cottonseed with salt and a limited amount of mineral compounds. She also received liberal amounts of alfalfa hay and, during the latter part of her test, corn ensilage and beets.

The uniformity of May Ollie Homestead's production during her entire yearly test period is an outstanding feature of her record. In no one calendar month did she produce less than 80 pounds butterfat or 2,000 pounds milk, nor did she produce over 3,000 pounds milk in any month. She carried a calf almost six months of her test period.

The Holstein-Friesian association of America recently authorized a budget of $60,000 for advertising both cattle and milk. It was stated by members of the executive committee that the time has come for dairy farmers to spend part of their energy in the market and sales end of their business.

WOOL GROWERS PLAN CO-OPERATIVE SALE

Producers Aim to Sell Larger Amount During Coming Season Than Last Year.

Ohio wool growers are making plans for co-operative sale of a larger amount of Ohio produced wool the coming season than was sent to market through this channel during the past year, according to Mark J. Smith, wool marketing director of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation. Preparations for handling include strengthening of county arrangements for gathering together consignments and shipping to the Columbus warehouse of the Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' association.

Practically all of the important wool producing counties in northern and western Ohio have been covered by representatives of either the Wool Growers' association or the Farm Bureau federation, according to Mr. Smith. In these counties groups of wool growers have been called together and have appointed at least one local man in the county to put things in shape for proper handling of the wool.

Contracts are being signed by wool producers in these territories at the present time to make possible the best arrangements between the individual producers and the state sales agency. Similar work is now going forward in the northeastern part of the state.

Leaders in the group are expecting to handle in the neighborhood of four million pounds of wool during the coming season. They base this prediction on the amount of wool already signed to go through the co-operative warehouse and the interest shown in co-operative marketing. Last year the total figure reached 2,350,000 pounds which was sold at an average price of 44 cents, including all grades.

CLAY COUNTY WOMEN'S WORK

Interest Being Aroused by Efforts of Ruth G. English, Home Demonstration Agent.

Through the efforts of Ruth G. English, home demonstration agent for Clay county, Iowa, great interest is being aroused in the county among farm women in farm bureau work. Mrs. C. L. At a recent meeting the women voted to hold a county-wide nutrition campaign, to continue the hot school lunch, millinery training school, and many other important lines of work in Clay county for the coming year. Girls' club work was given special attention.

BULLETIN ON CEMENT ROADS

Publication Prepared by Engineers of Public Roads Bureau Discusses Many Subjects.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Portland Cement Concrete Roads," a new publication prepared by the bureau of public roads, has been issued as Bulletin 1077 of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The bulletin is the work of James T. Voshell and R. E. Toms, engineers of the bureau, who have been in charge of a large amount of federal-aid road construction and who have had an opportunity of inspecting concrete road construction under a wide variety of conditions.

The subjects discussed are materials used, proportioning, design, construction, organization and equipment, capital required, cost, maintenance and resurfacing.

Particular attention is given to width of pavement on tangents and curves, transition curves and superelevation. Practical field methods are described and tables and charts given of value to field engineers.

Contractors will be interested in the pages describing operations with various kinds of equipment accompanied by diagrams illustrating organization and plant layout. They will also find use for the table of quantities of materials per mile of pavement for various widths and mixes, data for use in computing the size of engine for pumping water, cost of concrete roads in all sections of the country and a list of the items to be taken into account in estimating costs.

A Cement Road Through the Hills of West Virginia.

On the whole the bulletin is as complete a discussion of the practical and technical details of concrete road construction as could be expected in a publication of limited size. Copies may be had free upon application to the department at Washington.

FIND DEFECTS IN PAVEMENT

Examination Being Made of Asphalt and Bituminous Concrete for Cause of Spots.

Samples of sheet asphalt paving from five large cities are being examined in the laboratory of the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, to determine, if possible, the cause of the formation of bad spots and waves, or corrugations. A few samples of bituminous concrete are also being examined. The samples have been cut both from good and bad sections of the same paving job and are examined for appearance of sample, grading of aggregate, and quantity and characteristics of asphalt.

Although a separate investigation from the traffic test on the circular track made of sections of bituminous concrete it is thought that each investigation may yield information helpful to the other.

PROBABLE INCREASE IN SPRING PIGS IS INDICATED BY SURVEY

Hog Yards Must Be Kept as Clean as Possible and Above All Must Be Well Drained.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The number of sows bred to farrow during the first six months of 1923 will be 18 per cent more than the number of sows which actually farrowed in the spring of 1922, provided farmers carry out their intentions as indicated in the December 1, 1922, pig survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture. For the 11 corn belt states the survey shows an intention to breed 15.6 per cent more sows than a year ago. Most of the southern states show an actual decrease in prospect for 1923.

Increase in Corn Belt.

The probable increase in farrowings in the spring of 1923 over 1922 compares with an increase of 22.8 per cent in the spring of 1922 over 1921 in the 11 corn belt states. The spring pig crop of 1922 in the southern states was about the same as in 1921. Comparisons for other states are not available.

Whether or not the expressed intentions of farmers with regard to the number of sows to be bred to farrow next spring will be carried out will depend largely on the relative prices of hogs and corn, the department says.

An actual increase of 16 per cent in the number of spring pigs in 1922 over 1921 is shown in the December survey as compared with the estimated increase of 14.5 per cent shown in the May survey. The number of pigs saved per litter up to July 1, 1922, in the corn belt states is placed at 5.8 as compared with 5.7 saved up to May 1. This increase in number of pigs saved accounts for the revised estimate in the number of spring pigs in 1922, the department says.

The number of litters farrowed in the United States in the fall of 1922 shows an increase of 18.6 per cent over the fall of 1921. An increase of 27.8 per cent is shown for the 11 corn belt states as compared with an intended increase in these states of 49 per cent in the number of sows to be bred for fall farrowing, as reported last May. The survey shows that in the corn belt states 6.1 pigs per litter were saved in the fall of 1922 as compared with 5.9 pigs saved from the 1921 fall litters. For the entire United States a saving of 6.1 pigs per litter in the fall of 1922 as compared with 6 pigs per litter in 1921 is shown.

The decrease in actual number of pigs produced last fall as compared with intentions of farmers the preceding May is attributed to the decline in hog prices, increased corn prices, increased losses from hog cholera and other diseases, and to the publicity given the results of the spring pig survey made by the Department of Agriculture. Losses from hog cholera and other diseases in the 11 corn belt states for the year show an increase of 22.6 per cent over losses in 1921.

Replies to Questionnaires.

The department received for this report more than 200,000 replies to questionnaires distributed and gathered by rural mail carriers in all sections of the United States where pigs are produced for market. The survey is but the second of its kind that has been made and there has not yet been opportunity to check any differences that may exist between the figures shown for the farms reporting and those for all farms. It is pointed out, however, that the forecast made last spring of an increase of 14.5 per cent in the number of spring pigs over the preceding year is being borne out by the increased volume of receipts at the principal stockyards during the past three months. The surveys also show that the production of fall pigs in proportion to spring pigs has increased materially during the past two years, thus making for a more stabilized supply of pigs throughout the year.

Prices Advanced.

The department points out that increased production does not necessarily mean an over-supply or decline in prices. Total receipts of hogs at all public stockyards during the first 11 months of 1922 were 5 per cent more than in 1921. During the last four months of 1922 the increase totaled nearly 20 per cent. The number of hogs slaughtered under federal inspection during the same period was 7.7 per cent more than in 1921 and the cold storage holdings of pork and lard resulting from this slaughter shows an increase of 461,246,000 pounds for the 11 months. Despite these increases cold storage holdings of pork and lard averaged considerably less than during 1921, and prices showed a substantial advance over 1921. The department's explanation for this situation is that improved industrial and economic conditions resulted in an increased consumptive demand and a much freer, current movement of pork and lard into trade channels.

Unfavorable Results Obtained in Many Investigations.

Survey Made in Various States Showed That Rodents and Their Depredations Were Serious Problem to Public.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Special investigations regarding the effectiveness of the various rat viruses on the market were recently made by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with the experiment station of the North Dakota Agricultural college and the bureau of animal industry of the department. In Utah more than 125,000 people co-operated in a state-wide rat campaign, working largely through the schools. There were distributed 15,000 farmers' bulletins on rats, 25,000 circulars giving directions for trapping, and 20,000 circulars containing specific instructions on methods of control; 6,000 students received special demonstrations, 87,000 posters were made in the schools, 30,000 essays were written on the subject, 29,000 educational questionnaires were circulated, and 1,250 pounds of barium carbonate were used in poisoned baits. Iowa carried on a similar campaign. Great numbers of rats were destroyed and many buildings were rat-proofed as a result.

SORT VEGETABLES IN STORE

It Often Pays to Remove Those That Have Started to Decay Except Sweet Potatoes.

Warming the storage bin where sweet potatoes are kept will help to check rot. It often pays to sort vegetables in storage to remove those that have started to decay, but if sweet potatoes are rotting in the bin culling is not advisable, because it is difficult to handle the tubers without bruising and breaking the skin, which allows black rot germs to enter.

BUDGET BILL IS NOW $17,789,412

Total of $2,314,095 Is Added by Senate Committee of Whole.

TWO FACTIONS IN FARM BLOC

"Dirt" Variety of Legislators Quit Meetings in Statehouse Over Gasoline Tax—Senate Hangs to County Unit Bill.

Indianapolis.—Appropriations totaling $2,314,095.83 had been added to the state budget bill when the Indiana senate resolved itself out of a committee of the whole after spending a day and a half considering amendments presented by the senate finance committee and others. The bill as it now stands calls for an appropriation of $17,789,412.09.

Of the $2,314,095.83 increase over the amount in the bill when it was passed by the house, $161,175.83 was added at Wednesday's session and the remainder was added Tuesday, when the senate committee, among other things, accepted the $2,000,000 reformatory appropriation requested by Governor McCray.

Farm Bloc Splits.

A split in the legislative "farm bloc" resulted in the announcement that further meetings of farmer members of the legislature in the statehouse will be discontinued and that meetings of "dirt" farmers only will be held in the Hotel English. The break followed a meeting of the "dirt" farmers in the hotel at which the proposed administration gasoline tax was condemned.

At the same time it was said John G. Brown, ex-president of Indiana Federation of Farmers' Associations, and one of the most active of the farmer lobbyists in favor of the gasoline tax, had gone to Chicago for an indefinite period on business. Mr. Brown was said to be close to Governor McCray and was frequently in conference with him.

County Unit Bill Survives.

Another attempt to kill the administration's county unit bill failed when the Indiana senate, by a vote of 28 to 17, refused to postpone indefinitely further consideration of the measure. Two similar attempts to kill the bill were made last week, but each failed through the vote of Lieutenant Governor Branc hin breaking a tie.

Governor for Gas-Tax Bill.

Reduction of more than $1,000,000 in the general property tax collected for road construction and distribution of approximately $500,000 yearly among the counties of the state would be effected by passage of the Ahlgren administration gasoline tax bill, which is being considered by the house committee on judiciary A, Governor McCray said. The present general tax levy for the upkeep and building of roads in the state is 8 cents on each $100 of taxable property. This could be reduced to 1 cent, at the same time giving the state an increased revenue, allowing much of the expense of building and repairing roads to be borne by the automobile owners throughout the state and by outsiders who pass through Indiana.

No Tax Boost.

Following the issuance of a statement by Senator Arthur R. Baxter, chairman of the finance committee, charging the Democrats with deliberately garbling facts and pursuing a program of obstruction, Governor McCray declared that, notwithstanding statements issued by the minority, the state tax rae of Indiana will not be increased and there wil not be a dollar of indebtedness in any fund at the close of his admlistration.

Interviewed after the issuance of the Baxter statement, Governor McCray declared:

"The state tax rate will not be increased and every state fund, including the general fund, will have a net balance to its credit at the close of my administration.

Expenses Total $24,566,317.

"The absurdity and untruthfulness is proved by its own terms in representing to the people of Indiana that the expenditures of the state government at the close of this session of the legislature will have reached $40,000,000 a year. The simple truth is that the report of the budget commission shows a total estimated expenditure for the year ending September 30 [illegible], of $24,566,317, of which $14,[illegible] will be raised by direct taxes and the balance raised from fees collected by the state in the insurance and automobile departments and from the federal government. The budget report shows that at the end of the fiscal year that the state will have a balance of $2,[illegible],[illegible] in all funds. In short, the total annual expenditures of the state will be approximately [illegible] of all taxes collected in Indiana."

INDIANA BREVITIES

Indianapolis.—Charles W. Miller, ex-attorney general of Indiana and ex-United States district attorney, was found dead in a room in the Hotel English by detectives who had been called upon to conduct a search since he dropped out of sight. He had taken his life by cutting his throat with a razor and drinking a large quantity of poison, Coroner Paul F. Robinson said. Friends attributed Mr. Miller's act to a nervous breakdown resulting from overwork.

South Bend.—Changing conditions of the times is the reason advanced by the St. Joseph county board of education in abolishing commencement exercises for eighth grade students in the country schools. When the custom was started thirty-eight years ago, it was explained, that it was the exceptional child who completed that grade, now children of twelve and thirteen have an ambition to take a high school course instead of going into the field of labor.

Tipton.—The Liberty township farmers' institute at Sharpsville closed. Howard Harper was elected chairman of the association; Fred James, vice chairman, and Miss Margaret Hoffman, secretary-treasurer. The speakers were Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley of Liberty, state president of the W. C. T. U.; H. M. Widney of St. Joe, Mich., widely known orchard man, and M. J. Briggs, representing the Indiana Federation of Farmers' associations.

Columbus—Dr. William T. Carmichael of Walesboro, the oldest practicing physician in Bartholomew county, celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday at Columbus. He has practiced medicine continuously for forty years. Dr. Carmichael settled in this country in 1885. Before coming here he practiced for a time in Indianapolis and in Brown county.

Laporte.—With a view of establishing, if possible, a lower fire insurance rate in Laporte, members of the board of directors of the Laporte chamber of commerce voted to take action in bringing about a resurvey of properties. A meeting of all fire insurance agents in the city will be held, at which the matter will be discussed and a course of action outlined.

Salem.—Under the auspices of the extension division of Indiana university, a program for community health week will be given. Elwood E. Brooks, principal of the high school, is the director. The work is in charge of Miss Hazel Holder and Miss Edna Gabriel, graduate nurses, and Dr. E. O. Davis, of the university faculty.

Salem.—Thomas Meno of Bedford, charged with violation of the prohibition laws and tried in the Washington Circuit court, was found guilty by a jury, which fixed his penalty at $500 fine and 180 days at the Indiana state farm. An appeal was taken to the Supreme court and an appeal bond of $4,500 was filed by Meno.

Wabash.—The fifteenth annual banquet of the Wabash County Horsethief Detective association was held. Seventy-five new members were added. The association has been called on only once in the last five years to assist in a search for a horsethief. It is now devoting its chief efforts to capture automobile thieves.

Connersville.—Officers have been named by the Chamber of Commerce Boy Band as follows: James Nash, president; Glen Johnson, vice president; John Welleman, secretary; Almon A. Hall, treasurer; Harold Gentle, librarian, and John J. McDonough, business manager. The band was organized in 1914.

Laporte.—Due to the fact that the operating expenses have increased, the trustees of the Ruth C. Sabin Home, a home for aged women, may be forced to raise the admission fee to $2,000, instead of the sum of $1,000, now required. The committee in charge of the home has issued a call for outside aid.

Terre Haute—Three trustees were named by the Terre Haute police department for the police pension board, Harvey Jones, captain, and George McLaughlin, traffic officer, were elected to serve terms of three years, and Clem Ring, desk sergeant, was elected to serve a term of one year.

Connersville—L. B. Mrs. Banes Says Tanlac Ended Indigestion, Sourness and Palpitations and Made Labors Light.

"Tanlac has helped me so much I wish everyone suffering like I did would follow my suggestion to use it," said Mrs. Sadie Banes, 2037 Washington St., Kansas City, Mo., the other day.

"Before I took Tanlac my appetite was so poor it seemed beyond cultivation, and the little I managed to eat gave me indigestion and caused awful sourness and palpitation. I was simply miserable from nervous headaches, dizziness and knife-like pains in my back, always slept poorly, and felt so bad that at times I just had to quit my housework and lie down.

"Tanlac was so well suited to my case that it has only taken three bottles, half of the full treatment, to restore me to perfect health. It makes me so happy to be without an ache, pain or trouble of any kind that I go about my work humming and singing. I just can't help rejoicing over what Tanlac has done for me."

SURELY CASE OF DISABILITY

But Irishman's Claim for Accident Compensation Didn't Seem to Be Backed by Logic.

A dejected looking Irishman entered the office of an accident insurance company and, handing a soiled and crumpled paper to the clerk in charge, said: "There's me policy, and it's mesilf wants it paid up this day."

CHILDLESS HOMES MADE HAPPY

Presence of Little Ones a Great Blessing

Four Interesting Letters

Cortland, N. Y.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was weak and wanted to become strong and have a child. My husband read about it in the 'Cortland Standard' and thought it might help me. It certainly did for I now have a lovely boy fifteen months old who weighs forty pounds. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my friends and you can certainly use my testimonial in your little books and in the newspapers, as it might help to make some other childless home happy by the presence of little ones as it has done mine."—Mrs. CLAUDE P. CANFIELD, 10 Salisbury St., Cortland, N. Y.

A Message to Mothers

Hamilton, Ohio.—"I have known about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound since girlhood, having taken it when I was younger and suffering from a weakness and backache. Lately I have taken it again to strengthen me before the birth of my child, as I was troubled with pains in my back and a lifeless, weak feeling. I think if mothers would only take your wonderful medicine they would not dread childbirth as they do. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to every woman."—Mrs. Jos. FALCOIN, JR., 552 S. 11th Street, Hamilton, Ohio.

St. Louis, Mo.—"I want to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me seven years ago. I was run down and had a weakness such as women often have. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and after being married sixteen years became the mother of a sweet little girl. I now have four lovely children—three fine boys and the little girl six years old. I had longed for children all the while and wept many a day and envied every woman with a child. I was 36 years old when my first baby was born. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman who is ailing with female weakness."—Mrs. J. NAUMANN, 1517 Benton St., St. Louis, Mo.

Was Weak and Run Down

St. Louis, Mo.—"My mother took Lydia E. I took it and got along fine and now I have three girls. So you know why I keep the Compound in the house. I am a well woman and do my work and sewing too."—Mrs. JULIUS HARTMAN, 2501 W. Find Ancient Mine Workings.

A discovery of considerable archeological interest has been made 30 miles north of the Leeuwpoort tin mines in the Transvaal, near the Bechuanaland border. A prospector unearthed what apparently is a portion of an ancient smelting plant and a quantity of slag, which is being submitted to expert examination. Nearby were old workings and a substantial body of ore containing whitish metal, apparently platinum or molybdenum. Mining engineers have left for the scene of the discovery.—London Times.

Hoosier Boy and Sister Reap Golden Harvest From "God's Acre"

HARRY BELL, JR., AND BERNICE BELL AND QUEEN

It is a far cry from the Bible lands of the Near East to the abundant grain crib of the Indiana farmer but pitiful little voices, weak with hunger, are again calling—calling for our wholesome, life-giving corn that last winter saved so many young lives.

Again the generous agriculturists are asked to duplicate the corn quota of last year—100,000 bushels. Many other states are busy assembling corn at elevators, to be shipped to mills, ground into grits, then hurried on the life-saving errand across the sea. The first Indiana contribution is in the proceeds from a Scott county farm—from "God's Acre." A boy and girl—Harry Bell, Jr., and his little sister, Bernice, children of Rev. H. A. Bell, pastor and farmer of Scottsburg, are the donors.

When Harry Bell, 15 years old, was told by his father last spring that he could cultivate an acre of corn to help the children of the Near East, the boy was enthused. They called the ground "God's Acre." The corn grew and flourished and produced many bushels of golden ears.

Appeal of G. I. Christie

In broadcasting the appeal for 100,000 bushels, Prof. G. I. Christie, chairman of the Near East Relief grain committee, has the notion that farmers in giving of their abundance of corn will accomplish a two-fold purpose—feed thousands of hungry mouths and at the same time create a demand for American grain in commercial centers of the Near East. Well-known men associated with Mr. Christie in the appeal are W. H. Settle, president Indiana farm bureau; C. B. Riley, secretary Grain Dealers' Association; E. G. McCullum, president Farmers' Grain Dealers' Association; C. E. Troyer, president of Corn Growers; I. Newt Brown, William M. Jones, State Board of Agriculture; Geo. C. Bryant, crop report service; Carl W. Sims, Millers' Association; Everett McClure, Aurora; Prof. R. A. Ogg, Greencastle.

County grain committees are planned with agricultural agents in charge. At the request of Prof. Christie, Russell G. East, Shelby county agent, will serve as director of the grain appeal. Ocean transportation is furnished free by American Shipping board from the port of New Orleans. Railroads will move grain to the mills and seaport without expense. Elevator operators volunteer to handle the grain donations free.

Farmers May Give Cash

Farmers who desire to give cash instead of corn may do so and the money will be used to buy grain. At headquarters of the grain committee, 528 Peoples Bank building, Indianapolis, cablegrams tell of the need of corn grits in the war-torn Near East. The tragedy of Smyrna, failure of Allies at the Lausanne conference to put hope in the hearts of Christian refugees, have added to the already grave orphan problem of Near East Relief until the task is a staggering one and the farmer is asked to aid. The grain committee says to the farmer:

"To supplement the generous cash gifts chiefly from city residents and to fill out the quota necessary for Indiana to care for 7,000 orphans, we are asking the farmers to duplicate their corn gift of last year. It was a splendid response then and we have faith to believe that understanding the great need they will do it again."

A heart-gripping motion picture drama, "Uncle America Sees it Through," will be shown in as many country districts as possible during February. It is a sermon in three reels that reveals the bleeding soul of Christian Armenia.

Obituary

Henry Markle was born in Piqua County, Ohio, May 9, 1839. and died February 24, 1923, at his home in Spencerville, Indiana, aged 83 years, 9 months and 15 days. He came to Indiana about 75 years ago and has been in and near this community since.

He was patriotic in his make-up, and when the call came for volunteers to fight for his country in 1861 he at once made preparations to go, and he enlisted at Hamilton, Ohio. Company D was organized at Maysville, September 20, 1861 and Franklin H. Cosgrove was elected captain. On November 22, 1861, this company, of which Henry Markle was a member, was mustered into service as a part of the 44th Indiana volenteers. The subject of this sketch was a good and faithful soldier and took part in the battles, Fort Henry, Donaldson, Island No. 10, Pittsburgh Landing and Shiloh, in. Grant's army. He was disabled August 14, 1862 and spent a long time in hospitals, especially Fort Henry and Benjamin Harrison. He was mustered out of the service September 8, 1864 at Chattanooga. Tennessee. He was a member of the Post, attending the reunions and doing all in his power for his country.

On May 1, 1866 he was married to Catherine Zehner and to this union one child, a daughter, Irene, was born, who survives her father. Besides the wife there are also 9 living grandchildren one having died. Also there are 13 living great grandchildren and 2 dead. Truly many rise up to call him blessed. Besides the above he is survived by 1 brother, Jerry, and 2 half-brothers, Samuel and Daniel, and 1 half sister, Matilda Crick. 1 brother, Jacob, and 2 sisters, Re- [illegible]

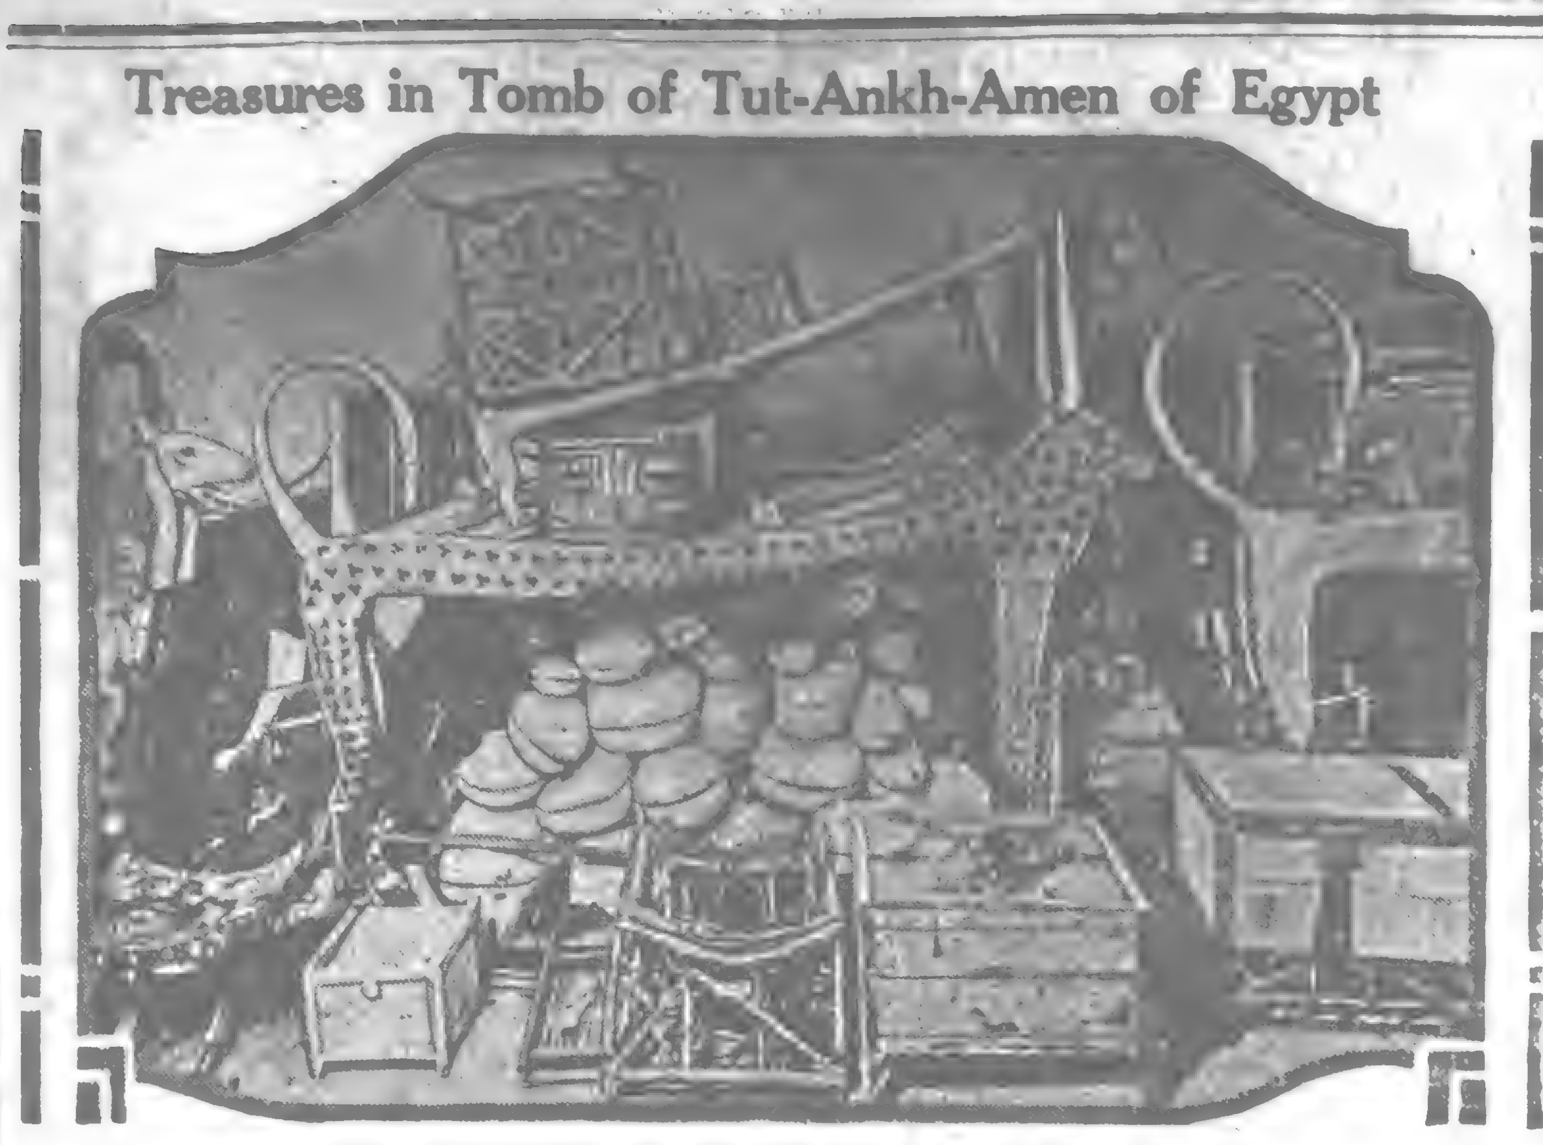
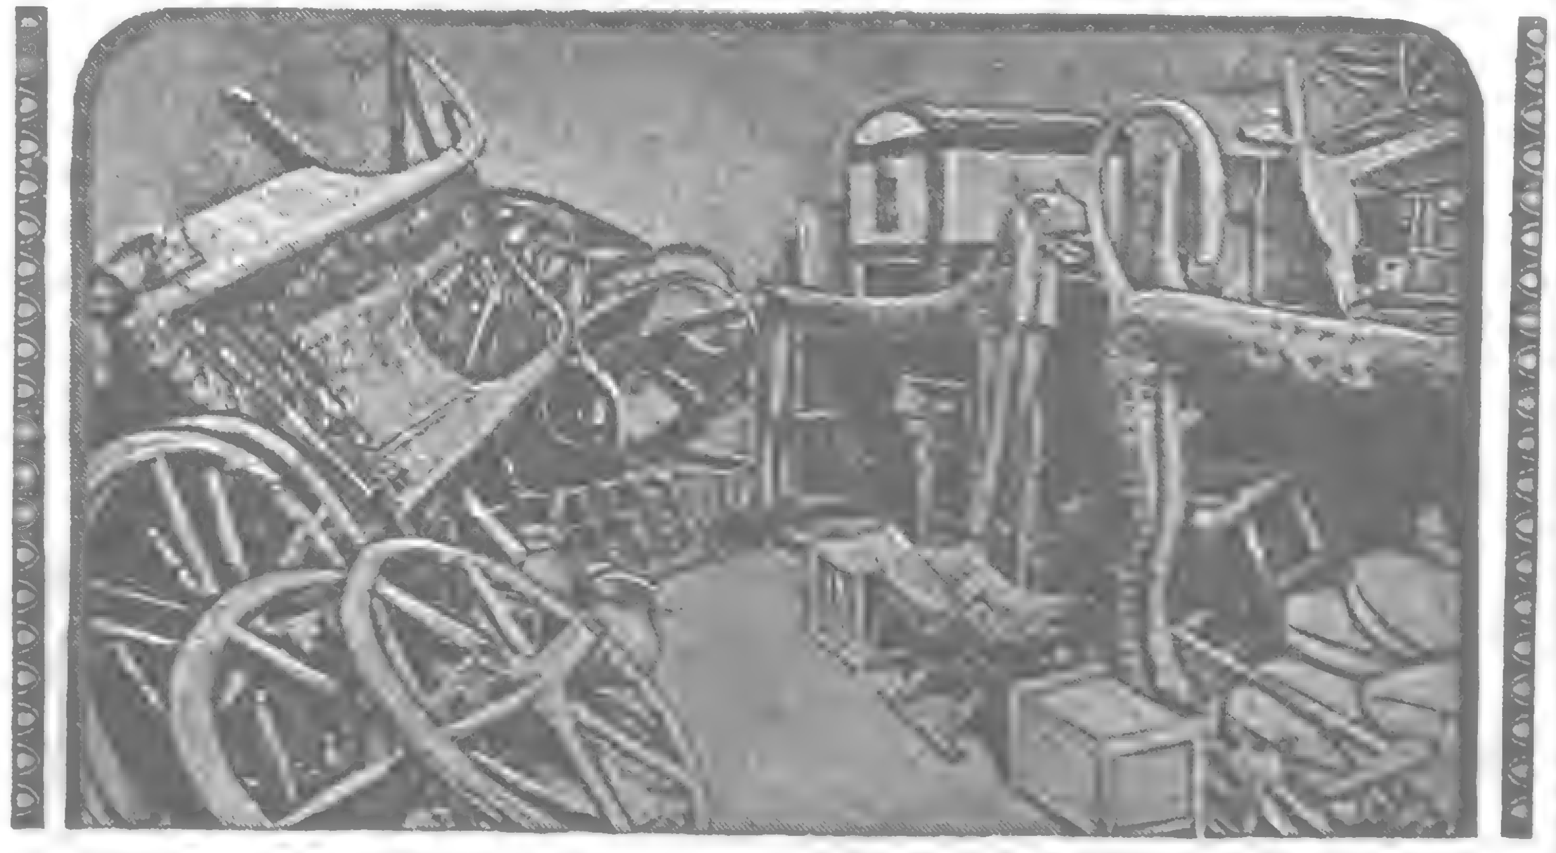
Treasures in Tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen of Egypt



London Times—New York Times copyright by arrangement with Earl of Carnarvon.

Opening of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, the "heretic" king of the Eighteenth Egyptian dynasty, at Luxor, has revealed an unexampled storehouse of treasures. This photograph gives a view of the antechamber looking west. Among the articles shown are a box containing the king's undergarments and other things; a large gilt couch with supports in the form of lions; a couch with supports in the form of "hat-hor" cows; numerous boxes containing mummified meat; a painted red box containing jewelry and ornaments; a papyrus rush-work stool, much decayed; the king's stool; another couch; four alabaster unguent vases of unique type and beauty; a semi-circular veneered box having minute detail of inlaid ivory.

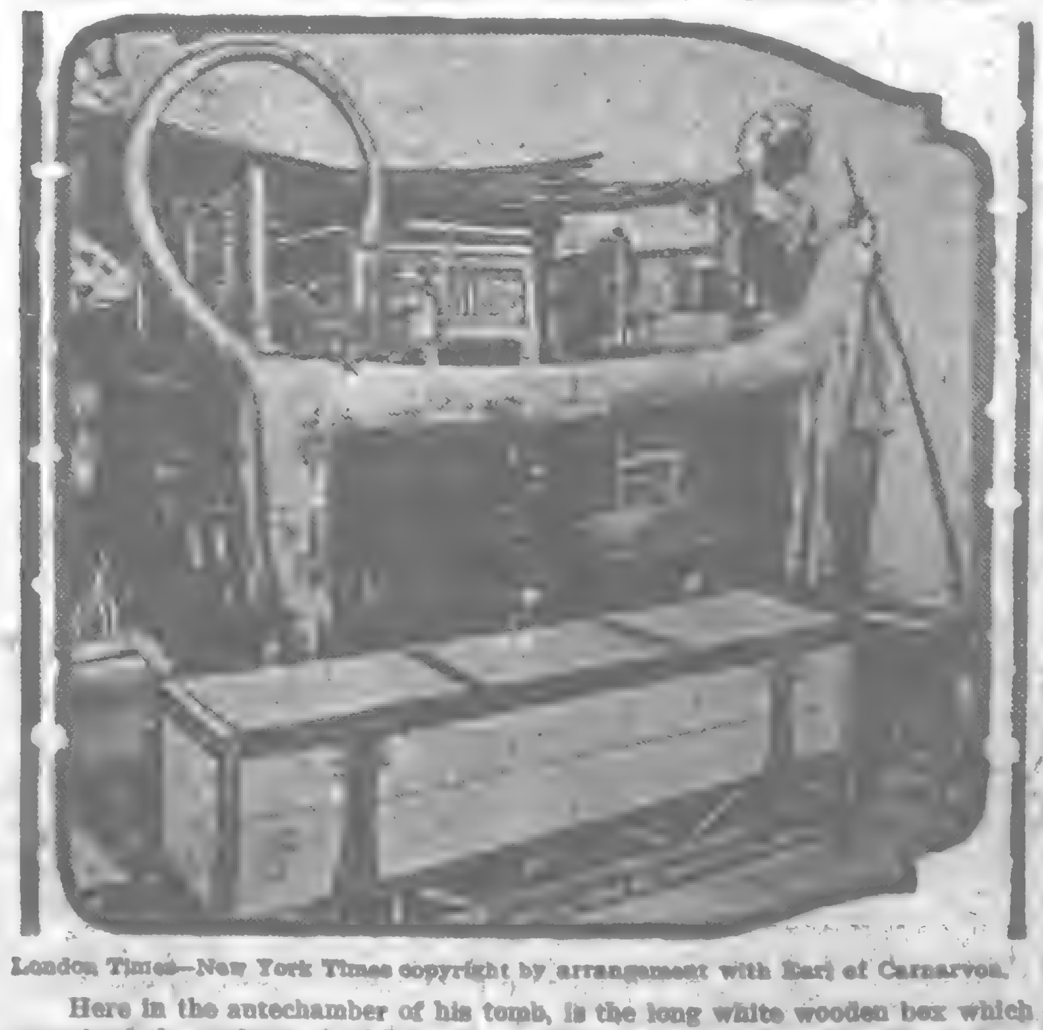
King Tut's Chariots, Couches and Funeral Meats



London Times—New York Times copyright by arrangement with Earl of Carnarvon.

In this photograph of the antechamber of the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen, king of Egypt more than thirty centuries ago, the principal objects seen are the king's stool, made of solid ebony with ivory and having gold mountings; a large royal ceremonial gilt couch; the king's throne which is covered with gold and silver and inlaid with precious stones; a wood trellis stool, a large wooden casket; a carved wood and ivory chair of exquisite workmanship; wheels, bodies, poles, harness and other parts of four chariots; wood gilt trellis work from an object of unknown use.

Box of Tut-Ankh-Amen's Underwear



London Times—New York Times copyright by arrangement with Earl of Carnarvon.

Here in the antechamber of his tomb, is the long white wooden box which contained the underwear of King Tut-Ankh-Amen, who reigned in Egypt more than three thousand years ago. It also held many of his weapons. Above it is one of the ceremonial couches, and in the background one of the statues of the king at the sealed doorway of the sepulcher.

GARDEN CLUBS ARE OF GREAT BENEFIT

The Co-Operative Organizations Should Be Formed Before Garden Season Begins.

Co-operative garden clubs are of two general types—those whose members have their gardens on a large public tract of land and those whose members are backyard gardeners. In either case, the important thing is the "get-together" spirit among neighbors, the cultivation of the feeling that something is to be gained by a knowledge of what one's acquaintances are accomplishing.

The organization should be perfected before the garden season begins, and all practical details attended to, such as arranging for the use of land or purchasing materials. A membership fee of 50 cents to $1 is frequently paid. A director, business manager, general supervisor or treasurer of the club should be elected, and in many cases it is well to hire a trained garden specialist to give instruction, at least at the start, thinks the United States Department of Agriculture.

Discussing Planting Methods.

Where a group of gardens is located on one piece of land, it is often necessary to provide special means for financing the cleaning up of the land, plowing and fitting the soil, and later for the policing of the gardens to prevent losses from theft or stray stock.

Clubs consisting of neighbors who plant gardens in their back yards must include provision for rendering a distinct service to their members. This service consists of the purchase of manure for fertilizer, plowing, supplying seeds or early plants. In a few instances the spraying of crops to control insects and diseases has been handled in a co-operative way, applying the spray wherever needed.

POINTS ON GARDEN PLANNING

Industrious Soil Worker Should Make Plans on Paper While Ground Is Frozen.

A garden laid out according to plan usually gives twice as many returns besides saving a lot of time in figuring out where to plant and what to plant next. Take a tape or yard stick and measure off the garden. Draw it to scale on paper and figure out while the ground is still frozen just where everything is to go and what crops are to succeed others.

If the garden space is small, say as small as 10 by 10 feet, it is a question of which vegetable will yield the most returns. A surprisingly large amount of vegetables can be grown in even this small space.

It is well to decide upon two main crops which may be grown at the same time or as a succession. Tomatoes and string beans offer a good solution with radishes, lettuce and young onions as the first crop, the tomatoes and beans to follow. The beans taking comparatively little nourishment from the soil compared with other vegetables may be grown in rows between the tomatoes, which should be placed three feet apart each way and trained to single stems [illegible] stakes at least five feet high. When the string beans have been harvested there will be opportunity to follow with crops of [illegible] for fall. [illegible]

WHAT ROSES TO CHOOSE

Inquiries are frequently received by the United States Department of Agriculture as to the most desirable tea and hybrid roses for planting. A few of the many good varieties as shown by the tests in the National Rose Test garden at Arlington, Va., are: for pink blooms, Radiance, Mrs. Wakefield Christie Miller, La Tosca; for white, Kaiserine Augusta Victoria, White Mamon, Cochet; for red, Red Radiance, Gruss an Teplitz; for yellow, Marie Van Houette, and Mrs. A. R. Waddell.

SHADE TREES THAT WILL BEAR FRUIT

Home-Owner Should Consider All Phases of the Situation When Planting.

Trees and decorative shrubbery are about the first things the new home owner gives attention when planning the exterior of his home. That is a matter to be, or which should be, given careful attention, for trees and shrubs live a great many years and are seldom transplanted.

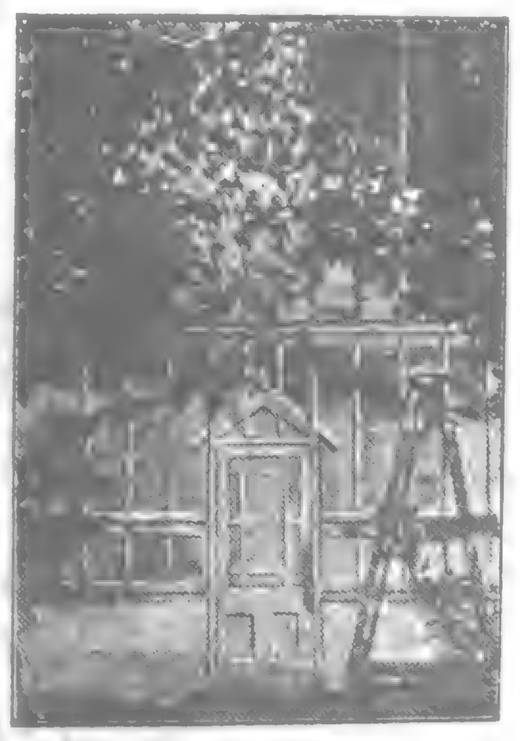
It is well to give thought to what trees will produce—when it is decided where they are to be planted.

There are many people who will not plant a tree that does not produce more than pretty leaves—they demand trees that will produce fruit or nuts—something useful—in addition to the shade.

There are numerous of the fruit tree family that produce splendid shade, and it is seldom that a fruit tree is objectionable when it is laden with its fragrant blossoms, and later, its richly colored fruit; although the rear yard, or garden space, is usually chosen, perhaps because of better opportunity for cultivation.

Nut trees make splendid shade trees and many of them produce within a few years—and nuts are welcomed by nearly every family.

Mulberry trees afford a most welcome early fruit, which is equal to the raspberry or blackberry. The only objection to this fruit is that it is welcomed more by the birds, which become a nuisance; but the shade of some varieties is equal to that of the maple.



The Luscious Mulberry.

The peach tree is one of the most graceful of the fruit tree family, and would be decorative in the front yard. Its blossom is rich and the fruit is pretty, besides being valuable.

There are numerous dwarf apple trees that would not be objectionable in the front or side yards.

Pear and plum trees, when well cared for, are decorative and produce in almost any soil and section of the country.

In reality, there is more well-founded objection to many of the shade trees, such as the quick-growing poplars. Their life is short and every season they must be cleaned of their dead branches that have not already littered the lawn.

The majority of common shade trees make heavy drain on the moisture in the ground and often it is difficult to grow grass under them.

SOME AIDS TO THE PLOWMAN

Fence Made in Sections Can Be Easily Removed and Prevent Unplowed Sections.

When you engage a plowman to plow the garden in the spring of the year he generally has to drag or carry his plow into the garden by hand, then lead the horse or the team in through a narrow gate. When he starts to plow the fence is in the way of turning, and it is impossible to plow within several feet of the fence at the ends of the garden.

Why not make it easy for the plowman and at the same time get a better job of plowing by having [illegible]

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

She led him to her "sofa" and they sat down, leaning back against the tree.

"Tell you what, Nadine?"

"About the great big world you know so well."

"I don't know the big world, as you think it. But I know the universe as I feel it. It is here."

About her finger she sat wrapping the lily-stem that had marked her favorite play. Was it that she did not understand his reference to his universe? No, for she shook her head, and with a sigh that did not mean weariness.

"The universe could not be on this little island."

"It could be held in your dimpled hand."

"Oh, my hand dimpled!" She held it in front of him, touched his brow with the palm.

"It is not soft enough to be dimpled, Virgil."

"I would kiss it soft."

He caught her wrist, touched the tip of each finger with his lips and then kissed the palm. She laughed, drawing back her hand.

"You must not do that. We must talk of other things."

"Yes, but first let me tell you of my dream."

"I do not like to hear dreams. We always forget them and make up something we did not dream. . . . But did you not tell me once?"

"No, I don't think so. In my dream you touched my heart with a torch and set it afire."

"But I would not do that. I would save you from the fire. Ah, and Tony he has gone to the city, but when he comes back, we must watch close. . . . One time he tried to take my hand, and he said he would kiss me. And I say: 'That may be, Tony. You can kiss me because you stronger. But when you have, then you be dead.' And he knew that I speak what was to come."

"We care nothing for him. Let him keep out of my way. . . . And when I saw you at the ball, I knew that you were the girl with the torch. And do you know what I said to myself? Let me whisper it to you."

"There is no one to hear."

"I said: 'You are to be my wife.' And just then you turned about and looked at me."

"But I did not see you."

"Come, now, you must have seen me."

"Well, perhaps. But I did not say: 'I am to be his wife.' No, I did not say that. And it cannot be, Virgil."

"But it is going to be, all the same, and you know it. Why, what is all this universe for if that is not to be? Why was this little island cast up here? Why did the word ring forth: 'Let there be light'? It is part of the plan of creation, and nothing can prevent it. . . . I shall have to wait, but I—"

"Will wait a long time, Virgil. But we must not talk like that. Come—let us forget such things."

She put her spell on him, and he was a boy again. Hand in hand they walked about, pretending that the acre island was miles and miles in extent. Time was a day-star shooting unseen across the sky, and then a heavy sentence fell upon him. It was time for him to go. In the cane she stood with him where his canoe was moored. He held her hand, drawing her toward him, but she took it away.

"No—no, you must not . . . Quick Virgil, you must go now. The sun is low."

CHAPTER X

In the night, in that hour of self-reproach which comes to us all, Virgil awoke in a rage with himself. He had been dreaming, had seen himself infirm of purpose, without character. Back to Highland Bruce he traced his ancestry, and was he to be the first of his race to prove degenerate, to trample upon the memory of his father, to loll in stupid love, to give his soul to a creature far beneath him in birth and schooling, a girl whose father had murdered! Out of bed he got, and bowed with the weight of shame, walked the uneven floor, for his slow steps were doddering.

"Caught in an instant, a fly in a speck of jelly, and have never been able to get free," he reproached himself. "Even Liberty Shottle, the slave of cards and dice, can see my weakness and must laugh at me. But by the God in Heaven it shall not be. In this land there is no law. I bring my own law with me [illegible], and a smile and a word of [illegible] love bade me put it aside, and I set it up from me. Now I must redeem myself."

He stood at the window. Gamecocks were crowing the dawn, a [illegible] challenge to all the world. No, there would be no weakening now. [illegible] buttoned it beneath his coat and strode down into the swamp.

[illegible]

It was a long way to his canoe near the Muscadine isle, and then a long pull to Periwinkle house, but there was time enough. Stepho would not go away till Thursday. Ah, he would go away no more, for now on Tuesday he must settle with the spirit of Alfred Drace.

Mists hovered about, but the island was in a blaze of light. Silently the canoe slit the satin water. Silently he landed. Determined vengeance may pick its way as softly as eager love; and in the cane, sharper of whisper now that the weather was cool, he made not a sound. Out into the open he peered. No one within sight. On the bark of the live oak were the dead flowers of yesterday. There in the shade was the box that had served as table, once so prettily strewn with violets.

In spite of his vow of vengeance and his hatred of Stepho, these things caught at Drace's heart, shook his fixed purpose of action. For many minutes he waited—no sign of Stepho, of anyone. And then his blood leaped; for soft hands suddenly blinded him from behind, soft laughter bubbled over at his astonishment. And dark thoughts and dark purposes fled on the wind as he caught Nadine and hugged her close.

"Now for your punishment!" And he kissed her.

"Oh, you must not again . . . Virgil, I cannot like you when you are rude. . . . You must not!"

"I don't want you just to like me."

"You do not? Then I will try not to. . . . Come and sit down, Virgil. You worked so hard for your kisses you must be tired. . . . How did you guess?"

"Guess what?" he asked as she led him to the sofa and he sat gazing entranced as she captured and imprisoned her guerrilla bands of hair.

"That Father and Tony had gone hunting today. But they may be back at any time, Virgil. You must not stay."

"But I must stay; you hold me prisoner. I must stay until you love me as madly as I do you."

"As madly as you do me? That might not be so much mad, Virgil. But why should I love you?"

"Because you are to be my wife. We are engaged."

"Are we? I did not know that. Why you not tell me sooner?"

"I did, and now you must know it."

"But I did not. Then I must be stupid, yes?"

"The whole universe is stupid if it denies it. The angels are stupid if they fail to see it."

"Oh, you must not talk like that. It is worse than swearing the big oath. . . . And I am to be your wife, Mrs. Virgil? Then what do we do? Go about and sing with the fiddle?"

"No, we go to the beautiful places on earth and look upon them—together. We—"

"No, no, you must not think like that. You take my father by the wrist and he hate you. . . . And I do so wrong to see you. I am the sinner, but I believe that the Blessed One, she ask for my forgiveness. . . . No, Virgil, we can only play together and then . . . It will live in the mind, our childhood here. . . . My father is not well all the time now, and I must be good to him. . . . Only I must see you, sometimes. That is the only wrong I do him.

"For I—I love you. . . . I did not want to tell you, but I cannot keep it all the time down in my heart. . . . I dream of you all of the night, and I kneel down and pray that you always love me. . . . There, I have told you so much. And I kiss you, too. . . . Now—you may stay for a little time, and then you must go."

Boy and girl they played, not from the book but from love's ever-varying text. In his canoe they paddled afar off where the lily-pads paved the surface of the pond. They landed on a knoll where was spread over persimmon saplings an arbor of muscadine; here an adventurous catbird had her nest of young. She cried and fluttered about in great alarm, but when she saw that they were not her enemies, that they caught grasshoppers to feed her brood, she sat high among the vines, calling her mate, the musician, and here he came, scared at first, but when she had explained to him he sang his medley, ending with the catcall whence comes his unpoetic name.

The sun had been speeding, and went behind a cloud. Fear seized Nadine, and taking Virgil's hand, she urged him toward the boat.

"My dear one, we must go now. The sun was jealous that we so happy and will go into the dark to pout. . . . I will show you the near way for you to come again, the way I came [illegible] there was the fire. [illegible]"

[illegible]

"Till Thursday!" he cried as he dipped his paddle.

"Till Thursday!" she echoed as she watched him go.

"Till Thursday!" muttered the sinister voice of old Stepho, who had approached softly through the undergrowth at the sound of voices, and had overheard their parting. But when he came to Periwinkle house, he gave no sign to Nadine that he had overheard—only talked of Monsieur Boyce and the fine dresses he would buy for her when she was his wife.

It was long past noon when Drace reached the river.

The General had gone over into another parish to attend a stock sale, Tycie said; and when she had looked at Drace more closely, at his torn clothes, his muddy shoes, she sighed and sat down beside him where on the rustic bench he had dropped to rest before going to his room.

"Virgil," she said, "there is something troubling you. Now, you needn't tell me that it is business. I know what business is. I know all of its tricks; but I also know love and all of its tricks. Virgil, you are in love. Let me hope that it is not that Nina Spence. She isn't worthy of you; and besides, she doesn't belong to us. She is not of our world. Virgil, I am so sorry."

She put her hand on his arm, and he took it and affectionately kissed it.

"Aunt Tycie, I never saw the girl you speak of. I am in the—the throes, you might say, and have been—was before I got here, but not with her."

"But is it with anyone I know?"

"You have seen her, I have heard."

"Oh, you must tell me. It shall be sacred with me. If you only knew how people tell me their affairs of the heart. Even old Colonel Josh has told me. Now, why won't you?"

"I shall tell you, but I must put you on your honor. I said that you have seen her. You have; you spoke of her. Nadine—"

"Oh, Virgil! But her father!"

"Yes, I know. But let me tell you my story.

He told of his love, not of his father's death—told her nothing of his oath; she listened enraptured; and when he had finished, she mothered him with her arms about his neck.

. . . .

About ten o'clock next day, while the family sat in the shade, up to the gate drew a resplendent carriage, drawn by two black horses and driven by a negro in livery. Out stepped a man as tall as Lincoln and wearing a hat as high as his. His raiment flashed like the varnish of his equipage. Drace recognized him as he came through the gate, taking off his gloves, and the General cried out:

"Tycie, I wish I may die dead if it isn't Liberty Shottle!"

"Colonel Shottle, at your service," replied Liberty, bowing and gesturing with his gloves in his hand.

"Well, Liberty!" cried his aunt, giving him a hug of welcome.

The General and Drace grasped him, stroked his velvety raiment, urging him to a seat.

"Why all this, Colonel Shottle?"—from the General. "You don't mean to tell me that you have sold your jute-stock?"

"Uncle Howard, sir, first issue orders to have my carriage stored, my horses stabled and my driver quartered, please."

The order was issued, and they sat waiting for Shottle to explain his transformation.

"A simple story," he began, stretching out his legs. "But do not forestall me. Poker, dice, roulette, faro, hazard—all of them failed."

"And this comes of legitimate investment!" Tycie cried. "I knew it would. Oh, I knew it just had to come. Now tell us about it.

"It was an investment, Aunt Tycie. But let me not forestall myself. I left here on a boat, got broke. Finally I reached Tampa, Florida."

"Away down there, Liberty?"—from Tycie.

"Patience, my dear aunt. Tampa, and broke! After a day of hope with its throat cut from ear to ear, I got on a boat bound for Havana. The Spanish captain gave me passage for service. He was studying English, and I agreed to explain to him certain niceties of our mother tongue, you understand; and I am sure that, reaching port, he knew more about gambling terms than he could have picked up in a year of close study in one of our ordinary schools. He was appreciative, generous, and gave me a bonus of five dollars. I went to a hotel, not of the first class, and it was there that I made my investment. The weather was warm and—"

"For gracious sake, Liberty, tell us!" his aunt urged him.

"That is my aim, but let us not be [illegible]. . . . I was eating a Spanish stew out on the sidewalk, the weather being warm, when along came an agent—not a man in livery, but a regular agent—and I bought a [illegible]. I bought a [illegible] lottery. . . . [illegible]

LESSON FOR MARCH 4

JESUS TEACHING IN THE TEMPLE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 20:19-26; 21:1-4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Render therefore unto Caesar the things which be Caesar's and unto God the things which be God's.—Luke 20:25.
REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matt. 7:28-29; Isa. 28:14-20; Acts 4:7-22; Rom. 13:1-7.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Gift That Pleased Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Widow and Her Two Mites.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Fearless Teacher.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Answering His Opposers.

The popularity of Jesus after the triumphal entry greatly troubled the rulers of Israel. He met their wicked challenge as to his authority in such a skillful way as to place them under condemnation for their unbelief. This condition was accentuated by the parable of the householder.

I. The Question of Paying Tribute (20:19-26).

1. Spies Sent to Entrap Jesus (v. 20). The rulers were too cowardly to do this themselves, so they employed underlings to do their mean work while they hid away. This diabolical method is employed today in political and religious life. Many times questions are raised under the guise of sincerity, when the real purpose is to do mischief.

2. Wicked Flattery (v. 21). They complimented His truthful teaching, His impartiality and courage. They certified to His faithfulness even to that extent that He would face Caesar himself. This compliment was true, though insincerely given. Back of this flattery was the base purpose to destroy Jesus. Many today praise to the face in order to stab in the back.

3. The Cunning Question (vv. 22-26). "Is it lawful for us to give tribute to Caesar or not?" At this time the Jews were galling under the yoke of the Roman government. To have answered this question either by "yes" or "no" would have involved difficulties. To have answered "yes," would have conveyed the impression of endorsing all that the Roman government did. To have answered, "no," would have at once brought him into conflict with the government. It is not always an easy matter for a Christian to determine his right relation to civil government.

Christ's reply to this question properly understood and applied is the final word on the subject. Until the civil authorities demand that which is a violation of God's law we are bound to render unto them obedience. Render unto Caesar the things due within the realm of the rights of government.

But while Christ's answer sets forth their duties to civil authorities, He used the occasion to impress upon them the duties due to God. Render unto God the things that are God's. Man bears the image of God. Therefore he should honor and serve Him. Since he enjoy's God's protection and care, it is his duty to own allegiance to Him, yield his life to Him in service, worship and praise. Everyone who enjoys the benefits of civil government is obliged to pay the taxes which are necessary for the support of that government, and everyone who receives God's favor is placed under a like obligation unto Him.

II. Jesus' Estimate of Gifts (21:1-4).

1. Jesus Watching the People Giving (v. 1). He was greatly interested in observing the way the people cast their gifts into the treasury. Perhaps there is more vital index to one's character than the way he behaves before the Lord's treasury. Jesus sits over against every treasury and knows every dollar cast into it. He knows how the dollars come and how they go. No trickery can deceive Him. He not only knows this in the church, but He knows it in the business world.

2. The Rich Gave of Their Abundance (vv. 1-4). They, no doubt, gave much, but in proportion to what they had left their gifts were small. The size of the gift is not primarily to be measured by how much it is, but how much has the giver left.

3. A Widow Gave Two Mites (vv. 2-4). In value a mite was less than a cent. Though the two coins were of small value themselves, they represented her all—not merely her surplus, but her living. Let no one deceive himself by pretending to give the widow's mite, for to give the widow's mite means to give everything.

4. [illegible] Verdict (vv. 3-4). [illegible]

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

GEORGIE GREEN FROG

Little Georgie Green Frog, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Green Frog of Lily Pond, Frog Country, felt that he was not appreciated. It was a very sad feeling, a most sad feeling. Sometimes the tears would come to Georgie's frog eyes and he would blink them away so as not to let the other frogs see that he wanted to cry.

One day, though, one of the frogs croaked at him:

"Whatever in the world, or in the pond, is the matter with you, Georgie? All you do is to mope all day long. You won't join our games, you won't have any fun, and the very sight of you is enough to make others unhappy."

"Ah, goog-a-room, goog-a-room," said Georgie, "I am not appreciated."

The other frog went off in disgust.

"Georgie," he told the other frogs, "is getting to be so conceited. He thinks he is better than any other creature in the pond."

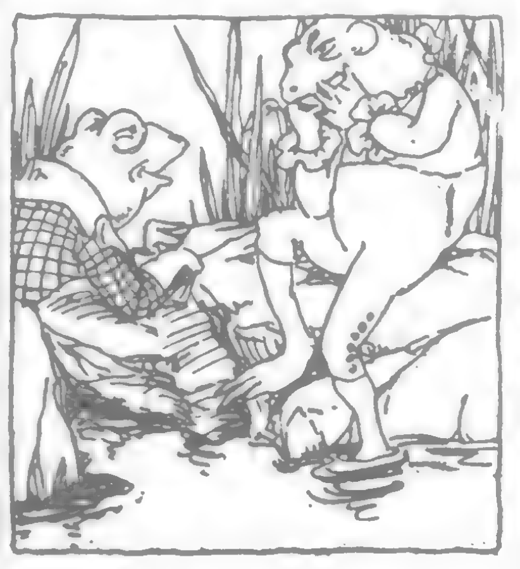
The other frogs looked in Georgie's direction.

"Too bad," they said, blinking and croaking, "but let us not bother about him. There are many fine bugs at the market this morning and we must hurry and get them before they are all snapped up."

So Georgie was left alone.

"I am really above the creatures in this pond," he gurgled to himself. "That's the whole truth of the matter."

"What is that you say?" asked a voice, and looking around, Georgie Green Frog saw a beautiful fairy.



"I Am Not Appreciated."

She was dressed in pale green and silver and carried a silver wand. She also wore a green and silver crown. It was a most beautiful crown and the green jewels that were in it dazzled in the sunlight.

"Who are you?" asked Georgie.

"I am the Pond Fairy," said the fairy.

"But I've never seen you before," said Georgie. And then a bright thought came to him.

Of course he had never seen her before! She would not bother with the ordinary green frogs of the pond, but she had noticed him. At last he would be appreciated. At last some one had already appreciated him.

"I see you agree with me," Georgie said, as he made room for the fairy on the pond lily leaf upon which he was sitting. "I've been thinking for some time that I was above the creatures of this pond. I'm really out of place here. The others—well, you know—they're all right enough in their way. But the truth of the whole matter is they're common, goog-a-room, ordinary, goog-a-room.

"That's why you've come to call on me, I'm sure. You can see I'm out of the ordinary."

"Yes, I can see that," said Pond Fairy.

Georgie Green Frog gave a queer little throaty laugh of delight.

"As a matter of fact," continued Pond Fairy, "I've come to ask you if you'd like to leave Lily Pond and move to some other place.

"Although my name is Pond Fairy, because I visit ponds from time to time, my home is not here."

Georgie opened his eyes very wide and gurgled delightedly.

"I knew it; I knew what would come to me," he said to himself. "I knew I should have adventures above all the other frogs in the pond. Ah, I was wise not to mix too much in their society.

"Wise, indeed. Ah yes, Georgie Green Frog is very sensible."

"Would you like to visit away from here?" asked Pond Fairy.

"Oh, pardon me, pardon me," said Georgie Green Frog, "I've almost forgotten my manners. It's all because I've been living with such ordinary frogs.

"I will come with much pleasure. [illegible]"

Agriculture in Guam.

Ten year's work by the federal agricultural experiment station in Guam on adaptation of temperate zone vegetables to the soil and climate there has resulted in the introduction of varieties of many vegetables into the gardens of natives of Guam. Previously to this very few garden vegetables were grown. Beans, carrots, corn, cucumbers, eggplant, mustard, okra, peppers, radishes, pumpkins and watermelons are reported to the United States Department of Agriculture as being among those best adapted to conditions on that island.

HOW TIMES HAVE CHANGED

By Amos Tash

I can remember when a jit had quite a lot of kick to it; when you could take an old, thin dime and go and have a fancy time. I can remember when two-bits would shock a bellhop into fits, and when you could produce a half and even make a barber laugh.

I can remember when a plunk would purchase for you quite a hunk of porterhouse or let you go and have a seat at some good show. I can remember when two bucks would buy for you a brace of ducks, and when, if you could show a "V" you were in good society.

And I can e'en remember when I proudly flashed a new-laid ten, and on a modest twenty-five for one whole month I'd stay alive. And when a bird had fifty beans he had a fortune in his jeans. A hundred berries was a price beyond the dreams of avarice.

I've seen the tides of commerce flow, I've seen these moneys come and go. They used to be a husky bunch and e'en a nickle packed a punch. Yes, I remember when a jit had quite a lot of kick to it. There's just one answer to be told—I must be getting pretty old.

OBSERVATIONS

We have observed:

That making mistakes seems to be a necessary part of a man's education.

That the harder you are to please the less your friends will try.

That more people will accept a man's cigars than his advice.

That a man cannot become popular unless he is willing to be bored occasionally.

That the fact that life is a grind is what sharpens many a man's wits.

That when a woman doesn't enjoy spending money she needs a tonic.

That it takes a born diplomat to disguise the interest one feels in oneself.

St. Joe And The Band

What is the Band worth to St. Joe? This is a question that the people of our town will be called on to answer this very spring. The St. Joe Community Welfare Band has been in existence for over two years and has made great and pleasing process in the art of music. This organisation has given street concerts during the summer seasons and contributed to every musical need of our town during the winter months and has displayed a real community spirit in the general welfare of the entire community. These things have been done only by keen sacrifice of its boy members, the able leadership of Mr. Wilcox and the general management of Mr. Elsa Kinsey, who has spared neither time nor money in the perfection of this organisation.

Now it so happens that the band has reached that stage in its growth that it needs the whole-hearted co-operation of the citizens of St. Joe. In other words, the band has out grown its last years trousers and it now calls on its Town Dads to buy new ones. In still other words, the band is ready—yes just a raring to put on the finishing touches this year The band needs new members, new players to play new instruments different from the ones they now have.

"Mr. Kinsey states that the band must have saxophones, clarinets, two altos and added cornets. In pursuit of these aims we must have at least thirty pieces to make a real band and above all, we must have the co-operation of the town and community. There is no use talking, the whole town is benefitted by this band and there is no reason why the town should not wake up to the fact and get busy in this re-organisation drive."

The band has added to its list of instrumentation a clarinet and a few players who have not decided just what instruments they will chose to play. The parents of the community ought to be proud of the fact that their children have the opportunity of learning to play a musical instrument right in their own town with so little expense and at the same time give their young bloods some thing to do worth while. Therefore, Mr. Citizen, whether you are a retired farmer, property owner, business man, farmer or parent, it is your duty to give the boys enterprise a boost. Others are doing it, why not you? SAY IT WITH PUSH.

On Friday night the Tri Mu class held a shower on Mrs. Edith Keller, who formerly was Miss Edith Haifley.

The boys Sunday School class, No. 8, of the Lutheran Sunday School, met Monday evening with Burnard Sechler. Lunch consisting of sandwiches, pickles, fruit salad and cake was served to nine.

Last Tuesday night the Tri Mu class held a class meeting in the basement of the church. The meeting was opened by singing a song after which the Lord's prayer was repeated in concert. Different subjects were brought up and discussed, these relating to the betterment of class conditions. Cake and sandwiches were served by the refreshment committee. After the refreshments games were enjoyed by all Twenty-one members and four visitors were present.

Having finished the series of sermons in the Lutheran Church on the condition of the soul after death, I want to thank the people for the interest manifested. The attendance and attention has been good. By special request I will preach one more on the subject of the Condition of the body after the Resurrection. This sermon will be preached next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. The public is invited.

Garrett Hi Wins Championship

Garrett and Hamilton high school basket ball teams each forced their way through the first games of the district tournament held at Angola last Friday and Saturday and faced each other Saturday night for the finals.

Both teams had displayed wonderful skill in bumbling their opponents and to say which one would fall to the other was a shaky guess. Both teams had played in the final game in what seemed to be of equal strength until the last minute and a half when Garrett scored in the lead and downed Hamilton by the score of 22 to 17.

The Garrett team will represent this district in the regional meet at Ft. Wayne next Friday and Saturday and will clash with the South Side High of that city in its first game.

The Garett Clipper has the folfowing to say for the Garrett Coach:

"To Clayton B. Hathaway is due the credit for the training that brought Garrett the high school sectional basket ball championship. The victory at Angola Saturday night marks him as a leader among athletic directors in northern Indiana.

Mr. Hathaway, a son of former County Recorder Henry C. Hathaway, graduated from Wittenberg college last year and joined the faculty of Garrett high school in September. He turned out a winning football team and he developed the champion basket ball team from what was chiefly raw material. Tom Burtch, Dickeen and Beeber are sophomores, Arnol Burtch is a junior and LaRue is a senior."

Tycie hugged him; Drace shook his hand; and the General exclaimed his astonishment.

"Well, that beats anything I ever heard in my life. It doesn't seem possible, sir."

"No, and I was somewhat taken by surprise, Uncle Howard. But there is often success in a change of occupation, and I had tried everything else. It took me a few moments to adjust myself; then I got a draft, and in Mobile received premium enough on my gold certificate to pay my debts. And now it gives me great pleasure to perform that duty. I owe you, Uncle Howard, twelve hundred and thirty dollars, all told. Aunt Tycie, I owe you five hundred. Virgil, I owe you—but we'll get at that later. Worthy and patient creditors, here we are!"

He took out a roll of bank notes, counted the amount of his indebtedness to his aunt and showered her lap with greenbacks. Then he turned to the General.

"No, Liberty, I don't want the money," protested Bethpage. "If you pay me, it will be the first time you ever returned borrowed money to me, and I don't care to have you establish a precedent that might bring disappointment in the future."

After the family bedtime, Shottle came into Drace's room and requested him to report as to what progress he had made; and Drace told him all that had occurred.

"And now let me tell you a notion of mine," said Shottle then. "If you are waiting for that old sharkbone to decay, you'll perhaps wait twenty years. Attention: I'm going on a little trip tomorrow. In two days, when I come back, I'll drive down to a convenient point; you fetch the girl, into the carriage you jump, and away we go, drive over to some place where we can catch a train, and Cincinnati before old Stepho knows which way we've gone. What do you say?"

"But—what becomes of my oath? Oh, don't think that because I dally I have forgotten it or that in one jot I shall fail to keep it. If I should, in all after-life I'd have a contempt for myself."

CHAPTER XI

"Till Thursday!" Drace had cried. Nadine had echoed it, and another voice, hidden in the cane, had muttered the words with how different a meaning! Now Thursday was come again; and Virgil Drace infirm of purpose, again made his way down the river and through the swamp to his tryst with Nadine.

But Death sought to make a third at that tryst. From afar the sentineled Tony had seen Drace coming. And hardly had the Northerner's canoe touched the bank when from out the cane Tony and Stepho leaped upon him and bore him to the ground, dazed by a blow from an oar.

"Ha! My fine carpetbagger! You seize my wrist and keep my knife from the old General! You steal here to make love to my daughter! Ha! Who will now keep my knife from you? In a little while, now, you will be deep in the marsh, and the green mold will be on your bones. And the old fool at the big house, he die too, for my men will cut his throat. And then—"

A piercing cry from the house, and Nadine ran to them, a knife that mated Stepho's dirk clutched in her hand.

"No—no!" she cried. "You shall not!"

Stepho looked up. "Take the girl away, Tony," he commanded.

But Nadine threatened him off with her knife. Then she turned the blade in another direction and spoke again. "If you do not let Virgil go," she said, "I will kill myself—now."

Stepho knew Nadine—the wild heart of her. "You promise never to see this man again, and to marry Monsieur Boyce, like I wish?"

"I promise nothing—except that I will kill myself if you do not let him go."

Stepho hesitated a moment, craft fighting with anger. Then craft won; he or Tony would stroll up to the Bethpage plantation and make an end of the General and Drace that night.

"All right," he snarled. "He can go. But let him never come back here or—" He drew the back of his dirk across his own throat in a significant gesture. Then with Tony he lifted Drace into his canoe; and the young man, still dazed from the blow, feebly made his way out of the swamp.

When he had passed from sight, Nadine dropped her knife and sank to the ground sobbing. Old Stepho turned savagely upon her.

"You liar! You she-wolf! I would kill you, but I promise you to the man Boyce. An' now there [illegible] that I tell you. In you there is not the blood of Stepho la Vine. [illegible] never shall know your name. [illegible]" [illegible] I am not your child. You hang his father and would murder him! But he will be gone; and if you kill me, it makes no matter. And you think I will stay here and let the man come to marry me! I will—"

[illegible]

He seized her, and Tony ran in to help. She fought with the dirk, but they wrenched it from her hand, held her helpless, dragged her into her room; and she lay for a time on the floor while she heard them fastening her in her prison. It was now dark. She got up, went to the window and found that heavy bars had been nailed across it. She lighted her lamp and with a pencil began to write a note to Drace, praying in her heart that she might find some way to send it to him. Little she slept and in the dawn she was at the window, the vines all of them gone. She heard footsteps near, and she tried to look out to discover who it might be, but she could gaze neither to the right nor the left, so closely was she mewed. She spoke, softly, louder and then there drew the darkened form of a man, Batoche, an old frog-hunter whom once before she had employed.

"I am here to borrow the mushkrat-spear for the one day, for mine he was broke; but they are still asleep."

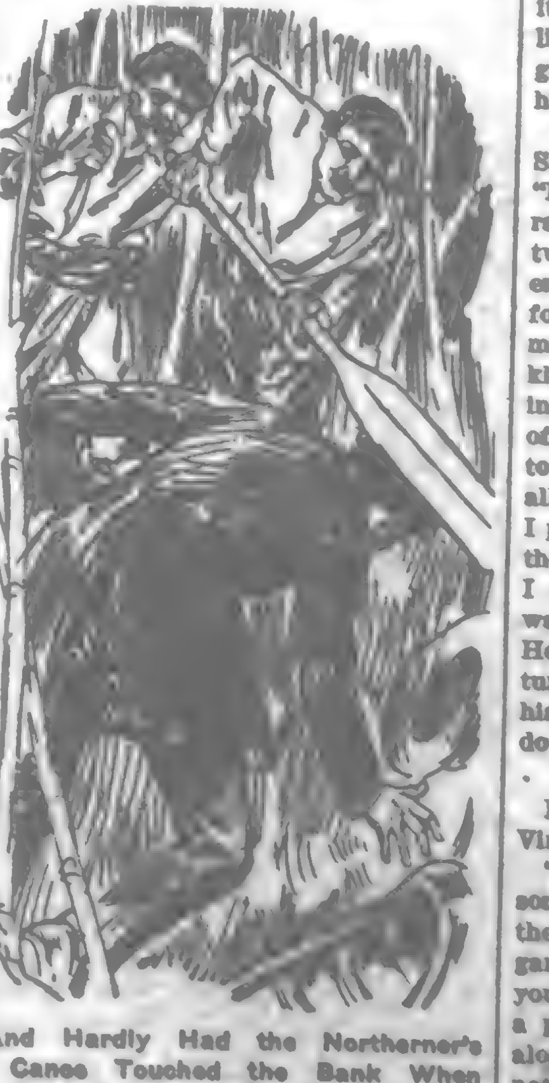
"Come closer, good Batoche, and listen to me. Take this note to Monsieur Drace, at General Bethpage's house—quick, with no one to see you, and I will give you a diamond when you come back."

"Give me the note, an' I be there soon."

She gave him the note, and he hastened away. She stood at the door, wondering why she had not heard her father stirring about. Once she thought she heard him call Tony. After a long time Tony came, and she heard them together as they went out. Then all was silent.

. . . .

Sick in mind and body, Drace made his way back to Bethpage. He made himself as presentable as possible before he entered the house; fortunately, too, the attention of Tycie and the General was at that moment centered on Colonel Josh, who had stopped off to pay them a call—and who showed astonishment when asked to walk out to dinner, though he yielded with astonishing alacrity to the pressure of the General's hand upon his arm. He was busy, with a helping of late mustard greens and hog's jowl, when Tycie inquired:



And Hardly Had the Northerner's Canoe Touched the Bank When From Out the Canoe Tony and Stepho Leaped Upon Him.

"And how is dear Lucy?"

"Madam," said Josh, "I am grieved to impart to you a distressful piece of news. She is soon to be married to a man named Spivan."

"Oh, I'm so sorry, Colonel Josh."

"Madam, it is a calamity. Luke Spivan!"

"What's the matter with him?" the General inquired. "Isn't broke, is he?"

"General, the man has money. But do you know what his calling is? I shall enlighten you, sir. The fellow is a dealer in [illegible]

[illegible]

Josh, haloed him; and with her eyes she begged the General to drop the subject, but it was sweeter to him than any sugar ever grained in his mill.

After dinner they were in the parlor when they saw a vagabond equipage stop at the gate, an old carry-all drawn by a staggering horse, driven by a ragged negro. There was one passenger in the habilaments of a scarecrow, topped off with a yellow cotton hat—enough to disguise any man on earth save one, and this man was the exception.

"Tycie, what did I tell you!" cried the General. "I knew it as well as I knew my name. Now look at him!"

They looked at him, went out into the hall to meet him, Tycie in convenient tears. The visitor kissed her and shook hands with the men.

"It is not necessary for me to assert that I hold no commission, civil or military," said the vagrant.

"Sit down, sir," commanded the General. And then, surveying him slowly from head to foot: "Will you please state as to whether or not you regard yourself a human being?"

"General," said Tycie, "please don't scold him, for I'm sure he must be hungry."

"My dear, I shall not scold him; but I don't see anything about him that calls for congratulations."

"Liberty," said Virgil, "tomorrow we'll go over and have the parish surveyor run you off a suit of clothes."

"My dear relatives, I thank you for these little attentions; and as to your question, Uncle Howard, let me say, sir, that my claims as to being a human are somewhat vague. One of the first things I discovered about myself was my unreality. When do we eat?"

Tycie ran out and returned with a piece of frosted cake that looked like a corner broken off a marble mantlepiece. The General was laughing.

"Well, Liberty, we are always glad to see you, anyway. It is the unreality, if I may so speak, that spices our lives; and when you come with your gilded worries, you enliven us. Where have you been, anyhow?"

"I've been wherever there is," said Shottle, gesturing with his cake. "First I went to Memphis, to the races, and gave old Skinny Hughes two hundred for a sure card on the entries. Lost ten thousand. Then I followed the horses to Lexington, with my bank account leaking like a sprinkling cart. But why linger when nothing can be swifter than the approach of poverty? Finally I sold my clothes to a negro preacher and invested my all in lottery tickets. It seemed that I possessed myself of all the figures of the multiplication table, didn't see how I could possibly miss, but I did. It wasn't laid out for me to win again. He gets to a certain pinnacle of fortune, slips off, and spends the rest of his life struggling to get back. When do we eat?"

. . . .

Long after bedtime Shottle came to Virgil's room.

"Virgil, you know I've got to hit on something of a permanent nature. So the question is, now that I've quit gambling, what am I going to do? If you'll not go to sleep, I'll tell you of a plan. Mark me: I have observed, along with thousands of others, that nothing digs deeper after rainy-day money than a circus and menagerie. It is known that the poor man of the South, and especially the negro, will sell his cookstove to buy a circus ticket. Now comes my plan, and mind you, I strive to keep it from being too sudden. Attention! You buy a circus, and I'll go along as ring-master. That is the one thing I am really fitted for. You never saw me crack a whip, did you?"

"Don't believe I ever did."

"All right, you've got something to look forward to. . . . Yes, I'll be the ring-master, and—"

"And bet an elephant on the turn of a card," said Virgil.

"Ah, one of my own, perhaps, but not one entrusted to me. I am not an embezzler of elephants. I wouldn't bet a garter-snake on a sure thing. Besides, I told you I'd quit gambling—that is, I'm quitting. It isn't wise to expose my constitution to the shock of a sudden change. . . . Well, good night."

Tall Men Needed.

While walking down the street one night with her daddy, little Thelma became interested in a lamp post with a red globe that had the words "Fire Alarm" painted on it. She had seen fire boxes before and had been told that in order to turn in an alarm that you had to break the glass.

So, after studying for a moment, she said: "A man has to be awfully tall to break that glass, doesn't he?"

Petroleum for Airplanes.

What appears to some as an epoch-making event in the development of airplane and automobile motive power is the recent successful trip near Copenhagen, Denmark, of an airplane using petroleum as engine fuel. It was observed by experts who witnessed the test that the plane flew just as well as with gasoline, that there was less vibration and no soot formed, nor was there any self-ignition in the engine, which ran 100 less revolutions than normally.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Find What CANADA has to offer YOU!

If your dream of success seems like a hopeless ambition, if you are discouraged trying to get ahead on high priced land, if your present location fails to give you opportunity, there is a new deal for you, a new chance in the fertile, virgin farms of Western Canada, where wheat produces 20 to 40 bushels to the acre, where the 1922 crop was biggest in history, where oats, barley and hay and fodder crops are the basis of a great dairy industry, and a man's work brings him success and prosperity.

Low Priced Land—the Last Great West

In Western Canada you still can buy virgin prairie land at $15 to $20 per acre, on long terms if desired, near to town, railroads, etc.—land such as has for many years produced the world's prize winning wheat, oats, barley, flax, rye, alfalfa. Canada had no "war time" land boom; prices are not inflated — you get in on the ground floor.

Taxes Favor the Farmer as Values Increase

The tax laws of Western Canada encourage the producing farmer. The tax on land is reduced when it is brought under cultivation—while on your buildings, machinery, improvements, personal property, automobile, there is no tax at all. A single crop is often worth more, acre for acre, than the cost of the land.

Rent Now—Buy Later Pay Out of Profits

Canada welcomes the industrious settler. What you have now isn't so important. If your capital is small, or you cannot sell your present holdings to advantage, rent a fertile Canadian farm and "try it out" for a season or two. Make a good living, increase your capital, and buy later. Farms may be rented from successful settlers on easy terms; in some cases with option of purchase.

For the benefit of those wishing to buy land a national non-profit sharing organization—[illegible] has been established with head office at Winnipeg. [illegible] This Association offers selected land convenient to [illegible] per acre—on very small cash payment; no further [illegible] over thirty years, [illegible] desired. A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician, but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. The reason for its phenomenal success is because of its absolute purity, and Dr. Pierce's high standing as an honored citizen of Buffalo is a guarantee of all that is claimed for the Favorite Prescription as a regulator for the ills peculiar to women.

MEMORIAL DAY BILL TO M'CRAY

Anti-Speedway Measure Passes House by 53 to 38.

VOTE AFTER TENSE DEBATE

Measure Bans Sports for Which Admission Is Charged—Senate Kills Movie Censorship 40 to 4—Bus and Truck Measure Dead.

Indianapolis.—After the most tense debate of the 1923 session, lasting throughout the greater part of the day, the Indiana house of representatives passed the senate bill prohibiting the holding of the Indianapolis Speedway Memorial day automobile race. The vote was 53 to 38. The bill bans any sport on Memorial day for which admission is charged. It was passed by the senate early in the session.

Governor Gets Bill.

The bill was sent to Governor McCray for his signature or veto, and he will refer it to Attorney General U. S. Lesh, who will consider its constitutionality.

The vote on the bill follows:

For Passage—Republicans: Addington, Ahlgren, Brown, Carter, Davis, DuComb, Farley, Freeman, Graham, Haines, Hammitt, Hull, Isenbarger, Johnson of Monroe, Johnson of Hamilton, Knapp, Kretschman, Lafuse, Leslie, McCutcheon, Murden, Murray, Myers, Ogden, Rex, Phillips, Pittenger, Pulse, Rich, Shull, Thiel, Trent, Trowbridge, Waters, Wedeking—34.

Democrats—Bender, Clapp, Collins, Core, Custer, Drake, Gottschalk, Holman, Jackson, Johnson of Gibson, Leveron, Livingston, McCloskey, Mabbitt, Nolan, Peterson, Scott, Shafer, Thursten—9.

Those Against Measure.

Against—Republicans: Day, Duffey, Harris, Harrison, Hill Hurty, Matthews, Miller, Rainey, Rowbottom, Sherwood, Smith, Traub, Updike, Wyson—15.

Democrats—Butt, Carlos, Eickhoff, Fagin, Gill, Hall, Hart, Hobbs, Hoffman, Jones, Kenney, Larrabee, Lowe, Ortlieb, Perkins, Punshon, Riede, Ringo, Schaefer, Schwartz, Schwing, Stelhorn, Thomas—23.

Absent—Republicans: Cline, Love—2.

Democrats—Bierly, Flock, Kitch, Post, Powell, Townsend—6.

Not Voting—Republicans: Speaker Raymond C. Morgan.

No Movie Censorship.

On motion of Senator F. Harold VanOrman of Evansville, the Indiana senate killed the Steele motion picture censorship bill by a vote of 40 to 4.

During the debate only two senators spoke in favor of the bill. Senator Oliver E. Dunn of Spencer, chairman of the committee on public morals, read an oration in favor of the censorship proposal and Senator Claude Steele spoke briefly for his measure.

House Kills Motor Bill.

The Moorhead bill to place automobile passenger and truck transportation lines under control of the public serivce commission was killed without a dissenting vote in the Indiana house of representatives. Charges that the bill, whose author was Senator Robert L. Moorhead (Marion, Rep.), was introduced for the benefit of interurban railway companies were made by several representatives who spoke against the bill. The house action consisted of the adoption of a majority committee report favoring indefinite postponement after it had voted down a minority report favoring passage.

Appropriation Bill Passes.

Under a suspension of the constitutional rules, made possible by a number of Democrats joining the majority, the budget appropriation bill, carrying items totaling about $17,800,000 for the next two fiscal years, passed the Indiana senate by a vote of 28 to 18.

While the measure was on second reading a second attempt was made to cut down the appropriation for the new reformatory at Pendleton from $2,000,000 to $1,500,000, the amount allowed by the house. While this proposal, as well as one to take all fees away from the public service commission, were voted down, several other amendments were added. One of these, presented by Senator F. Harold VanOrman, Republican, eliminates the auto theft department from the budget and permits this department to retain the fees paid for certificates of title instead of turning them into the general fund. On motion of Senator Joseph M. Cravens, Democratic floor leader, an appropriation of $81,000 was added to the bill. This amount is to be placed in the hands of the state board of finance to settle claims against the state for drainage projects in the Kankakee swamps.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Columbus.—Rev. W. H. Book, pastor of the Tabernacle Christian church, said that a series of meetings will be held in the church, in which the restoration movement in the church will be discussed by ministers prominent in the Disciples denomination. The first meeting will be held the fourth Sunday in March and will be addressed by Rev. W. N. Briney of the Broadway Christian church, Louisville. Other speakers in the series will be Rev. A. B. Philputt, Indianapolis; Dr. Jabez Hall, Butler college; Rev. Ralph Records, Franklin college, and Rev. Z. T. Sweeney of this city.

Wabash.—Near East topics were discussed in churches Sunday. Mead A. Kelsey, who recently returned from a tour of Turkey, Armenia, Palestine and Syria, spoke at the Friends church Sunday morning and at the Christian church in the evening. V. K. Beshgetoor, a native Armenian, spoke at the Presbyterian church in the morning and Don Tullis of Indianapolis spoke at the Evangelical church in the morning and the United Brethren church in the evening.

Seymour.—J. R. Duke of Indianapolis, assistant state secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, said that plans had been completed for holding a boys' conference in Seymour March 23 and 24. High school boys in Jackson and other counties in southern Indiana will be invited to attend. T. J. Due, a member of the Seymour high school faculty, has been named chairman of the executive committee to arrange for the conference.

Connersville.—Work was started on a tabernacle to seat 2,000 persons and it is expected that the building will be ready for revival services soon. G. A. Klein, evangelist, has been conducting services at the Grand Avenue M. E. church and hundreds of persons have been unable to gain admission. This resulted in the decision to build the tabernacle on a lot adjoining the church.

Anderson.—Discovery that the eighteen-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Surratt of Summitville was born with a fractured leg, was made by an X-ray examination here. The child had displayed slight lameness. The X-ray picture revealed that the bone of the leg had been broken and has healed. It is said that an operation will remedy the condition.

Terre Haute.—The monthly district meeting of county agricultural agents was held in the office of M. B. Nugent, Vigo county agent. Plans for the coming spring and summer were discussed. One of the most important parts of the year's program, Mr. Nugent said, will be the work of wiping out tuberculosis in the herds of cattle of the district.

Shelbyville.—Four Shelby county farmers have been notified of their eligibility to certificates in the judging of prize corn in the state. The honors were awarded by the Indiana Corn Growers' association to Hannibal Arnold, Marion township; Ralph Kolkheier, Liberty township; Hal V. Gray and H. C. McConnell, Sugar Creek township.

Lebanon.—The Masonic bodies of Lebanon, through the Masonic Holding association, have appointed a committee to present plans for a new $100,000 temple to be built at Washington and East streets. The members of the committee are Lester F. Jones, W. H. Orear, Jr., and Ben H. Coombs and they will visit a number of Indiana cities having Masonic temples.

Terre Haute.—Mrs. Amanda E. Gosnell of West Terre Haute was recommended by Everett Sanders, representative in the congress, for appointment as postmaster at West Terre Haute. Mrs. Gosnell has been serving as deputy postmaster. She is a Republican precinct committeewoman in West Terre Haute. She was highest in the civil service test.

Wabash.—The Bridges & Speicher business block, erected in 1895, has been sold to F. A. Purdy of Columbus, O., for a consideration of $50,000, which includes transfer of one of Purdy's farms in Ohio, valued at $15,000. Mr. Purdy announces he will make improvements aggregating $25,000 or more on the building, one of the largest blocks in Wabash.

Shelbyville.—Mrs. Sibyl Stevens Ferris was honored at a gathering of her children and their families to celebrate her ninetieth birthday anniversary. Mrs. Ferris is one of the oldest citizens of Shelbyville and recently suffered a [illegible] stroke of paralysis. She was born in [illegible] county, Ohio, and was married to the late Edwin P. ENGINEER SAYS IT IS WORLD-BEATER

"My Digestion Is Sound as a Dollar Since Taking Tanlac," Declares Buffalo Citizen.

"There is no doubt about it, Tanlac does all they claim it will do—and more," was the positive statement made recently by Richard H. Lawson, well-known engineer, of 1007 Elmwood Ave., Buffalo, N. Y.

"I used Tanlac for a combination of troubles and it put me in splendid condition all the way round. First, I had a bad case of stomach trouble, was simply chock full of sourness and gas, had a general distressed feeling and a burning pain in my stomach that I couldn't get rid of. With my appetite wrecked and digestion gone, I became awfully weak, nervous and run down and could get scarcely any rest or sleep at all.

"Tanlac answered every demand made upon it in my case and today my digestion is sound as a dollar, I have an immense appetite, and with every ache and pain gone, I am sleeping fine and feeling strong and energetic as of old. Tanlac is 100 % good."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

SEEMS TO BE TOO EXACTING

Character in Novel Would Appear to Demand a Whole Lot From His Fellow Men.

Thus in Forrest Reid's "Pender Among the Residents," the hero slides from adventure into criticism:

"My idea of poetry, you see, is of a mysterious thing—a kind of mixture of enchantment and music—something immensely primitive—a survival—old—old as Egyptian magic.

"That kind of poetry obviously can't be taught, and everything Trefusis does has been taught to him. I don't mean to say technique isn't of great importance, and, of course, it is quite proper that Trefusis should learn something about rhyme and meter; but rhyme and meter, however, dazzlingly handled, in themselves are no more than the walls of the house.

"I mean, unless it is a haunted house there is for me no poetry."

When the ghost walks for Pender, we suppose it has to be not with measured, but with metered, tread.—Chicago Journal.

A Bit Late.

One day on the golf course, says an English paper, Field Marshal Haig asked his caddie what service he had seen during the war.

"One of my brothers," the caddie replied, "was in the infantry, one in the artillery and one was in the engineers."

"But you?"

"Well, I didn't do anyfink," replied the caddie. "But I'm going to do my bit now. I'm going to carry your bloomin' clubs for nuffink!"

HOW PHONE SYSTEM BEGAN

There Were Only Eight Subscribers and the Switchboard Was by Way of a Joke.

One switchboard, with a capacity of eight subscribers' stations—that was the beginning of telephone service, the first step toward the commercial development of the late Alexander Graham Bell's now famous invention. A crude switchboard had been used in Boston in 1877, but only for experimental and demonstration purposes. Its chief function was to convince the people of Boston and casual visitors of the utility of the telephone and of its future possibilities, says Telephone Press Service.

The ancestor of the modern commercial telephone switchboard was installed in New Haven, Conn., in 1878. From its eight lines has been evolved the network of wires and cables which covers the country from coast to coast.

From a single switchboard the number of central offices within a city has increased to over 100. From less than a dozen subscribers' stations, the total within the limits of a single city has mounted in several cases to over 100,000 and in one case to over 1,000,000. Under one roof as many as 20,000 lines are switched and central offices are now planned with a capacity of more than double that number.

Chauffeurs Give Horses "Lift."

A friend in need spirit prevails among the truckmen and chauffeurs on Chambers street and other important crosstown streets during and after a snowstorm. The horses, after many escapes from falling, became frightened and are unable to pull their loads.

The spirit of co-operation then comes to the front and ends threatened traffic jams. Chauffeurs of big automobile trucks drive up behind the stalled truck and push it along ahead until the horses regain their footing.—New York Sun.

BUSINESS MEN LIKE OTHERS

Somewhat Prevalent Error Is in Considering Them to Be Something of a Race Apart.

Orators and literary folk of a certain widespread school seem to imagine that business men are all alike; that is, dishonest and prosperous from robbing the poor. The truth is many business men are themselves poor. Many of them fail because of unreliability, idleness, extravagance, lack of intelligence.

Business men are like any other class of men; some of them capable, reliable, industrious and successful, and some of them the reverse. Thousands of proletarians are in business, as thousands of our best men are working for wages and in training to occupy the big positions and enjoy the big incomes. In any group of business men, most of them do not amount to much, as is the case in any other group. The rich were robbed in Russia because they were aristocrats by birth. It cannot be done in the United States because here the well-to-do come up from the ranks, and are the best fighters as well as the best money makers.—From E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Not Always a Good Rule.

"You must keep your eye on the ball."

"Bah! I've made some of my best shots with my eyes shut."

A Dead One.

"He has no ambition at all."

"No, he never tries to pass another car on a hill."

"One hour and twenty minutes of each business day—or one entire day a week—is demanded of every able-bodied person in the United States to maintain government. That is the lesson of the recent analysis showing that one-sixth of our national income goes for taxes, federal, state and local."

Amounts received as alimony do not have to be included in the income taxation of the person receiving them, nor may they be deducted from the gross income of the person paying them. In this respect, payment of alimony may be likened to a personal or living expense, which is not deductive. However, a woman who has won a breach of promise case, or has accepted out of court a settlement as heart balm, must include the amount in her income tax return. The Bureau of Internal Revenue has ruled in such cases that the amount received "is not to be regarded as a return of capital, since the benefits of which the injured party was deprived were merely anticipatory."

LOOKING FORWARD

"Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward tho mark.

The last chapter in 1922 is ended two months past and the new Year is well on its way, so once more we have entered upon the cycle of new and untried experiences which will mark another milestone in life's journey.

We can have a happy year in very truth when we know that we have played our part in the game of life well, when we have been fair, just and reasonable with our associates and have been sympathetic and progressive in home and community life.

We press toward the work of a better service and a greater business.

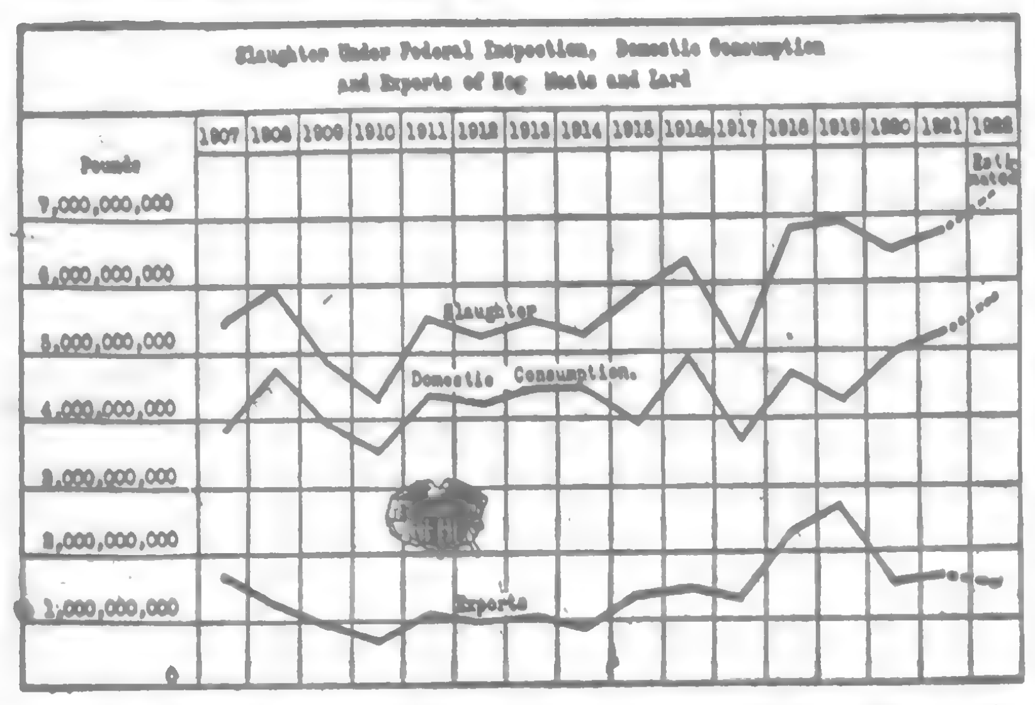
PRESENT CONDITIONS AND TRADE TENDENCIES IN THE HOG MARKET



The hog industry has been greatly stimulated in the last 18 months as a result of a favorable hog-corn price ratio. The quantity of hog meats and lard produced under federal inspection duing 1922 was the largest on record.

Production Expanding.

The following estimates and surveys made by the United States Department of Agriculture point to larger production in 1923 than in 1922:

1. The number of hogs being raised for market on farms on September 1, 1922, was estimated at 7.4 per cent larger than a year previous. Receipts at the seven leading markets in the last four months show an even larger increase over the corresponding period a year ago.

2. The number of litters farrowed in the fall of 1922, according to the department's survey, was 18.6 per cent greater than in the fall of 1921. An average of 6.1 pigs were saved per litter compared with 6 pigs in the fall of 1921. Market receipts during the spring and summer of 1923 will be most affected by the number of fall pigs.

3. The number of sows bred to farrow during the first six months of 1923, the department finds, will be 13 per cent more than the number which actually farrowed in the spring of 1922 provided farmers carry out their expressed intentions. These pigs will begin to come to market in September and will comprise a large share of the receipts during the last quarter of the year.

Bad weather during the spring farrowing period or an epidemic of hog cholera or other disease may greatly reduce the pig crop but barring such accidents and assuming that the foregoing estimates of the Department of Agriculture are approximately correct, we may conclude that the number of hogs raised for market in 1923 will be about 15 per cent larger than in 1922.

Production was augmented in 1922 by carrying hogs to greater weight than usual but the advance in corn prices may check this tendency during 1923 although it has not done so thus far.

Record Consumption.

Domestic consumption of hog meats and lard slaughtered under federal inspection in 1922 as well as production was the largest on record. It is significant also that consumption was about 30 per cent above the pre-war average compared with a population increase of 12 to 14 per cent. However, the remaining slaughter on farms and in non-inspected slaughtering establishments has increased much less than the inspected slaughter so that the total increase in consumption in 1922 over pre-war years was about 20 per cent.

With a further increase of possibly 10 to 15 per cent in production in 1923, the question which hog growers should be pondering is whether the consumptive demand will expand enough to absorb this increase without eventually depressing prices below the average cost of production. The prospect of an increase in the production of beef, lamb and poultry in [illegible] as compared with 1922 is a [illegible] as these compete with pork to [illegible]

The [illegible] trend of corn prices [illegible] [illegible] corn to fluctuate from time to time with hogs alternately above and below a profitable ratio with corn. Since hogs have been on a profitable basis for a longer period than usual, it is to be expected that an unprofitable period will be encountered in the normal course of events.

Twenty Per Cent Exported.

About 25 per cent of the hog meats and lard slaughtered under federal inspection on the aevrage during the past ten years has been sold for export. In 1922 only about 20 per cent was exported, although clearances were about 50 per cent larger than in the years immediately prior to the war. Foreign countries undoubtedly need large quantities of hog products as their hog population has not fully recovered from the reduction during the war and feed grain crops in Europe in 1922 were small. But financial, industrial and political conditions abroad are such that it does not seem advisable to count on larger purchases in 1923 than in 1922, and they may decline. The situation in Germany, which is one of the chief buyers of our hog meats and lard, illustrates the uncertainty of the foreign market.

Receipts Heaviest in Dec. and Jan.

In interpreting what has been said as to the outlook for the hog market, the seasonal trends of receipts and hog prices must be considered. Normally receipts are heaviest in December and January, declining toward spring, rising in early summer but not becoming nearly as heavy as during the winter, then declining again in late summer to the smallest of the year and rising once more as winter approaches. Prices tend to fluctuate more or less inversely with receipts.

The accompanying chart shows the volume of domestic consumption and exports and slaughter of hog meats and lard under the federal meat inspection service for each year back to 1907. The figures for 1922 were partly estimated but for all the other years were compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture. Production shows a more pronounced upward trend since 1910 than consumption but both were at record levels in 1922.

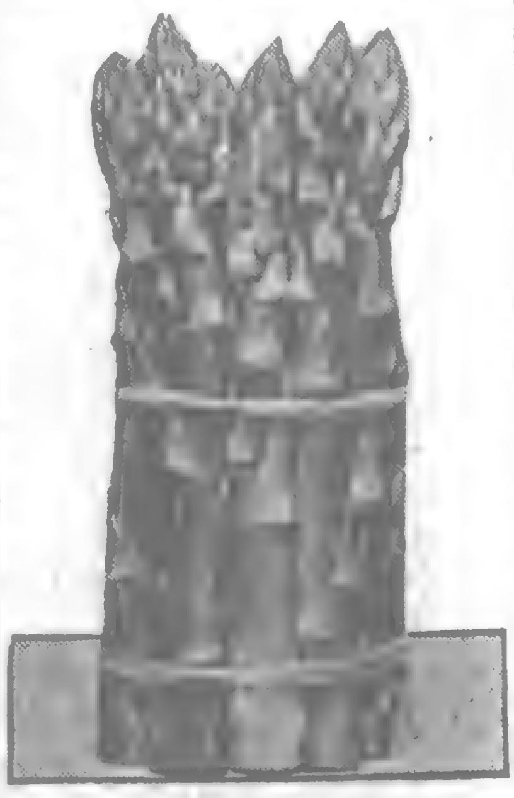
Radishes of Quality Can Be Grown in Almost Any Soil, but the Conditions Should Be Favorable, to Get the Best Results. Must Be Grown Steadily and Quickly.

GROW ASPARAGUS IN HOME GARDEN

Splendid Early Spring Vegetable Is Good Antidote for That Lazy Feeling.

Asparagus is one of the very best antidotes for that sluggish, lazy feeling which overtakes everybody during the first warm days of spring. Nature has supplied the remedy for this condition by providing the proper green foods and asparagus is ready for use just when the need is greatest. Asparagus should find a place in every garden.

Asparagus plants can be set either in the fall or spring and no shoots should be cut for use until the third spring after setting. Manure the ground heavily, even spading manure into the subsoil, as the value of an asparagus bed depends upon the plants making a rank growth during the summer months and thus storing energy in their roots for the production of the edible shoots the following spring. Every year the plants should be kept well cultivated and fertilized. An asparagus bed generally reaches its best about the seventh year after planting.



One of the First Vegetables.

THE RADISH, FIRST GARDEN VEGETABLE

Pungent Appetizers Are Easily Grown—Main Difference in Type of Root.

The radish is practically a universal vegetable. It is now in the market the year around and rarely is there a garden planted without at least a short row or small patch broadcast to these pungent appetizers of the garden. There isn't a great difference in the various kinds of radish offered for sale by the seedsman and almost any of them will be successful. The main difference is in the type of root.

Stick a pencil blindly on almost any of them and order the one spiked and you will have good radishes if the garden conditions are suitable for growing good radishes at all.

In the South the radish can be grown outdoors almost all winter except in the colder sections, plantings being made every ten days or two weeks [illegible] In the North it is [illegible] to go into the ground [illegible] it should be [illegible] can be worked [illegible] and won't be hurt by a [illegible]

It is a [illegible] and must be grown [illegible] Hot [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] best. In case of doubt, French Breakfast in the olive shade, Scarlet Globe in the round, and some of the 20-day specialties can be recommended. Any of the long scarlet types give much the same result, the improvement in the newer varieties being in regularity and uniformity of growth.

Radish soil must be rich and fine and deeply worked. It is best to have the manure dug in during the fall, or if that has not been done it should be well rotted and well incorporated with the soil in the spring. Radishes will grow almost anywhere if the soil is rich and in almost any sort of soil except clay. Clay soil needs to be lightened with ashes or sand and copious dressings of manure spaded into it if radishes are to do their best in it. Radishes may be sown broadcast provided the seed is not scattered too thickly or in rows as close together as six inches.

COLOR MASSES OF SPECIAL FLOWERS

Care Should Be Used in Making Selection for Background and Borders.

Special flowers may be chosen to provide a mass of a particular color in the flower bed. The United States Department of Agriculture has prepared a convenient list, which also indicates the height to which the various flowers may be expected to grow, so that from it one may select plants for the background of the bed, or others for a low border, and at the same time make sure of mixing only those which harmonize.

Among white flowers, or those with pure white varieties, one may choose from the four-foot list, cosmos, dahlia and sweet-sultan, growing three feet; clarkia, cornflower, larkspur and scabiosa, reaching two and one-half feet; baby's breath, china aster, summer chrysanthemum, lupine, Japanese bell-flower, snapdragon, garden balsam and poppy, two feet; godetia, four-o'clock, rose everlasting and stock, one and one-half feet; candytuft, Iceland poppy, petunia, ageratum, lobelia, portulaca, sweet alyssum and verbena, growing only a foot high. A few flowers have varieties mixed with white ranging in height from the three-foot dahlia, down through salpiglossis, nemophila, pansy, petunia and pink.

Yellow flowers grow in great abundance. At four feet there are sunflowers, feather cockscomb and dahlias; strawflowers, zinnias and sunflowers, two and one-half feet high; calliopsis, summer chrysanthemum, African marigold, [illegible] and four-o'clock, two feet; [illegible] Cape marigold, French marigold, Iceland poppy, California poppy, dwarf marigold and [illegible] one foot. Many of these [illegible] with yellow, as well as [illegible] and salpiglossis, [illegible] and the [illegible] and pansies.

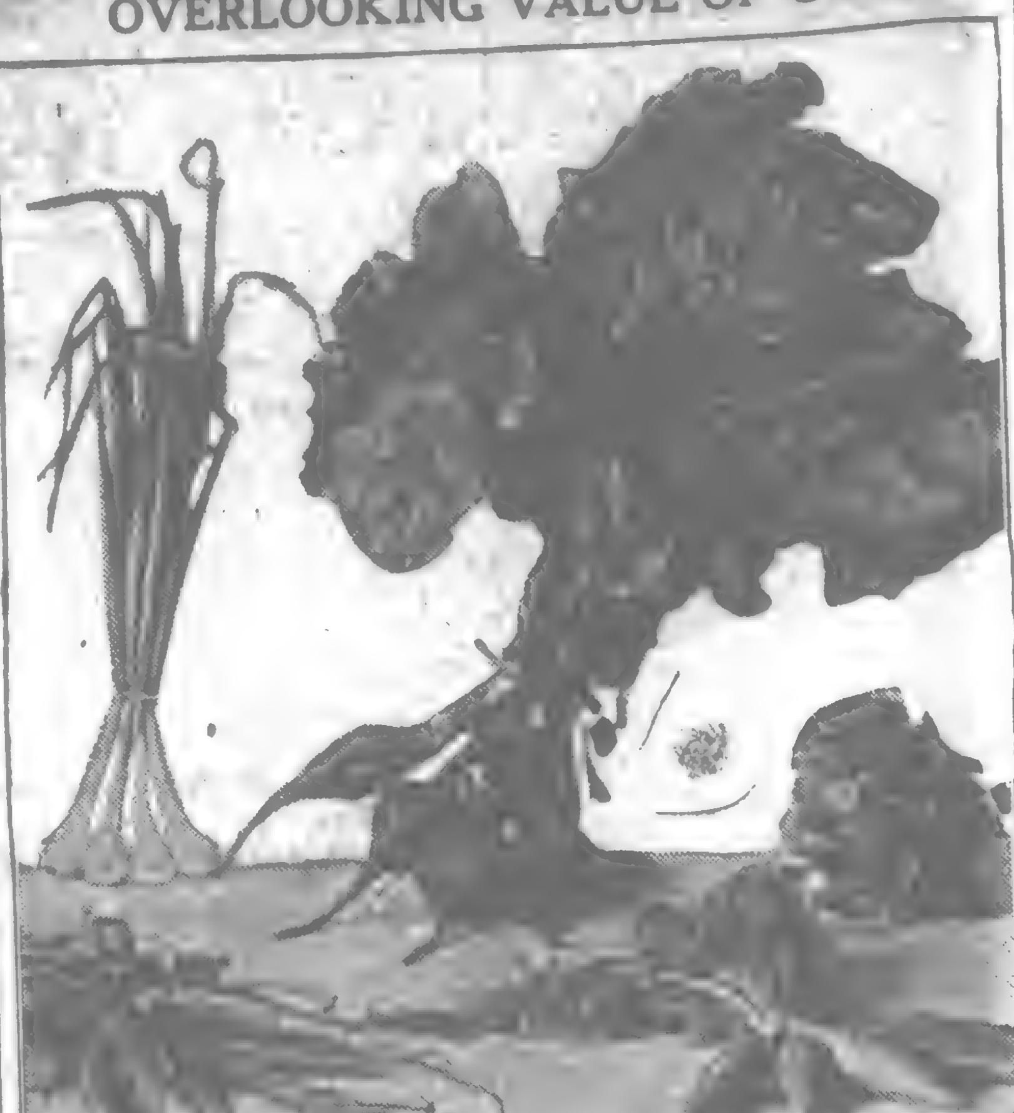
MANY SUCCESSFUL FARMERS ARE OVERLOOKING VALUE OF GARDEN



No Other Similar Area of Land on Farm Makes Greater Return Than Garden.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many successful farmers of the present day own an automobile and a tractor, sometimes more than one automobile or more than one tractor. These are considered necessary equipment in the conduct of their work. The automobile and tractor require constant attention and care to keep them in running order and up to full efficiency. The same is true of the work horses on the farm. They must be fed and housed and given proper attention if they are to do the work required of them. But is the welfare of the farmer himself and his family being looked after as thoroughly as that of his automobile, his tractor and his farm team? Is his table as well supplied with foods that make for efficiency and the highest type of both physical and mental development? It is generally supposed that the farmer lives well, but there is abundant evidence to show that in many cases he does not. In fact, his table is often not so well supplied with desirable fruits and vegetables as are the tables of the people living in the cities who are supplied from his and other farms.

Garden Sidetracked.

The farm garden, which during the early days of civilization in this country was a recognized institution, has in a measure and to a considerable degree been sidetracked in the tendency toward farm specialization. This is especially true in the "one crop" sections. The argument advanced by the farmers is "that it does not pay to have a garden, since one or two more acres of cotton, corn or wheat will bring enough money to buy all the vegetables needed by the family." The fact is that the money received for the cotton, corn or wheat go to pay running expenses and the vegetables are not purchased and the farmer and his family go without this element of their living.

It is reported that one western wheat farmer was offered only 63 cents a bushel for his 1922 wheat crop which cost him 92 cents a bushel to produce. It is difficult to see how that farmer can purchase many fruits or vegetables for his table on the profits of his wheat crop. The argument that it does not pay to have a garden can be disproved, for it is a fact that no other similar area of land on the farm gives so great a return in actual value as the garden. The truth of the matter is the average farmer who plants a garden uses the products on his own table without making any calculation as to their value. At the end of the season the vegetables have been eaten and forgotten about and the impression on the mind of the farmer is that they had no value.

Valuation of Garden.

From the development of the thousands of backyard and community gardens, also the garden work conducted by the boys' and girls' clubs, fostered by the United States Department of Agriculture, a basis for the valuation of farm and backyard gardens has been established. Market values of $75 to $150 from one-tenth acre of land are numerous and it is safe to estimate that one-half acre of well cared for farm garden will give a value of not less than $150 per season.

IMPORTANT TO KEEP HARNESS IN REPAIR

Parts Should Be Adjusted to Fit Horses Properly.

Not Difficult to Allow Team Few Days Rest in Severe Weather—Renew All Broken or Badly Worn Pieces.

Every farmer realizes the importance of having a first-class set of team and light harness. It is not only essential that the parts are adjusted so as to fit the horses properly, but the harness requires to be occasionally dressed with some softening preservative, so that it will be kept strong, durable and attractive.

As it takes a day or two to go over the harness in a thorough manner, it is well to choose a time when there is no work for the horses. However, it will not be difficult to allow the horses a few days' rest during the winter weather.

When dressing a harness it is just as well to give it a good overhauling while you are at it. Take all the straps off the harness, breeching, backband and bridle apart. If any parts are broken or badly worn they should either be replaced or renewed. Then give all the parts a thorough washing with a good harness soap. This well rubbed in and applied with a sponge.

After the harness is well dried it can receive a dressing of some softening and waterproofing preservative, such as neatsfoot oil, or any of the other good dressings which are on the market.

CROPS FOR SPRING PLANTING

Rhubarb and Asparagus Do Better if Planted Early in Season—Rich Soil Needed.

Rhubarb and asparagus may be planted in the fall, but most gardeners prefer spring planting in the North. Fall planting will give good results in the South where the roots are not injured by frost. Both these plants thrive best in a very rich sandy loam, but will give good results in any soil that is not wet and is well filled with humus. Rhubarb roots containing one or two eyes are set about three inches deep in rows four feet apart and from two to four feet apart in the row, depending on the richness of the soil and variety. Pinnaeus and Victoria are popular varieties. Give frequent shallow cultivation during the growing season. Remove seed stalks when they appear. Asparagus needs much the same treatment.

MAKING USE OF CURRYCOMB

Best-Liked Grooming Tool for Lazy Man—Never Use It on Animal's Head or Legs.

The use of the currycomb is very much abused, because it is the best-liked grooming tool for the lazy man, as it makes possible a quick grooming. It should not be used [illegible] upon the animal's body, and never [illegible] the head or upon the [illegible] for dirt that cannot be [illegible] greatest use is for [illegible] brush. It does enable [illegible] grooming where it is [illegible] for the entire body, and in [illegible] heavy-coated, [illegible] it may do no particular harm.

ROAD BUILDING

LENGTH OF WORKING SEASON

Most Important Factor in Road Construction—There Is Considerable Variation.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The length of the working season is a most important element in road construction and one in which there is considerable variation, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has collected data from all of the states.

Deducting Sundays only there are 313 working days in the year, and Alabama, Mississippi and New Mexico report that grading is possible on 300 of them. Neighboring states report as follows: Florida, 265; Louisiana, 260, and Texas, 275. Contrasted with these are Maine, with 110; New York, 150; Wisconsin, 158, and western Oregon, 100. In 14 states grading will probably be impractical after the middle of November, and in some of them at an earlier date.

Building on One Side of Road While Other Is Open to Traffic.

Gravel surfacing can be placed in most of the states on from 120 to 200 working days, although 10 of them report a greater number.

In 26 states concrete surfacing can be placed on from 100 to 150 days, and in 16 states on from 150 to 200 days. In 28 states the season is generally over by November 1.

FINE STREET-PAVING RECORD

Total of 150 Miles Completed in City of Birmingham During the Year of 1922.

The street-paving record of Birmingham for the year 1922 is a gratifying one. A total of a hundred and fifty miles of paving has been completed. The nearly $800,000 invested could not have been spent in a better cause. The city as a whole has reached that stage of highway construction where continuous travel east, west, north or south inside the city limits over smooth and hard-surfaced thoroughfare is possible. Within another year the connecting links with the outlying suburbs still required for completion of the Greater Birmingham highway system will probably have been finished and the city may then look with real pride on her system of streets.

FINE HIGHWAY IN TENNESSEE

Largest Contract Ever Let in State Calls for Construction of 50 Miles of Road.

The largest highway contract ever let in Tennessee provides for 50.2 miles of new road in Grainger county, beginning at Fate Springs, 48 miles across Hawkins county and two miles in Sullivan county extending to Kingsport.

The new highway passes through the Holstein river valley for about 40 miles and lies between Bay mountain and Clinch mountain. The road will be surfaced with asphalt and will cost $1,887,000, or $27,700 a mile. It is a federal route.

HIGHWAY BUILDING IN TEXAS

Leads All Other States in Matter of Construction, Having Added 933 Miles.

Texas led all other states in the matter of road building in 1922, having added [illegible] the year. The average for [illegible] was [illegible] miles. Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

LESSON FOR MARCH 11

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:39-48, 54.

GOLDEN TEXT—Christ also hath once suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God.—I Peter 3:18.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matt 4:1-11; 26:32-46; I Cor. 10:13; Heb. 4:15, 16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—An Angel Helps Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Prays for Strength.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Stand the Hardest Test.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Submission to the Father's Will.

I. Jesus at the Mount of Olives (v. 39). He went from the upper room under cover of night to the garden of Gethsemane. Gethsemane means oil press. It is a place where the oil was crushed out of the olives. There is a striking significance in Jesus' coming to this place. Olive oil was precious, being used both for food and lighting. The bruising and crushing of Christ in this garden has yielded the largest blessings in the world. It has provided food for men's souls and light for their lives.

II. His Companions (vv. 39, 40). Peter, James and John, who had been with Him on the Mount of Transfiguration, were permitted to go with Him into the deep shadows of the garden. He took those who were best able to apprehend the meaning of the tragic hour to be His sympathizing companions. This was needed to prepare them as His witnesses. Then, too, as a human being He craved sympathy.

Jesus Praying (vv. 41-44).

1. He Withdrew From the Disciples (v. 41). Even these disciples of the "inner circle" could not go with him. He tore himself away from them for He must be alone in this darkest hour. He kneeled down and prayed.

2. What He Said (vv. 42-44). "If thou be willing remove this cup from me." The cup did not mean the physical sufferings of the cross, though they were very great. He did not now desire to escape from the cross and thus stop short of His redemptive work, for this was the supreme purpose of His coming into the world (Heb. 2:14). It was rather the revelation to Him by the cross which loomed before Him, of His identification with sin in becoming the world's Redeemer. By virtue of the holiness and perfection of His nature, He could do nothing else than shrink from it. He saw in this bearing of the sins of the world the turning away of His Father's face. Knowing what was before Him, He came to Gethsemane for this hour, and in it He consciously brought his human will into accord with the divine will. Though the cup was bitter he bowed in submission to the Father's will. So great was this agony that His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. In this crucial hour an angel from heaven strengthened him.

IV. The Disciples Sleeping (vv. 45, 46). They had boasted of their fidelity, but could not watch with Him for an hour. He had issued a word of warning to them, but they were so benumbed with sorrow that they failed. He gently rebuked them, and commanded that they rise and pray lest they enter into temptation.

V. Jesus Betrayed (vv. 47, 48).

1. The Betrayal (v. 47). This was done by Judas, one of the twelve. He had enjoyed the most intimate relations with the Lord, eating with Him, listening to His teaching, witnessing His marvelous miracles and enjoying His confidence.

2. The Sign of Betrayal (v. 47). It was the kiss, the token of the most tender affection and friendship. He now degrades it by making it the token of disloyalty and treason. Jesus' words to this infamous disciple shows the infinite tenderness of His heart. If Judas had been at all human this pathetic appeal would have smitten him to the very heart. How many professing disciples have proven their disloyalty to the Master and even betrayed Him. All who bear the name, Christian, and especially ministers and teachers who deny the virgin birth, Deity and vicarious atonement of Christ are following in the footsteps of Judas. May each one inquire, "Lord, is it I?"

VI. Jesus Arrested (v. 54).

The multitude around with swords and [illegible] led by Judas invaded the [illegible] of the garden and [illegible] Jesus and brought Him before the [illegible].

NERVOUS WOMAN COMPLETE WRECK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Indianapolis, Indiana.—"Now I want to tell you just what induced me to take your medicine. It seemed that I had some kind of weakness so that I could not carry a child its full time. The last time I was troubled this way I had a nervous breakdown and was a complete wreck. The doctor thought I would not live, and if I did that I would never be well and strong again. But I told them I was going to get well, that I was not going to die just then. My husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took six bottles of it. I soon got strong again and had three more children. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound ever since, and if you could see me now you would think I had always been well."—Mrs. MARY F. HERRICK, 234 Detroit St., Indianapolis, Ind.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire reproductive system, so that it may work in every respect effectually as nature intends.

Grippe

Physicians advise keeping the bowels open as a safeguard against Grippe or Influenza.

When you are constipated, not enough of Nature's lubricating liquid is produced in the bowel to keep the food waste soft and moving. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

Nujol is a lubricant—not a medicine or laxative—so cannot gripe. Try it today.

Pennies In The Box

I'm Uncle Sam's most favored pet,
  I'm hearty and I'm hale;
I've nothing in the world to do
  But glide around with mail.
But one thing nearly breaks my heart
  And my nervous system shocks,
It's the everlasting pennies
  That I'm fishing from the box.

I carry stamps and envelopes,
  And postal cards and such;
And I would like to sell a few—
  'Twould please me very much.
But a man can't sell unless you buy,
  No matter how he talks;
And so I've kept on diving
  After the pennies in the box.

It's all right in the spring time,
  Or when the summer breezes blow
But a different proposition
  When its thirty-two below;
When all your fingers and your toes
  Are frozen hard as rocks,
It's anything but funny.
  Scratching pennies from the box.

And now quite confidential,
  I'll tell you something more;
A rural carrier way out West
  Forgot himself and swore.
He said: "I can stand the snow-
    drifts,
  I can stand the frozen locks,
But blast the measley pennies
  In a blasted measley box."

When the "roll is called up yonder,"
  And we all shall gather there,
They wouldn't let a mail man in
  If they knew he'd learned to swear.
If you want St. Petes to open the gate
  When your rural carrier knocks,
Buy stamps and don't be guilty
  Of putting pennies in the box.

Your Carrier.

Postal Commandments

(By J.E.Johnson, Modale, Iowa.)

1. Thou shall not have lose change in the box for postage, for it means much discomfort and delay. Place the change in a cup or envelope, or better yet, provide yourself with a modest supply of stamps.

2. Blessed is he who keeps a supply of stamps on hand, for he shall bring much happiness unto the carrier, and shall be rewarded by more efficient service.

3. Thou shalt keep thy mail box closed, for rain and snow cometh like a thief in the night and filleth it up to the brim.

4. Thou shalt keep the approach to the box free from snow and other obstructions, and the box in such a position that it can be reached from the vehicle, with your name thereon; for, behold, I say unto you: wet feet, cold hands and delay are abominations unto the carrier.

5. Thou shalt have all mail ready upon the arrival of the carrier, for delay cripples the whole service.

6. Thou shalt address each letter or package plainly and upon the upper left-hand corner place thy name and address. for, verily, I say unto thee, the pieces of mail lost through neglect in addressing are numbered as the sands of the sea.

7. Blessed are they who insure their packages and register important letters, for by so doing loss is impossible, saith the Postmaster General.

8. Thou shalt [illegible] all packages securely. Verily [illegible] I say [illegible] many va[illegible] through careless [illegible] here be who [illegible] Postmaster [illegible]

Note Case In Court

F. B. Leighty has filed a complaint in the DeKalb circuit court against Harry G. Hursh on a promisory note and to foreclose a chatted mortgage. The complaint says that the defendant executed a note for $296 48 to the plaintiff on Jan. 15, 1922, due in one year, which he has failed to pay in full. The note was secured by a mortgage on the stock of goods and fixtures in the store of the Central Grocery in St. Joe. It also states that the defendent failed to keep the merchandise insured and the plaintiff was required to have it insured.

Butler Woman Dies

Mrs. Julia Ann Imhoff of Butler, died Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock from influensa and pneumonia after an illness lasting ten days. The deceased was born in 1850 and is survived by three children, Frank Aikens of Newville, Myrtle Blair of Butler, and Ines Chapman of Fremont.

Mrs. Imhoff was a member of the Order of the Eastern Star, the W. R. C. and the Christian church at Butler.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the residence in Butler and burial was made in the cemetery near Newville.

Personal

Two men were recently overheard discussing the current topic of popular inquiry, What Is Wrong with the Women. No conclusion was reached, but both parties agreed to go to the Methodist Protestant church on Saturday evening, March 24, and see how five young ladies conducted themselves when there was "Not a Man in the House."

Obituary

Harman Adelma Coburn, son of William R. and Lovesta Coburn, was born in Newville township, De Kalb County, Indiana, on May 23, 1873, and departed this life March 7, 1923, aged 49 years, 9 months, 14 days.

On July 30, 1895 he was united in marriage to Bertha May Wade. To this union were born 6 children, Floyd L. Coburn, Garrett, Indiana; Mrs. A. F. Wilmot, Fort Wayne, Indiana; Ethel L. Coburn, Hicksville, Ohio: Edith Pauline Coburn; William R. Coburn, and Georgia May Coburn who reside at home. He also leaves one brother,, Calvin L. Coburn, Hicksville Ohio, and five sisters, Mrs. Amanda Brown, St. Joe, Indiana; Mrs. Wallace Abel Newville, Indiana; Mrs. E. N. Wade, Petoskey, Michigan, Mrs. Ella Wilmot, St Joe, Indiana, and Mrs. A. D. Perry, St. Joe, Indiana; and 2 grandchildren, besides a host of relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

Mr. Coburn united with the Church of Christ at Coburn Corners in March 1886, and to the date, of his death lead a steadfast Christian life. He was also a member of the Modern Woodman of America for sixteen years, and for a number of years the I. O. O. F. at St. Joe, Ind.

Mr. Coburn spent most of his life in DeKalb County, Indiana, except three years in Hicksville, Ohio. He was an industrious and faithful employee of different firms and was a faithful husband and kind father. He will be sorely missed by the family and the large circle of friends. He was always a useful and active member of the church, and was always willing to use his musical talent for the benefit of the church service.

The funeral services were conducted from the Coburn's Corners Church Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock with Rev. J. O. Rose of Angola and B. F. Martin of LaFountaine, officiating. Burial was made in the Alton cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, director.

Henry Reinoehl Shot Self

B.&O. Brakman of Garrett

Only an Accident

Henry S. Reinoehl, a Baltimore and Ohio brakeman, shot and dangerously wounded himself while alone at the home of Vern Wisner, in Garrett Saturday evening.

Reinoehl is a son of John Reinoehl, formerly of this place Henry's mother is dead. He lived on his father's farm near Ashley until about March 1, when he went to Garrett and entered the employ of the railroad company. He resided at the Wisner home.

Mr. and Mrs. Wisner were at Willard and Reinoehl says he found Mr. Wisner's revolver and a single cartridge on a dresser Saturday evening about 7 o'clock. He placed the weapon, a 38 calibre gun, and the cartridge in his pocket and went up town. After buying some candy he returned home. While sitting in the kitchen eating candy, Reinoehl says he was examining the revolver. He pulled the trigger while the gun was pointed towards his body. The bullet entered just below the breast bone and passed through the diaphragm, the lower part of the left lung and through his stomach, and lodged in his back.

The yonth fell to the floor, but retained his consciousness and managed to crawl through the house and out into the front yard, where he called for help. His cries were heard by the H. C. W. Bartles family, who live across the street. Mr. Bartles found Reinoehl lying in the front yard of the Wisner home. Dr. John W. Thomson was summoned and the wounded youth was removed to the Sacred Heart hospital. An operation was performed and the bullet was located and removed.

While Reinoehl seemed to be resting well Monday, it is feared he may not recover from his wounds.

There was quite a large attendance at church last Sunday evening and Rev. Lineberry preached a very interesting and appropriate sermon.

Most of the country schools closed last week.

Mrs. Walter Lawson Dead

Friends at this place were very much shocked when a telephone message from Decatur told of the death of Mrs. Walter Lawson of flu and pneumonia. While the Lawson family were never residents of this place they had many friends here, Mr. Lawson having been director and organizer of the St. Joe Community Welfare Band. The family also played as an orchestra at the Christian church about three years ago, for several months. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lawson and Mrs. Harvey Lindley left Saturday morning for Decatur.

A man entered a crowded railway carriage, and placed a heavy box, almost as big as a trunk, on the parcels' rack.

A nervous passenger was sitting underneath, and kept looking at the bulky package, fearing it would fall on him. For some time he managed to keep silent, but when the train went over a point in the rails, and the box gave an ominous lurch, he turned to the owner, saying:

"Excuse me, but do you think that box is quite safe?"

"Oh, yes," replied the other cheerfully. "It's locked, you know."—The Scotsman.

CHAPTER XII

—13—

Drace was far too disturbed in mind to sleep, and before the sun was high he walked out alone in the garden, to muse upon his situation. Slowly he paced his way along the path. Someone spoke, and he turned to face the man Batoche.

"Monsieur, a note."

Drace took the paper and hastened into the summer house.

The note was brief, but full in the expression of what had befallen Nadine, something to throb with the telling of it: "As soon as you can, my love' one, you must come to me to take me from the man I thought my father, but who is the awful brute. Yesterday he called me a she-wolf and told me I am not his daughter; and when he told me, my heart was light, for then I have not within me the murderer's blood. Come not alone, Virgil, for Tony will be here, and both of them watch. I am locked a prisoner in my room, and tomorrow they take me to Memphis to make me marry Monsieur Boyce. But I fear not so long as I know you come."

Quickly Drace slipped up to his room, buckled on his pistol, found a rope, looped it with a hangman's noose and tucked it beneath his coat. Nadine was not Stepho's daughter; now he was free to act! Swift was he to answer the appeal, but he was set against her caution, the advice to bring someone with him. It was his fight alone, the execution of his oath, which was not dead like the autumn leaf, but fresh like the new leaf in the spring. He would shoot Tony, the dog, and then string up his master.

No one saw him, not even the watchful Tycie, and he hastened toward Willow Head, not having found a boat at the landing. Never had the river seemed so broad, the current so swift. At last his canoe touched in among the cane roots at the island's edge. He leaped ashore, but was cautious in the cane, an Indian in stealth as he approached the house. He heard not a sound, saw no smoke issue from the chimney. Perhaps the wolves were in wait for him, to snap him, but he was now in full view, and he ran at the top of his speed. But near the house he halted, peering about, looked in at the door of the main room, found it deserted, then walked softly around to the barred window. Nadine spoke before he recognised her, standing in the twilight of her prison.

"My heart was loud to tell me you would come, Virgil. And you brought no one with you. But of that there was no need now."

He stood in silence looking at her, his strength exerted against a bar at the window, to tear it loose, but the wrought-iron nails were too long, and he could not budge them.

"The ax, Virgil! Is it lying there?"

Acting upon her suggestion, and with no caution now against making a noise, he cut the bars away and helped her through the window.

"Nadine, he said, "my oath must now be kept."

His arms about her, he stood pressing her close, and never had he felt so strong, and surely never so determined. Her eyes half closed, her head on his arm, she did not speak. She looked as if she were at rest, and dreaming. He kissed her, and her eyes flashed wide.

"I have come to hang the monster that called you a she-wolf."

"When I have told you, yes. And now you will listen. Early I thought I heard Tony and my—I mean Stepho la Vitte, go out. But Stepho was not walking with Tony, the strong man, but was dragged out in the rocking-chair; for some time in the night come the strange stroke, and Stepho was paralyzed."

"Nadine! What are you saying?"

"I am saying that you must listen. Tony came to the window and told me what was happen'. I ask him to let me out, but he would not, for he wants to please Stepho till the last, on account of the money that may be somewhere hid. He went for the doctor, and he came but has gone away again, for I hear him say he can do no good. The old man was out in his chair where he so often sit; and we will go see him, for it will not be for long. Let us forget all and be kind when death was come, Virgil."

"Yes, but where is Tony now?"

"I think he is looking for the money. Let us go now to the poor old man."

"You forgive easily, Nadine."

She looked at him in wonderment.

"How can we not forgive when the heart say we must, Virgil? He use me for the trap, which I will explain all to you, but he give me the chance to be with you, and for that I thank him—and for not being my sure-enough father. . . . Come with me."

. . . .

Old Stepho sat in his chair asleep, but as they approached him, he opened his eyes, looked at Nadine, then at Drace.

"Monsieur was ver' strong. An' I kill you if I be not struck down like the beef. An' Tony kill you if he here, but I send him off for something. Ah, the leetle gel, she hate me now?"

"Monsieur," she said, "I cannot find it in my heart to hate. It is the poison. Many times you were kind, and I remember them."

He bowed his head, and through his tangled lashes looked up at Drace, fire gleaming through brushwood. But he spoke to Nadine, turning upon her a less malignant glance.

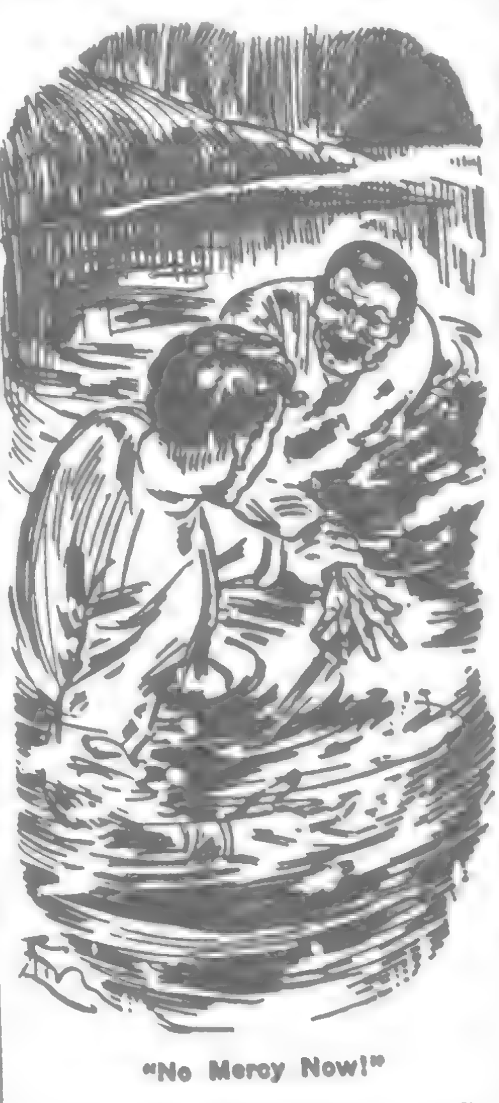
"The paralyze, it begin down here an' creep up. When it touch the heart, I was go. I say just now that Tony, he would kill the strong monsieur. He would not. He be scared when I was done. . . .

"Your name, leetle gel," pursued Stepho, "was Walton—the daughter of a northern man who live in the same town with Mr. Drace's father near Cincinnati. You an' your mother were carried off by my men; but your mother, she fall from the horse just as we come to our camp and she die. About her neck was a purse with money and papers—one that tell where more money is buried. After the war I go back and dig up this money, but I keep it for you, for your dowry. It is here—buried under the hearthstone. . . . Now—now I beg you to go for Father Tahan. You know where he live. Quick, for it creep up."

"Yes, I will go. Virgil will stay to keep you company."

"Let me go with you," Drace pleaded, fearful that some harm might befall her.

"No, my love' one," she gently opposed him. "You must stay here for no harm can come to me now. Stay here and be kind to him, for kindness is the will of the One above. You will, yes?"



"No Mercy Now!"

She kissed him fondly, and the old wolf-eyes closed, that they might not see. Now she was ready to go. Virgil steadied the canoe for her and gently shoved it off. She threw him a kiss, and rounding a green cape, raised her paddle into the sunlight and flashed him adieu.

. . . .

Drace returned to Stepho's chair, the old man shagging his brows at him.

Then thinking of the rope still buttoned tightly beneath his coat, he tore it out and threw it away. Nature, he reflected, had usurped his task, and he could safely turn over to her his claims. A slight noise behind him; he looked quickly about, and there a few feet behind him at the edge of the cane stood Tony. Upon him the vision of Drace's countenance came, it seemed, with a startling flash. Instantly he fell back, through the cane fringe, into the bayou. Loudly he cried for help.

"Oh, monsieur," implored the old man, "please he'p heem queek. He can no swim. An' he die befo' hees sins they was forgive. He'p the po' wretch, monsieur. Queek, monsieur."

Virgil threw off his coat and his pistol-belt, and leaped into the water. A moment before, he would have shot the beast; now he would save him.

Tony was not in sight. But soon he arose, swimming, and Drace saw a knife in his hand. In the water Tony was as much at home as a beaver! He dived, and Virgil knew now that it was his aim to dart beneath him and with the knife to rip him as a skillful swimmer rips a crocodile. But in the water the strong man, young Drace, was at home, too, and turning about with a quick swirl, he waited. Tony came up; and now they came toward each other, like rival otters—grappled and struggled, treading water, shoulders up. Virgil caught Tony's left wrist, wrenched his arm limp and helpless, seized him by the throat, his left hand steel-gripped about the murderous right wrist, the knife hand.

No mercy now! Fire and water, their game! Down, gasping, down! The head beneath the surface, the hand still out, striving to stab. Slowly the hand opened; the knife dropped; the hand closed—half opened, was limp. Drace turned loose his grip. The body sank.

Virgil swam ashore and came dripping out of the cane. The old man spoke:

"Tony! Whar he?"

"I have drowned him."

"Monsieur was ver' strong!"

"If I had brought him to the shore, he would have sneaked a chance to murder me."

"He was the bad man, yes. He ought be dead, yes. I was to keel heem bimeby. He keel the man here not long 'go. Twice he go keel you, an' once he snap the pistol. I set the trap for you to be stabbed in the water. Then there be no blood to tell the tale. Now I am so sor'. Will monsieur pull me into the house?"

"No. You would reach for a pistol to shoot me. Stay where you are."

"Monsieur have still suspicion. We wait."

. . . .

Virgil put on his coat, his belt, and sat down on the grass. The old man was silent, his eyes closed. He might be dead, but no matter. More than an hour dragged by, the breeze moaning in the cane. Virgil arose and stood near the chair. Stepho opened his eyes, but was silent. Virgil sat down again and waited, the wind tangling the tops of the cane.

He heard the canoe coming.

Father Tahan was kindly and soft of voice. For many a despairing wretch he had held the Cross. At sight of him old Stepho's eyes were still hard. Time wears granite away, but does not mellow it. Not yet had he granted mercy, and for no pity could he hope.

"Father, this is the man I would keel. I hate heem, the carpetbagaire."

"It is not true," said Virgil, standing near. "I fought against the carpetbaggers in June, in New Orleans, when they were hanging a man. I cut him down."

How great can be an instant change! The old wolf-eyes dewed soft.

"Oh, monsieur, I was that man! They hang me. I hear of the brave man, but I not know it was you. Please forgive me. . . . Tek the leetle gel, an' I know you be kind to her. She love you. For you she would die. Monsieur, I beg you not to think so hard of me. . . . No, my leetle gel, you must not cry."

"I did not know you," said Drace. "A cloth was about your features. Think not of it now. Listen to the one who has come with a message of peace and forgiveness."

The priest devoted himself to his sacred offices. The wind moaned softly in the cane. . . .

The priest spoke presently to Virgil. "She must not stay here. Take her away, and I will see that everything shall be done."

Nadine stood with Virgil's coat pulled close about her face. And into his heart she spoke:

"The sun is low, Virgil. But you leave me now no more."

IS STILL A MYSTERY TO CHEMISTS

Men of Science Have Not Yet Discovered the Real Nature of the X-Ray.

It was in 1895 that Prof. Conrad Roentgen, the famous German physicist, announced the discovery of the fact that if a current of electricity be passed through a certain kind of glass bulb, from which the air had been exhausted, the resultant "light" (so called in spite of the fact that it is not apparent to the eye), would penetrate the flesh and other semi-solid substances and reveal objects on the other side. For want of a better name to give to this disturbance of the ether, Professor Roentgen called it the X-ray, "x" being the accepted symbol for an unknown quantity.

The real nature of the X-ray is still undiscovered. The ray itself is generated by a battery, the wires of which are connected with two electrodes, one of which is a concave disc of aluminum and the other a flat disc of platinum. The current is then discharged through a glass vacuum tube and produces the ether disturbance which renders flesh or clothing semi-transparent, while glass, metals, bones and mineral substances are generally opaque to it.

Grip Left You a Bad Back?

DOES your back ache day after day with a dull, unceasing throb? Are you worn out, and discouraged — ready to "give up?" Then why not look to your kidneys. Chances are a cold or a chill has weakened your kidneys? Poisons have accumulated that well kidneys would filter off. It's little wonder, then, you have constant backache, headaches, dizzy spells, annoying bladder irregularities, and sharp rheumatic twinges — that you feel nervous, "blue" and irritable. Don't wait for serious kidney trouble. Get back your health while you can. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Grateful Folks:

E. W. Morgan, 519 Providence St., Delta, Colo., says: "A cold settled on my kidneys and caused kidney complaint. I had a steady ache across my kidneys and in my limbs. If I stooped to lift anything, I suffered with sharp pains in my back. My kidneys were disordered and the secretions passed too often. I heard about Doan's Kidney Pills and used a few boxes of Doan's and the backache stopped and my kidneys became healthy."

Mrs. A. M. Dunbar, 733 Washington Ave., Defiance, Ohio, says: "I keep Doan's kidney Pills on hand all the time and find them a valuable remedy. Every once in a while my kidneys get out of order when I take cold or overwork. I also have a weakness and dull aching across my back and feel tired and languid. At these times my kidneys act irregularly. Doan's Kidney Pills have never failed to give me quick relief and strengthen my back and kidneys."

GOVERNOR KILLS SPEEDWAY BILL

Veterans Lose in Fight Over Memorial Day Event at Indianapolis.

IS CALLED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Wild Scenes in Assembly During the Closing Session—Lake County Republican Representative Resigns His Membership.

Indianapolis.—Governor McCray vetoed the bill, passed by the Indiana senate and house, proposing to prohibit holding the annual 500-mile automobile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on Memorial day.

The bill had been sponsored in a stormy career through the legislature by the state department of the American Legion. It was bitterly fought by civic and business organizations of Indianapolis, Marion county posts of the Legion, and several other patriotic orders. The attitude of the state department of the Legion brought denunciations by local posts, which have split with the organization.

Called Unconstitutional.

The governor's action was based on advice of Attorney General Lesh that the bill is unconstitutional, in that it is aimed solely at the motor speedway and is class legislation. Mr. Lesh's opinion was concurred in by a number of other prominent attorneys.

The senate, at the closing night session, refused to override the veto and the bill is dead.

During one of the most tempestuous scenes ever enacted in an Indiana legislature Representative James I. Day of Lake county, Republican, resigned his membership in the house and repudiated the acts of the Republican majority when a joint conference report on the automobile license fee bill was hurriedly accepted at the closing session of the house.

The report, which contained important changes and amendments, was adopted without explanation of any kind and without a roll call.

Wildest Confusion.

This was the signal for a wild outburst by Democratic members, who leaped to their feet and shouted loudly in protest. Mingled with bitter denunciations of the "steam-roller" tactics of the majority, the pleas of several for "adjournment and peace" were lost in the hubbub. Motions for adjournment and recess were ignored and shouted down.

Far Reaching Laws.

Perhaps the most far-reaching of any of the bills that are now laws are three relating to prohibition. One is an amendment to the 1917 prohibition law which increases the penalties for violation of the section of the state prohibition law which makes it unlawful to possess, manufacture, transport, sell or give away intoxicating liquor. This is the Dunn act, introduced by Senator Oliver E. Dunn (Morgan, Owen and Hendricks, Rep.), and it, along with the other liquor laws, was backed by the Indiana Anti-Saloon league.

The principal change that the amendment makes is that it is now mandatory that judges impose sentences for first offense of the section of the prohibition law and suspended sentences are prohibited. A fine of from $100 to $500 may be imposed for first offense and imprisonment in the county jail for from thirty days to six months. Second and subsequent offenses of the "hip pocket" section of the liquor law, are punishable by a sentence of from one to two years and a fine of from $200 to $1,000.

Made a Felony.

The new liquor law which makes it a felony for any person to have any amount of intoxicating liquor in his automobile, buggy, wagon or airplane, is the one which has raised the most objection from persons not friendly to the "dry" laws. The new law provides a penalty of from one to two years imprisonment and a fine as high as $1,000 for persons arrested and charged with transporting any amount of intoxicating liquor, and prevents judges from suspending sentences for second and subsequent offenses of the law. The bill which was enacted into a new law, was not as drastic in its original provisions, which said "any persons transporting in more than one quart," but it was amended in the senate by striking out the limitation on the amount of liquor.

For Possession of Stills.

Under the third new liquor law any person who has a still or distilling apparatus not registered with the federal government is subject to a sentence for first offense of from one to five years at the Indiana state farm and a fine of from $100 to $1,000. On second or subsequent offenses judges cannot suspend sentences.

INDIANA BREVITIES

Laporte.—The Laporte county grand jury has been called to meet. It is the first time in two years that the body has been called together.

Marion.—The annual Grant county institute of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the M. E. church at Swayzee, March 14 and 15. Mrs. Minnie Bronson, Indianapolis will be the institute leader.

Anderson.—Three hundred members of I. O. O. F. lodges in Madison county attended a county meeting here. Twenty-five candidates were initiated. District Deputy Thompson of Elwood presided at a banquet.

forgery, was released on bond of $200. Raymond Andis and Edmund Hauk, of Morristown, who were indicted for assault and battery with intent to kill, each gave bond of $500. Earl Jeffries, of Moral township, charged with violation of the prohibition law, was released on bond of $500.

Noblesville.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry H. White observed their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary by giving a dinner for friends. They have one son, Marcus, who is a Noblesville business man. Mr. White is the second largest land owner in Hamilton county.

Evansville.—Philip C. Gould, judge of the Vanderburg County Circuit court, has appointed William Habbe, Democrat, and George Rheinhardt, Republican, as members of the county board of review. Habbe formerly was sheriff of Vanderburg county.

Lagrange.—Bishop Frederick D. Leetes of Indianapolis gave an address at the Methodist Episcopal church in Lagrange at the annual meeting of the Goshen district conference. Rev. F. H. Cremean, pastor at Syracuse, spoke on "Gethsemane." Music was provided by the Methodist Episcopal choir in Legrange.

Lebanon.—Cecil Weber has been appointed assessor of Perry township, Boone county, to succeed Ural Smith, who died recently. Mr. Weber served as deputy assessor last year and was a candidate for assessor at the last Democratic primary, being defeated for the nomination by Mr. Smith.

Wabash.—Following the filing of an affidavit against Charles Axton, superintendent of White's Manual Labor institute, charging assault and battery, the board of trustees was called to meet to investigate the case. Amos J. Wilcoxson, prosecuting witness, alleges that he was attacked by Axton when he went to the superintendent's office to receive a check.

Columbus.—A change in the method of teaching agriculture in the Columbus grade schools was announced by S. R. Miles, county agent. Heretofore fifteen minutes two days in the week have been devoted to general agricultural instruction in the seventh and eighth grades. Under the new plan two subjects, agriculture and poultry growing, will be taught in these grades.

Terre Haute.—Federal inspection of Company I, First infantry Indiana National Guard, took place. The company is made up chiefly of men recruited in the last year, and many of the members are youngsters who were not old enough to see service in the World war. Col. J. C. Burt of Columbus, O., inspecting officer, said the company was one of the best National Guard outfits he had inspected.

Franklin.—Fifty men from Franklin college, including the basketball team, were guests of the young men's Bible class of the First Baptist church in Indianapolis. The men were accompanied by Charles E. Goodell, president of the college and Griz Wagner, coach. The Franklin delegation made the trip in a special interurban car and was met at the Terminal station by the members of the young men's class and escorted to the church.

Wabash.—Seven men were fined in police court as the result of drinking and fighting at a public dance three weeks ago. Fred Bahler was fined $100 and costs on a charge of having intoxicating liquor in his possession. Leonard Bitner, Garl Owens and Guilford Gardner were each fined $1 and costs on charges of public intoxication, and Rettig Lumaree, Dick Lutz and Phillip Wassman were each fined $1 and costs on charges of assault and battery.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

In 1698 the duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal, received a petition from Thomas Greenhill, asking that, "In consideration of your petitioner being the seventh son and thirty-ninth child of one father and mother, your grace would be pleased to signalize it by some particular motto of argumentation to his coat-of-arms, to transmit to posterity so uncommon a thing."

COACHES OF VARIED COLORS

System Adopted by Which Unlettered Burmese Are Enabled to Recognize Their Proper Compartments.

A Burmese train is a variegated affair, the first-class carriage being painted white, the second-class green, and the third-class brown. The reason for this is that though they are also marked first, second and third in the usual way, the native, whether Burmese, Shan or other tribe, cannot read these figures. He can, however, distinguish one color from another, and he knows that brown is the color for his part of the train. When traveling by train at night in Burma it is advisable to keep the window up, otherwise at stopping places a long brown arm is quite sure to be inserted and next morning some of one's cherished property will be found to have vanished. The Burman has quite reconciled himself to the railway as a mode of transit, but whether he goes today or tomorrow is quite immaterial to him. It is quite common to see a party of Burmese peacefully slumbering on the platform while their train is steaming out of the station.—Wide World.

DID AWAY WITH HAND WORK

How Invention of Printing Machine Completely Revolutionized the Calico Industry.

In the days before the printing machine was invented or even until its use became general, calico cloth was printed by hand by the block method. By this method the design was outlined on the surface of a wooden block, the outlines were bounded by pieces of brass or copper and the surface filled in with felt to hold the color, and sometimes designs of as many as three or four colors were printed by this method. When the block was completed it was dipped in a color box and the pattern was then impressed upon the fabric by stamping by hand; and for each color to be printed the cloth had to be stamped by a separate operation. The work was slow and laborious and in printing even some patterns that were printed in those days it would take a man and one or two helpers a whole year to print as many yards of cloth as can be printed on a modern printing machine in probably a day or little more.—Boston Transcript.

MANY CHURCHES ON ISLAND

Patmos Long Remarkable for the Large Number of Its Religious Edifices.

One of the most remarkable islands in the world is Patmos, where St. John wrote the Book of Revelation. It was always the destination of thousands of pilgrims, and in the old days the rich man who wished to expiate his sins usually did so by building a church. The result is that this tiny island contains the ruins of no fewer than 300 churches.

The entire population numbers about 4,000, and it was when most of the buildings were founded. As there are only 700 houses on the island there is almost a church for each two families.

The people are Greeks whose only occupation is sponge fishing, though there used at one time to be a trade in the manufacture of stockings.

Curiously enough, though the island lies quite close to Turkey, there has never at any time been a mosque upon it. Possibly the Mohammedans could not find room for one.

Lincoln Highway.

The Lincoln highway is complete except for certain sections in the West, particularly through the desert country of Utah and Nevada. Improvement of roads is of course going on all through the route. The highway begins in New York, passing through Newark, Trenton, Philadelphia, York, Pittsburgh, Canton, Mansfield, Lima, Ft. Wayne, Elkhart, South Bend, Valparaiso, Aurora, Geneva, Fulton, Clinton, Cedar Rapids, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Kearney, Cheyenne, Laramie, Rawlins, Evanston, Salt Lake City, Reno, Carson City, Sacramento, Oakland, San Francisco. This is the best through route to San Francisco.

American-Made Carpets.

Since 1797 the manufacturing of rugs has been an important industry in this country. The first rugs made by power and on an American invention was in the year 1889. It is true that America imported a great many rugs until the beginning of the World war, and, of course, all oriental rugs are imported.

France and Belgium sold many rugs to us, but when war destroyed their looms and made manufacturing impossible America had to turn to her own looms to fill her needs, and today we are in this country exporting rugs by the thousands. We are manufacturing in this country six principal kinds of rugs or carpets—wilton velvet, axminster, tapestry brussels and plain rugs made from linen.

Joseph Got a "Swell" Job.

"Daughter, tell me what the Sunday school lesson was about yesterday," said a fond Indianapolis mamma to her little daughter.

"I can't remember," the little girl replied, after much wrinkling of her brows in thought. A short time later, however, she left her play and came running to her mother. "I know what the lesson was about now," she said. "There was a boy named Joseph and his brothers didn't like him, and they put him in a well and when some men went by they sold Joseph. And the men took Joseph away, but after a while the king began to like Joseph and he give him a swell job."

Lime Juice on Shipboard.

The "lime juice" once universally used by mariners to prevent scurvy came chiefly from the Mediterranean and, though partly derived from the sweet lime, was mainly obtained from lemons. When the juice of the sour lime, imported from the West Indies, was substituted by the British navy, it failed to have the desired effect, and thus lime juice fell into disrepute.

The JOY OF LIVING

by
Sidney Gowing

Here Is a Delightful Comedy in the Form of a Serial Story Which We Feel Is a Real Kindness to Offer to Readers

The little English heroine is a trump. The young Yankee hero is a fit partner for her; and they do become partners in one of the funniest adventures you ever heard about—thrilling, too! Innocently they get mixed up in a burglary which draws not only the local police of an English town, but the detective brains of the celebrated Scotland Yard upon their trail. And the girl's father was a bishop; think of the disgrace if she were caught!

Not a crime story at all, but the story of two joyful cherubs who were suspected of a crime. There are motorcycle trips over a charming countryside; circumstances which cause the climbing of trellises and the invading of ancient castles in the dead of the night; hiding in caves; subterfuges of all sorts, and through it all is the rollicking spirit of youth—just what its title implies—the joy of living. You will love sweet, audacious, nervy little Aimee, and you will have no less regard for dashing Billy, and even the Flying Sphinx, the wonderful motorcycle which figured in their adventures, will get into your affections like a thing of life.

Regional Institutes For Sunday School Workers

One of the Regional Institutes for teachers, superintendents, parents and interested Sunday School friends will be held in Fort Wayne, in the Grace Reform Church, 316 E. Washington St., March 16th.

These institutes are being promoted by the Children's Division of the Indiana Sunday School Council of Religious Education with the co-operation of the County Sunday School Associations.

There will be four specialists in the institutes during the three sessions; Miss Florence Carmichael, Regionel Elementary Superintendent of the Disciples of Christ; Miss Myrtie Huckelberry, State Elementary Superintendent of the Baptist; Miss Lola Striblen, State Superintendent of the Indiana Presbyterians and Nellie C. Young State Children's Division Superintendent of the Indiana Sunday School Council of Religous Education.

The program will deal with local school problems and the problem of home co-operation. Many vital Sunday School problems will be discussed in detail.

Time will be given to conferences for each group of Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary and Junior Worker. Each conference will be led by one of the specialists. The evening session will be more of an inspirational nature.

During the session there will be a collection taken to help to defray the traveling expenses of these four workers.

Every Sunday School leader and especially teachers and parents of children from [illegible] to twelve years of age should [illegible] every effort to be present in these sessions.

Chicken Thieves

Last Wednesday night a number of friends and neighbors of W. P. Steward of Spencerville, came in on him as a birthday surprise at his home. All brought well filled baskets and a bonteous chicken supper was spread. At a late hour when the guests were about to go to their homes it was announced that the treat was really on Mr. Steward for the chicken used for the supper had been stolen from his own chicken coop and had been prepared by the thieves' wives.

Mr. Steward enjoyed it all, but he threatened revenge on the whole party.

A similar party was given to Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch in Jackson township on Saturday night of last week.

American Farm Bureau

Bert Hemphill and the Hemphill Family With a Hereford Cow.

When a certain cattle boat sailed for South America recently, a purebred Hereford bull from Johnson county, Kansas, was on board—and Bert Hemphill, the Kansas farm boy who raised the bull, held in his hand a check for $1,025.

It was the price he received for the bull calf, "Bright Visage," after seventeen months of spare-time work in "growing out" the calf.

Bert got into the purebred cattle business as a member of a Hereford calf club formed in his county. Each member of the club bought a heifer which was bred to a good bull. The resulting calves gave the club members a start as Hereford breeders.

Three children in the Hemphill family joined the club, and their father bought them each a heifer. Bert's two sisters were too young to take care of their Herefords, so Bert did the work. It didn't take much time, but it paid well. The very first calf to be born was the one which the Hemphills later sold for more than a thousand dollars.

In less than three years they have built up a herd of 16 purebred Herefords, which is a constant source of pride and profit. The Hemphill farm has been named as Sunnyside Hereford farm, and the firm name proudly printed on the letterhead is, "John A. Hemphill & Son." A wise father finds it easy to keep his son on a farm which has purebred live stock to stimulate interest in the farming operations.

Young Bert Hemphill is an earnest student of the purebred business. He attends every sale of cattle within range, visits the stock shows and fairs. He is becoming an expert in selecting and judging cattle. He is determined that raising a thousand-dollar calf which was sold in South America is not going to be his only great achievement.

The three heifers which the Hemphills bought cost $325 each. The first sale returned to them more than the original investment.

"We think that it is easier to make money from live stock than anything else on the farm," says young Bert. "And I am going to stick right to the job until we have one of the best herds we can possibly develop."

TENTATIVE PLANS TO AID LIVE STOCK MEN

Tick Eradication Is First Problem to Be Undertaken—Dipping Law Needed.

Tentative plans to secure relief for the live stock men of Louisiana through an organization on the farm bureau plan for furthering the work of tick eradication, the establishment of a marketing program and general improvement in the types of live stock grown were formulated at conferences between cattlemen of the state and representatives of the farm bureau and extension department. A movement will be set on foot at once to establish the Farm Bureau Live Stock association, it was announced.

Among other projects to be undertaken by the proposed organization is a plan to make available a loan of $4,500,000, placed at the disposal of Louisiana banks for the benefit of the live stock industry in this state several months ago, of which only $80,000 has so far been used, owing to the lack of a definite program on the part of the stockmen. It was pointed out that tick eradication is the first problem to be undertaken, and that to make the state-dipping law effective it is necessary to create a definite sentiment among the farmers of the state favoring the work, and that this can best be accomplished by a permanent organization of the farmers and stockmen themselves.

C. H. Compere, acting as spokesman for the stockmen, stated that the farm bureau has the confidence of the farmers of the state and that its principle of organization on a business basis, with an exclusive farmer membership, offers the only solution of the agricultural problem in this state. He stated that it is the desire of the stockmen to enter an association subsidiary to the farm bureau, such as had already been established for the rice, lespedeza and cotton growers and that, inasmuch as a great percentage of the stockmen are already farm bureau members, the organization may easily be effected.

RHUBARB, ONE OF THE BEST DISHES

Favorite Plant Thrives Best in Sections Where the Ground Freezes Solid.

In our grandmothers' time rhubarb was generally referred to as "pie-plant" because it constituted the filling for the first fresh pies in the spring of the year. Stewed rhubarb or rhubarb sauce is one of the finest dishes that grace our tables in the early spring time, and enormous quantities of the fresh stalks are marketed throughout the northern and eastern states.

Rhubarb does not do well in the South, but thrives best in sections where the ground freezes hard and solid during the winter.

Five to ten hills of rhubarb will supply the ordinary family, says the United States Department of Agriculture, but it is always desirable to plant a few extra hills for good measure. The plants may be set either in the late fall or the early spring, but no stems should be pulled the first year, and very few the second year. After the second year the plants will increase in vigor, but finally get too thick and the stems become small after six or seven years. When this happens the roots, or a part of them should be dug up and divided and the best pieces used for a new planting.

Rhubarb should be planted at one side of the home garden, but requires well-drained rich soil. Before setting the roots it is a good plan to dig a trench or several large holes and work manure into the subsoil, also to mix manure with the surface soil. The plants should be set at least 3 feet apart and will need manure or fertilizer every year.

Rhubarb Is a Good Producer.

DEMAND FOR MAN, TEAM AND PLOW

Community Gardeners Solve Problem by Employing Expert With Tractor.

Getting a plowman to plow the small garden is often a serious problem, especially in cities and towns where very few teams and plows are available. The community gardeners have solved this difficulty by having the entire tract plowed and harrowed in a body either by team or tractor. In this way the work can be done on an acreage basis and is much cheaper than by having each individual garden plowed separately.

The problem of financing the plowing and preparation of community gardens is solved by each gardener putting a certain amount, say $2, into a common fund at the beginning of the season. This fund is placed in the hands of a plowing committee who employ a man with teams or tractor at a pre-arranged price per acre, and the committee sees to it that the work is properly done. After the plowing is completed and the work paid for the committee returns the unexpended [illegible]

CLIMBING ROSES ADD MUCH BEAUTY

Gay Blossoms of the Rambler Are Among the Earliest of the Season.

Fiction and history are full of allusions to beautiful climbing roses, and replete with word-pictures of rose-covered trellised porches, lovely rose arbors, hedges and fences, alike delightful in fragrance and delicate color.

Roses are not climbing plants in the same sense as grapevines or morning glories. They have no tendrils and do not support themselves by twining. It is necessary, therefore, to train and tie the canes as they grow. In northern sections, winter protection must be given climbing roses by wrapping them in straw or laying the vines down and covering with a layer of earth, adding straw or manure when the earth is frozen.

The Multiflora roses, usually spoken of as hardy climbers, are useful in the North. They flower in clusters. Roses of the Noisette climbing group, such as the Marechal Niel, Lamarque and others, and those of the Laevigata group of which the Cherokee is a representative, are suitable for culture only in warm climates where the winter temperature does not fall below ten degrees F. above zero.

LESSON FOR MARCH 18

JESUS CRUCIFIED

LESSON TEXT—Luke 23:33-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed.—Isaiah 53:5.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Psa. 22:1-21; I Cor. 1:23, 24; Gal. 6:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus on the Cross.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus on the Cross.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Our Salvation Costs.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of Christ's Death.

We now face the greatest tragedy of all time. No record in the annals of history approaches it. It is the very climax of all history. Though unique in its blackness, from it flows streams of liberty and life for all the world. Let every teacher have the personal experience of Christ's death for him, and then get his pupils to see that Christ's death was instead of their own death.

I. The Place of Crucifixion (v. 33).

They led Him away to Calvary, a hill north of Jerusalem resembling a skull. Calvary is the Latin word and Golgotha is the Hebrew. This is a significant name for the place where man's redemption was accomplished. The skull is an apt picture of man's condition as the result of sin—life and intelligence are gone, leaving only the dark empty cavern which once contained them. Jesus was not crucified in the city for He was to suffer without the gate (Heb. 13:12).

II. His Companions on the Cross (v. 33).

Two malefactors were crucified with Him. Their names are not given. This is a fulfillment of the Scriptures. "He was numbered with the transgressors," (Isaiah 53:12).

III. His Forgiving Love (v. 34).

He cried, "Father, forgive them." He doubtless had in mind not only the soldiers who acted for the government, but the Jews who in their blindness were ignorant of the enormity of their crime. He had no hatred in His heart. He yearned for their salvation.

IV. The World Revealed (vv. 34-43).

Jesus Christ on the cross is the supreme touchstone laying bare the heart of the world. Take a cross section of the world at any time since Christ was crucified and representatives of their classes were found around Jesus on the cross. The cross is the judgment of this world (John 12:31).

1. The Covetous (v. 34). They gambled for His seamless robe right under the cross where He was dying. This represents those whose primary interest in Christ is a means to get gain.

2. The Indifferent (v. 35). The people stood beholding. The great mass of the world gaze upon the crucified Christ with stolid indifference.

3. The Scoffers (vv. 35-39). (1) The rulers reviled Him for His claim to being a Savior. They wanted a Savior, but not a crucified Savior. Many today are religious, but have only contempt for a salvation which centers in a blood atonement. (2) The soldiers reviled Him for claiming to be a king. The title, "King of the Jews" had been placed over him in bitter irony, but it was true, for by right of the Davidic covenant He shall be King over Israel (II Samuel 7:8-16). (3) The Impenitent Thief (v. 39). This brutal man joins in reviling the Savior even when he was under condemnation.

4. The Penitent (vv. 40-43). The conscious sinner who discerned the heart of the Savior prayed for mercy. The salvation of this penitent thief is a remarkable picture of the saving power of Christ. The man confessed his sin as against God and cried to Jesus for salvation. He saw that the dying man was the forgiving God. The fact that he acknowledged his sin as against God showed that he was penitent. His request for Christ to remember him when He came into His kingdom shows that he recognized that the one who was dying on the cross was making atonement for sin and that he would come to reign as King. His salvation was immediate. Christ said, "Today shalt thou be with me in paradise."

V. The Death of Christ (vv. 40-46).

So shocking was the crime that nature threw around the Son of God a shroud to hide Him from the Godless crowd. Darkness was upon the land at noonday. When the price of sin was paid He cried with a loud voice showing that He still had vitality—that His death was not through exhaustion but by His sovereign will.

A few cents buys a jar of "Hair-Groom" at any drug store. Even stubborn, unruly or shampooed hair stays combed all day in any style you like. "Hair-Groom" is a dignified combing cream which gives that natural gloss and well-groomed effect to your hair—that final touch to good dress both in business and on social occasions.

Greaseless, stainless "Hair-Groom" does not show on the hair because it is absorbed by the scalp, therefore your hair remains so soft and pliable and so natural that no one can possibly tell you used it.

French Women in Odd Club.

The Broomstick club is the latest of women's clubs to be formed in Paris. The qualification of a woman in France to rank as a "broomstick" is that she must be five feet five inches in height and not weigh more than 130 pounds. There are 36 members of this club, and only a few of them are married. The members declared themselves keen feminists and maintain that tallness and thinness above the average is not the slightest drawback to a happy life, if only for the reason that the modistes prefer dressing them to their shorter and fatter sisters.

Health is the Most Valuable Asset You Have

Newago, Mich.—"Some years ago I was troubled with dizziness, palpitation, loss of appetite and sore and painful stomach. I tried the best physicians I could hear of, and also several put-up medicines, but nothing did me any good. Some physicians said it was my heart; some said it was my stomach; while others said it was my nerves. I got so bad I could not work very steadily, when a friend came to see me and insisted upon my trying Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I was discouraged, but tried it anyway, and after taking the second bottle I felt much better. I then bought six bottles and I believe the 'Discovery' saved my life. Could Hardly Eat or Sleep Because of Chronic Indigestion —Now Praises Tanlac.

W. N. Hatcher, 110 Lucile Ave., Greenville, S. C., is still another who has realized the wonderful merits of Tanlac. Mr. Hatcher has been a member of the Greenville Police department for thirty years and is one of the most efficient and popular officers on the force. In commenting on his experience with Tanlac Officer Hatcher said:

"I know many others, besides myself, Tanlac has helped and I am glad to speak out for it. I had suffered from indigestion and constipation for something like fifteen years. I had about reached the point where I could neither eat nor sleep, for every time I ate it hurt me and the misery kept me awake at night. I had lost energy and strength until when my day's work was over I would feel completely played out."

"I now eat anything I want, always have a fine appetite, and have gained eight pounds. I am certainly thankful to be able to enjoy a good meal once more and not suffer afterwards. I am just like a new man and Tanlac gets all the credit."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Woman Reigns Over Island.

A lost Pacific island whose several natives are ruled by a white woman has been discovered by an English survey ship, according to a report from San Francisco. The woman, widow of an Australian, went to the island in the far South Pacific, which is called Bardoa, years ago, in the hope that missionary work would serve to assuage grief over the loss of her husband, and now she is recognized as the high priestess and supreme ruler of the island. The only other white inhabitants of the island, according to the report, are an English author, his wife, and an Irish servant woman.

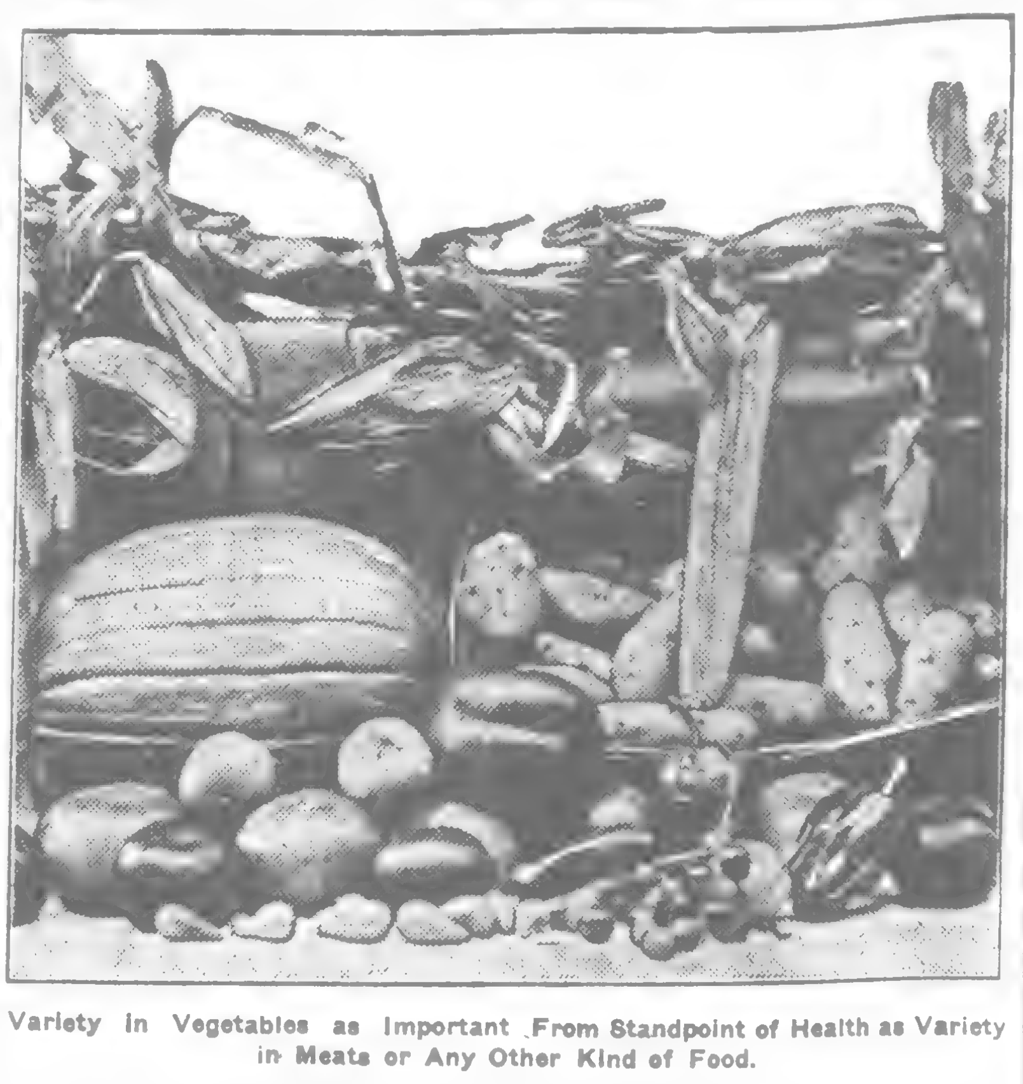
AVERAGE FAMILY NEEDS CERTAIN AMOUNT OF STANDARD VEGETABLES



Variety in Vegetables as Important From Standpoint of Health as Variety in Meats or Any Other Kind of Food.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

How many bushels of potatoes, pecks of carrots, or pounds of cabbage a year are required by the average family?—is a question often asked by people who are planning a home garden. Most people simply plan a garden, putting in it a little of everything, too much of some things, and too little of other things, having slight regard to the actual needs of the family and the balancing of the food supply. The requirements of all families will not be the same, so probably no two gardens would be exactly alike.

Vegetables Required.

It is a safe principle to lay down, however, says the United States Department of Agriculture, that the average family requires a certain amount of such standard vegetables as potatoes, onions, beets, carrots, peas, beans, cabbage, corn and tomatoes, and, in addition to this, a fairly liberal supply of the crops used for greens, including spinach, kale, collards in the South, Swiss chard, lettuce and a number of others. Workers in home economics and dietetics have found that variety in vegetables is as important from the standpoint of health and taste as variety in meats or any other kind of food.

The likes and dislikes of the various members of the family should be taken into consideration in planning the garden. It is necessary to determine the number of meals during the year at which any given vegetable is to be served. The next step is to determine the actual quantity in the green state of the particular vegetable required by each member of the family and make a summary of all members of the family, allowing a reasonable margin for company and losses. In this way the total amount of vegetables required can be reasonably determined. The next step is to divide this by the quantity produced on, say 100 feet of row, and the result will be the number of rows 100 feet in length required to furnish the supply.

Garden Suggestions.

These are just suggestions as to how the garden requirements of the family can be figured out. In all cases, however, suitable allowance should be made for the growing of crops to be canned and stored for winter use. This applies especially to peas, snap beans, sweet corn, spinach and tomatoes. Lima beans may be canned, but if dried rapidly with stove heat while young, they can be soaked in water and cooked during the winter and are almost as good as fresh beans from the garden.

There are certain vegetables, however, that cannot be kept as well either dried or stored as canned, so plenty should be grown for canning. The quantity, however, can all be figured according to the actual requirements of the family. Aside from making due allowance for seasonal conditions, the year's supply of garden vegetables for the average family can be figured just about as closely as can that of bread and meat. On the whole, it is not desirable to have a very large surplus as it leads to wasteful methods in preparation. The idea should be to produce just about the right quantity and then use the supply to the best advantage.

EXTENSION WORK HAS CHANGED FARM PLAN

County Agent Demonstrates Usefulness of Lime on Soil.

Kentucky Farmers Enabled to Pay Debts, Improve Home Conditions and Start Campaign for Purebred Livestock.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The first agricultural extension agent employed by Fulton county, Kentucky, in 1917, found farmers there discouraged over the agricultural conditions. Crops were poor, there was practically no live stock being fed, as sufficient feed could not be grown; no clover had been grown in the county for more than twenty years. Soil tests showed that good crops of clover could be grown by applying limestone. Fulton county contains no rock of any kind, and its farmers were unfamiliar with the use of lime; but a persistent campaign demonstrating the effect of its use and the value of leguminous crops both for green manure and for feed, which the lime made it possible to grow, has revolutionized farming methods there.

Over 1,100 of the 1,200 farms reporting in the last census from Fulton county were feeding live stock, and the county's hay and forage crop was valued at over $860,000. A survey made in the spring of 1922 showed that one acre out of every six in the county was seeded to red clover, alfalfa or sweet clover, and over 90 per cent of the 25,000 acres planted to corn had a "catch crop" of soy beans. Three thousand tons of lime were used in the county in 1922 alone. As a result of this work, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, the farmers of the county have restored their credit and are paying their debts, are improving their home conditions, and have started a large amount of purebred poultry and live stock work.

WHEN TO PASTURE ALFALFA

Light Pasturing the First Fall Would Do No Harm, Especially if Hogs Are Ringed.

It is best not to pasture alfalfa the first year. Light pasturing the first fall, especially if hogs were ringed, will do no harm. Rooting would, of course, injure the stand. Close pasturing would also as there would be little or no winter protection.

OWNERS FAVOR BETTER SIRES

Records Show More Than 9,000 Enrolled in "Better Sires—Better Stock" Campaign.

Records of the bureau of Animal industry show, early in 1923, a total of 9,116 live stock owners enrolled in the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign conducted by various states and the United States Department of Agriculture to improve the quality of domestic animals. Each of these persons has filed with the department a written agreement to use purebred sires of good quality for all classes of live stock kept. The number of breeding animals owned by the persons enrolled now exceed 1,100,000 head, and marked improvement in the stock is reported from time to time. Department records show clearly that the use of purebred sires stimulates also the use of purebred female live stock and brings about gradual improvement with each generation.

METHOD OF OILING HARNESS

Most Satisfactory Plan to Take Apart and Wash Each Piece in Soft Warm Water.

The most satisfactory method of cleaning and oiling harness is to take the harness apart and wash each piece in warm soft water with castile or other mild soap and a stiff brush, and then rinse in warm clean water and allow to dry for a short time. While still damp it should be oiled with neat's-foot oil or good harness oil and allowed to dry overnight, when all excess oil should be wiped off. For heavy work harness, it is perhaps better to mix the neat's-foot oil with tallow or wool grease to make a mixture of the consistency of soft butter.

TREATMENT FOR CATTLE LICE

Application of Raw Linseed Oil Is Recommended by Doctor Riley of Wisconsin University.

Application of raw linseed oil is the most satisfactory treatment for cattle infested with lice and other parasites, says Dr. W. A. Riley, chief of the division of entomology at the University of Wisconsin. One pint of oil applied thoroughly with a brush or rag will do for four or five cows. The application should be especially thorough on upper parts of the neck along the back from the poll to the base of the tail, the shoulder tops, and about the folds of the udder and escutcheon, for it is in these places that the lice are the most abundant.

GOOD HIGHWAYS

ROADS LEAD TO EVERYWHERE

Domesticated Cow Is Credited With Having Been Engineer to Lay Out First Road.

The first domesticated cow is credited with having been the engineer who laid out the first road. Not an ancient city in Europe but testifies, in the tangled intricacies of its streets, to the vagaries of that cow's descendants, writes Samuel Hopkins Adams in Leslie's. Man improved progressively upon the bovine method of highway establishment until his chosen pathways were bedded in rock, lined with steel and patrolled by monsters that outsped the winds of heaven. With the railroads, said prideful man, had come the last word in the spread of highways. Then the automobile loomed. And where this modern engine of Mercury goes, roads unroll before it like the magic carpet before the feet of the djinn. From Greenland to Patagonia it imperatively demands passageway to its unknown goal beyond the ridges. American-inspired associations in Japan, in Australia, in the Argentine, at the Cape of Good Hope, preach the gospel of the wheel-bearing path to everywhere. Propaganda, this is pure propaganda, primarily in the interest of business, but by indirection, and more importantly, for that solidarity which binds communities together and dissolves barriers between nations. The history-old engineering which began with milk, ends with gasoline.

FUNDS FOR ILLINOIS ROADS

Sub-Committee of Bankers' Association Report Sufficient Money to Complete Plans.

The sub-committee on good roads of the Illinois Bankers' association, after careful investigation, has reported to that body that there are approximately sufficient funds available to complete the 3,056 miles of highway yet to be built of the original 4,706 miles in the Illinois plan within five years, without issuing any more bonds, or increasing the motor fees.

A Section of the Dixie Highway.

It is believed that the increase in motor vehicles may increase the highway revenue to such an extent that the state will be able to finance the improvement of the connecting roads on the "pay as you go" plan and avoid further debt and further interest payments.

$7,000,000 FOR GOOD ROADS

Oregon State Officials Complete Estimates of Highway Department For 1923-24.

Oregon state officials have completed estimates indicating that the income of the state highway department for the 1923-24 biennium will aggregate $21,500,000. This will give $7,000,000 for new roads, the remainder of the estimate receipts having already been obligated for fixed expenses.

The trunk-line highway program largely has been completed. The highway department expects to concentrate on lateral and market roads as soon as work on the trunk roads now in progress is cleaned up.

HEALTH FOR WORKING WOMEN

Let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Help You to Become Well.

Thousands of girls have to work in homes, offices, stores, mills or factories who are physically unfit for work, with often an aged or invalid father or mother dependent upon them for support. Standing all day week in and week out, or sitting in cramped positions a girl often contracts some deranged condition of her organic system which calls a halt to her progress and demands restoration to health before she can be of use to herself or anyone else.

For these distressing weaknesses and derangements these girls have found health to do their work in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"Like many girls, I had troubles every month," says Carolyne Mangels, "and they interfered with my work as I could never be sure of my time. My mother often suggested that I take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but I never did until lately. I have had very good results, and am now a private secretary and do my work without missing a day. I recommend your medicine to every girl who speaks of having troubles like I have had."—CAROLYNE MANGELS, 407 14th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Office Worker Helped

Milwaukee, Wis.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine for three and a half years, and they have improved my health wonderfully. My mother also has taken the Vegetable Compound and we recommend it to our friends. I am working in an office now and can always do my work as I do not have the troubles I had at first. I read of your Vegetable Compound in the newspaper and you may use my letter in that way if you wish to do so."—ELEANOR SHEBLAK, 537 36th St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Pains and Headache

Webster, Mass.—"I was all rundown, had a bad complexion, and suffered with pains and backache, and was dizzy at times and felt weak. I worked in a mill and my girl chum told me about your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am feeling much better since taking it."—MARY PLAZA, 13 West Street, Webster, Mass.

Chamois Gives Little Leather.

The chamois, which disports itself on the mountains, has nothing to do with the bulk of the chamois leather which we all known. The latter is really the lining of sheepskins, which is stripped off and treated by a special process to render it soft and pliable. Only a very small proportion of this leather is obtained from the chamois.

Get Well In Indiana

Fort Wayne's fight against tuberculosis gained added distinction at the meeting of the Indiana Anti-Tuberculosis society, when the slogan, "Get Well in Indiana," was highly approved and completely adopted. The society with generous spirit put itself on record in a resolution according to Fort Wayne the honor of having originated that slogan. Fort Wayne is not insensible to the honor of this recognition, nor the least wanting in appreciation of it. But that honor, generous as the tribute may be is a minor matter. The thing is that "Get Well in Indiana" means something the whole state should understand and crystalize into steadfast and uniform practice. Indiana can do as much for her tuberculosis patients as any other state can do, for the Indiana climate will be found as salubrious for them as the climate of any other region, "highland or lowland, far or near."

The thing is early discovery of the disease and no loss of time bringing the patient under rational treatment at some one of the state's several fine sanatoria, if possible, or at home if that is the best which can be done. Removing the patient to distant and strange scenes to gain the doubtful benefit of altitude or of a different atmosphere, results more often in harm than good. This is especially true in those instances where the patient must go unattended and remain without familiar companionship.

The regions in the southeast, the west and far southwest, which have gained repute for favoring early and complete recovery from tuberculosis have myriad tales of sorrow and tragedy to tell. Today these same regions are filled with unfortunates who sought health and found only despondency and discouragement. Many of the patients, having no adequate means of maintaining themselves and being unable either to find or pursue livelihood, are stranded and helpless, many of them doomed.

Tuberculosis patients can be cured in Indiana; are being cured in Indiana right along. "Get Well in Indiana" is a slogan pregnant with meaning. It is a formula of good hope, a gospel of cheer. But let the truth of it be spread thoroughly about the state and it will salvage many lives and spare many a dreary tragedy.

LOOKING BACKWARD

From the standpoint of the fellow who owns a little place in the country, life is real, life is earnest.

It approaches the season when the lure of bathing and fishing and gardening begins to fade, when one looks back on the many happy occasions, the great flood of company, the scores who came to sit and eat and enjoy, and went away filled with happiness.

Truly, it has been a wonderful season. Heaven be thanked that we have so many true friends. We won't see 'em again until early next summer, but we had 'em just the same. And for that we are grateful, as we sit in silent retrospect, thinking over and over the fun we had, idly sorting the unpaid bills.

Now along comes a man from downstate who sends official word to the county court house that he was willing to serve on the jury any old time. He says he got a check the other day for over $40, which was due him for serving as juror in the fall term of 37 days.

"That's more money than I cleared at farming in the last two years, he confided in the clerk.

VOL. XXXVII ST. JOE DeKAL BCOUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1923 No. 12

Clara House

Clara Catherine Boston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Boston, was born in Springfield Township, Allen Co., Sept. 28, 1857 and departed this life at her daughter's Mrs. Eva Strebe, Pontiac, Mich., March 10, 1923. Age 65 years, 5 months and 10 days.

She was married to William Franklin House September 13, 1877. To this union were born six children. Only two survive her.

She united when a girl with the M. P. Church of East Springfield Center, near Harlan and transfered her membership to the Spencerville Lutheran Church when she moved to Spencerville some twenty-seven years ago. She has ever kept her faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and has sought to do His will.

She leaves one son, John House and one daughter, Mrs. Eva Strebe, both of Pontiac, Michigan, two brothers, Charley Boston of Tekonsha, Mich., and Willis Boston of Burlington, Mich., also one sister Mrs. Joel T. Bets, of Spencerville, three grand children and many friends who will miss her.

The funeral services were conducted from the Spencerville Lutheran Church by her former pastor, Rev. A. K. Mumma, according to her arrangement, burial in White City Cemetery. Roscoe Walter funeral director.

Auburn Man In Jail

Harold Hilkey and Richard McDowell, two youths of Auburn, filed three affidavits charging Christ Lagaris, proprietor of a shoe shine parlor in Auburn, of possessing and selling intoxicating liquors, which led to the arrest of the latter, on Saturday. He was arraigned before the mayor, Warren Lige, and pleaded not Guilty to each charge. A bond of $3,000 was fixed and because Lagaris could not furnish any money he went to jail to be held until Wednesday. We have no reports on the hearing before going to press.

A few weeks ago Lagaris appeared in court charging four youths of stealing cigaretts and cigars from his business place and at that time he was warrned to keep his place more lawfully. It is believed he is guilty of every charge and he will get a punishment.

HE NEEDS A CHUNK OF RAINBOW

Our newspapers will make mistakes occasionally, but it isn't often they try to forecast like this one did. We quote:

W.C.T.U Institute A Success

The County W. C. T. U. Institute was held Monday afternoon and evening and all day Tuesday at the Lutheran church. The meeting was called to order by the County President, Mrs. Jennie Sechler. After the opening song and reading of the crusade psalm, Rev. Clyde Havens led the devotional taking as the base of his talk the eighth verse of second Psalms. Among other fine things said in his remarks was while praying for big things we should also pray, "Lord here am I, use me."

The afternoon session was given over largely to organizing the convention under the leadership of Mrs. Ida Mix of Kokomo. The following committees were appointed: Membership, Herma Havens and Edith Widney; Press, Ada Bassett; Union Signal and Young Crusader, Lillian Buckingham and Lora Leighty. The leader then gave a discussion on the state plan of work and of the official papers. The session was dismissed by Mrs. Alice Lewis.

The evening session was better attended than that of the afternoon but because of the cold spell which came Sunday night the out of town delegates were very few. The evening was given to the young people who rendered most of the program. Mrs. Mix presided at this session. The Methodist Orchestra furnished two numbers at the opening. The devotions were led by Robert Johnson, who led in the responsive reading of the 111 Psalm and offered prayer, followed by the Lord's Prayer by all. A song was then given by the Lutheran junior choir. Rev. Havens gave an exceptional address on "Interesting Young People in Moral Reform." Miss Louetta Daily then favored these present with a cornet solo, being accompanied on the piano by Miss Faye Hughs. A recitation by little Miss Jane Keesler followed. These three young ladies represented the young people of the Christian church. A splendid anthem was given by the Choral Society. Mrs. Mix followed with a brief history of the work of the W. C. T. U. and its work among the young people. Benediction by Dr. Johnson.

Tuesday morning session was better attended than Monday afternoon. It was called to order by county president. Opening song, "My Soul be on Thy Guard." Mrs. Loretta Hull read the latter part of the sixth chapter of Ephesians for the scripture lesson which was followed by several volunteer prayers. The leader then stated that the purpose of the institute was a place of learning, to teach and train our workers. Duet by Herma Havens and Edith Widney. The leader then spoke about publicity and the W. C. T. U. card indexes at Washington fully explaining the card index system as a means of combating with the wet forces. Rev. S. D. Steffy spoke following the leader's talk on wet propaganda. He said that nothing was done without an organization. He complimented the W. C. T. U. and said we were in the fight for life. The leader talked on the motion picture as a [illegible].

Tuesday afternoon Lillian Buckingham led the devotionals, reading a portion of [illegible]. Prayer by Mrs. Havens. The leader then [illegible] [illegible]

Rev. and Mrs. Havens then gave a very pleasing duet. The state leader then gave a very instructive talk on our recent Legislature. She then tied the white ribbon on three little sisters Ruth, Dorothy and Jean Havens, and offered prayer in their behalf. A song "Precious Jewels" followed. An interesting talk was then given about Our Americanization Center and Soldiers and Sailors Rest Room County business was then finished Closing remarks were made by the leader. Adjournment and prayer of dismissal by Mrs. Havens.

Evening session was opened by music by the Lutheran orchestra. After the devotional by Rev. S. D. Steffy the Choral Society gave a musical number. Rev. Steffy spoke on "The Menace of Nicotine and how to meet it." The leader then spoke on "Shall America Go Back." These addresses were both fine. One new active member, one renewal and four honorary members were added to the local union. Benediction and adjournment.

Spencerville Students Win Contest

The students of the Spencerville high school won three of the five events of the sectional discussion, musical and literary contest held at the Christian church in St. Joe last Friday evening, namely; the discussion, the piano solo and the double mixed quartet. St. Joe was awarded the first place in the remaining two events, the vocal solo and the reading.

The contest was attended by nearly two hundred people. The patrons and students of both schools were about equally represented.

Both schools rendered their numbers exceptionally well and it would have been hard for ordinary observers to judge the better. The judges were three young ladies from Ft. Wayne, whose decisions on the events were not unanimous in any case.

St. Joe failed to present a contestant for thd discussion owing to the fact that Robert Johnson, who was preparing for the entry, became sick before he had it finished and was forced to give it up. Had he gone on with it there would have been a chance to be tie with Spencerville for honors.

Garrett Lady Dead

Marion Meriia VanFleit, wife of Don E. VanFleit, of Garrett, died Sunday morning of influenza. The deceased was a young wife and mother of twenty-seven years, leaving besides her husband, three small children, Betty, 4; Barbara, 3 and William Edmund, 10 months, also a step mother, Mrs. Georgia VanFleit Meriea. She was active in the Methodist Church of Garrett and in several social organizations of the city. The funeral arrangements were not learned definitely but it was expected to be held Thursday.

Will Get Well

The condition of Henry Reinoehl, who is suffering in the Garrett hospital from a bullet wound he received accidently from a revolver fired by his own hand on March 10th., is considered satisfactory and he is expected to recover. He denies a charge that he had attempted suicide.

NU UPERATION FOR HER

She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Escaped the Operation Doctor Advised

Louisville, Ky.—"I wish to thank you for what your medicine has done for me. I was in bed for eight or nine days every month and had a great deal of pain. The doctor said my only relief was an operation. I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines and tried the Vegetable Compound and the Sanative Wash, and they surely did wonders for me. I feel fine all the time now, also am picking up in weight. I will tell any one that your medicines are wonderful, and you may publish my letter if you wish."—Mrs. Ed. Boehnlein, 1130 Ash St., Louisville, Ky.

Backache, nervousness, painful times, irregularity, tired and run-down feelings, are symptoms of female troubles. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be taken whenever there is reason to fear such troubles. It contains nothing that can injure, and tends to tone up and strengthen the organs concerned, so that they may work in a healthy, normal manner. Let it help you as it has thousands of others. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is now selling almost all over the world.

Cleaning Polluted Oysters.

After several years of effort by the New York state conservation commission to purify shellfish so as to make available large areas suitable for breeding grounds except for the presence of some pollution, a method has been found for cleansing oysters from such grounds so as to make them edible. This is done by placing the polluted oysters in shallow layers in clean tanks full of sea water. With this is mixed a certain amount of water, in which some of the salt has been electrically changed to sodium hypochlorite, a compound fatal to disease germs. The oysters are given two treatments with this mixture, and at the end of the process they are found to be thoroughly purified, without any impairment of their flavor or digestibility.—Popular Mechanics.

Matrimonial Adventures

The Lost Columbine

BY

Julian Street

Author of "The Need of Change," "After Thirty," "Abroad at Home," "American Adventures," "Mysterious Japan," "Rita Coventry," etc.

A GLIMPSE OF JULIAN STREET

Of all the many qualities that belong to Julian Street the one I think that impresses you most is youth. He has the kind of youth that is progressively permanent—he is cast in an ageless mold. He has the personality that years spent in genuine craftsmanship bring—and he has worked hard for his success. "Pegging away," is what he calls it.

Oh, yes, he sold his first story out of hand, and he has been selling constantly ever since, but that means real labor and toil. He is unhurried, seemingly almost slow in his method of procedure, but he arrives very firmly, and always you feel in him the power to keep on arriving—the ability to better his many achievements.

There is about him, too, the knowledge of the big author who sees directly, and feels sharply the deeper things, but his great talent lies in treating facts, if it be books of travel he is writing, or people, if it be stories, with a certain inimitable charm that is entirely his own.

All of his work shows the keenness of fine observation—little truisms, subtile points in characterization—and the interest to keep you reading to the end.

"The Lost Columbine," written expressly for the Star Author Series of Matrimonial Adventures, delicate in plot, is yet poignantly full of meaning—it holds a special interpretation for both men and women.

MARY STEWART CUTTING, JR.

I

"About this fancy-dress ball at the country club tonight," said Archibald Welkins, as his wife, looking very lovely in a French-blue housedress, poured the morning coffee, "I don't quite like the idea, do you, Eleanor?"

Her large blue eyes turned up to him inquiringly.

"What don't you like about it, dear?" she asked.

"Oh, this fool notion of husbands and wives dressing separately—not knowing about each other's costumes."

Often in the eight years of their married life he had been disturbed by her trait of remaining silent when she disagreed with him, and now, as she did not reply, he stated more explicitly what was in his mind, saying: "I think we'd better tell each other what we're going to wear."

"We'll find out when we unmask," she said.

"But I think the idea of secrecy is all nonsense," he insisted with a little show of heat.

"Pass Mr. Welkins the marmalade," his wife said to the maid.

He helped himself, then repeated: "I think it's all nonsense!"

But she did not answer. He had never known a woman with Eleanor's capacity for silence. It gave her a mysterious power.

"The steward at the club told me they'd had over five hundred acceptances," he went on. "That means a mixed crowd, and I'd like to know what your costume is going to be so I can look after you."

"That's sweet of you," she answered, "but I'm sure I shan't need looking after."

"You might," he declared.

"Oh, I don't think so—not at our own country club."

"But I tell you it's going to be a mixed crowd. You're a darn pretty woman—and a blonde." And as again she was silent, he added in a tone that held a hint of accusation: "Blondes always attract more attention."

"Take some hot toast," she said to him as the maid appeared. He took some, and waited till she left the room. Then he said:

"I wonder why men always think good looking blondes are—" But he did not finish the sentence.

"Are what?" she asked.

"Well, anyway," he declared, "fancy dress makes people reckless. They feel that the lid's off. There'll be a lot of flasks, too. There's so much more drinking since prohibition. That's another reason why I want to know."

"Know what?"

"What?" he repeated irritably. "Just what I've been asking you—what you're going to wear."

"I don't think it would be playing the game to tell," she said. [illegible]

"Look here," he said [illegible]

[illegible]

he could not overcome the jealousy left with him by that episode of several years ago, when, ever since, she had been so circumspect. After all it had been only a mild flirtation, and the Frenchman wasn't very young. He was a fool to keep thinking of it, and a greater fool to harp upon it.

He said no more, but left the table, angry with her and angry with himself.

II

In the interest of secrecy it had been arranged that the wives should dine and dress together in certain houses in the neighborhood, while the husbands dined and dressed in others, and that all should arrive at the club masked. Archibald Welkins consequently left the limousine to be used by his wife and her friends, and taking the bag containing his costume, which was supposed to resemble King Charles II, drove in his roadster to Tom Bayne's house, where he found a group of men, some of them already in their finery, some dressing, all with cocktail glasses in their hands.

By the time he had donned the regal wig and knee breeches, and drank three cocktails, he began to change his mind about the fancy dress ball. It was an amusing idea, this secrecy. He was going to have a good time. Nevertheless, when he asked Eleanor what she was going to wear she should have told him. He still felt some resentment about that.

Tom Bayne had an excellent cellar. With dinner he served large highballs, and his Scotch was exceptionally good. As Archibald Welkins was leaving with the others, he caught his reflection in a mirror and approved thereof. The jewelled star shone brilliantly upon his breast; the black silk stockings admirably set off his leg, which was a good leg, and the long, dark, curly wig gave him, he thought, a mysterious appearance. What did he care, after all, about Eleanor's refusal to tell him what her costume was to be? He wasn't going to worry about Eleanor tonight. Not he! He had offered to—that was enough. She didn't know what he was wearing, either. Yes, he was going to have a good time!

With an Arab sheik, a Chinaman, and a soldier in the buff and blue of the Continental army as his passengers, he drove to the club, handling his roadster dashingly, and to avoid being recognized by his car, parked beside the drive at some distance from the door, and walked with his companions to the clubhouse.

The doors and the French windows were open; dancing had already started; they could hear the music as they walked across the grass. Inside the ballroom Welkins paused to review the animated spectacle. Masked soldiers, clowns, coolies, court beauties, bullfighters, odalisques, woman jockies, geisha, harlequins, cowboys, Spanish senoritas, mandarins, pirates, nymphs, Turks, vaqueros, peasants, whirled to the music of the jazz band.

Looking them over as they circled past, he presently thought he recognized his wife. She was dressed—if indeed it was Eleanor—as a French court lady, with patches, a high, powdered wig and a panniered gown of flowered silk, and was dancing with a Roman gladiator. He watched her around the room. Her height, her figure, her carriage were Eleanor's, and the costume had a dignity characteristic of his wife's taste. When she had passed several times he was quite certain of her.

Presently he became interested in Cleopatra, who fox-trotted into view with Napoleon. Eleanor would have made a handsome Cleopatra, too, but he felt sure she would never appear in public in such scant attire.

That Cleopatra woman was certainly attractive, though! He cut in on her and, as they danced, talked in a false voice, endeavoring to guess at her identity. But the fair Egyptian was popular. An Indian Rajah soon snatched her away, leaving King Charles II free to seek out a fascinating Columbine who, several times, had passed near him in a dance, and seemed responsive to his glances.

Presently, with a beau of the Colonial period, she came down the floor, a sprightly figure in a short black satin dress with a waist cut to a deep V in back, springy little skirts, thin openwork stockings and ballet slippers. With her huge white ruff and her black cocked hat pulled down at a saucy angle over bobbed red hair, she looked the incarnation of irresponsible gaiety.

He cut in and found that her dancing confirmed his impression. How light, how responsive she was!

"I've been aiming to catch you!" he told her, disguising his voice by pitching it low.

"'Ave you, monsieur?" she chirped. "Well, zen, we are [illegible], for I too 'ave look at you for long, 'andsome man." [illegible] She gave his hand a squeeze—which he promptly returned.

"Are you French?" he asked in his assumed voice, "or are you putting on that accent?"

[illegible]

Pursuing, he lost her momentarily, for in the darkness her black dress gave her an advantage, but as she scampered down the steps toward the lawn and the links, he caught sight of her white ruff, and sped after her. As she disappeared behind a large syringa bush he heard a rippling laugh, and running to the other side, caught her in his arms. Then, as she was panting and laughing, and as it was dark, and they were masked, and the syringas smelled so sweet, he placed his hand beneath her chin, tilted it up, bent over, and was about to seize the fruits of victory, when she eluded him and ran off laughing, in the direction of the drive.

A prisoner who escapes and is recaptured pays an added penalty, and when after another chase over the silver-green of moonlit grass, Charles II grasped the elusive Columbine, and exacted what he deemed just tribute from her lips, he was surprised and flattered by the apparent willingness with which she paid.

Indeed it was that willingness which made him confident that she would not again become a fugitive, and he was holding her lightly when, in a flash, she was off once more, this time running toward the clubhouse.

Just at the doorway he caught up; but his appeal to her to stay outside was unavailing.

"No," she said, firmly, "you are a naughty boy, an' I 'ave foun' you out. My 'usban' would not like."

"Your husband does not need to know," he urged, "nor my wife, either. That's what makes a party of this kind such fun—husbands and wives not knowing each other's costumes."

"Yes," said she, "but I 'ave already 'ad fun enough, my king." And with that she moved into the ballroom.

By the door they stood for a moment watching the dancers.

"Look!" he exclaimed suddenly. "There's another Columbine. She's like you—exactly like you, even to her red hair!"

"Yes, we came togezzer."

"But suppose I were to lose you," said he, "how could I find you again? How could I tell the two of you apart?"

"Zat is a question!" she said.

"Let's dance and talk it over."

"No, monsieur," replied the Columbine, "now I mus' dance wiz some one else." As she spoke a cowled monk came up, and in a moment she was dancing off with him.

"Meet me here afterwards," urged King Charles as she moved away.

But she shook her head.

"How shall I find you, then?" he demanded, following.

"I don't sink you can!" said she, and again he heard her tantalizing laugh.

He retired to the doorway and watched for her, but by the time she came around again she was with a Sicilian brigand. He cut in. But apparently this was the other Columbine, for she did not seem to know him. Her step was not so light as that of the one he sought, nor did she speak with a French accent.

Never mind! He would find his lost Columbine. He was determined to find her. And when they unmasked he would learn who she was.

Time and again, when he saw a Columbine wearing a black cocked hat over bobbed hair, he cut in and danced with her, but only to be disappointed. Always it was the wrong one. He questioned her about the other, but could get no satisfaction.

When, at midnight, the dancers unmasked, he hastened about the ballroom and the adjacent apartments looking for the Columbines, but now he could find neither of them. Nor could he find his wife, nor yet the white-wigged lady of the French court whom he had identified with her.

Where could Eleanor be? She ought to be in the ballroom. That was where a well-behaved woman belonged at a party such as this. It wasn't wise for a pretty woman to go wandering about outside, in the moonlight, with a strange man, masked. Since prohibition there had been a lot of drinking, and fancy dress made people reckless, anyway. Temporarily he forgot the Columbine in his concern about his wife's behavior, as he looked for her upon the terrace and the lawn.

Failing to find her he returned to the club and telephoned home.

"Hello?" He was surprised to hear Eleanor's voice upon the wire.

"I've been hunting for you all over the place," he said. "What took you home so early?"

"Oh, I got enough of it."

"Didn't you have a good time?"

"I had an exceptionally good time," she assured him.

"But I don't understand why you went home, then."

"Fancy dress makes people do all sorts of things," she said, and before he could comment upon the cryptical character of the remark, she asked: "Have you been enjoying yourself?"

"Oh, I've had worse times," said he. And thinking to have one final look for his lost Columbine, he added: "I guess I'll hang around for a while if you don't mind."

"But I don't mind at all. Good night, then," and she hung up the receiver.

[illegible]

"Yes, in a French court costume, with a high powdered wig."

When she smiled and shook her head he was surprised.

"That wasn't you—honestly?"

"No, honestly."

"What was your costume, then?"

"I went as a Columbine," she said; and addressing the maid: "Pass Mr. Welkins the strawberry jam."

In silence he helped himself, spread jam upon a piece of toast, ate it, and drank his coffee. Then:

"There were two Columbines dressed exactly alike," he ventured.

"Yes," said Eleanor. "This is the last of that new bacon. Have you made up your mind yet how you like it?"

"Oh, it's very good," he answered abstractedly. "Both the Columbines I saw had red hair."

"Wigs," she returned, succinctly.

"Wigs?" he repeated, surprised. "They didn't look like wigs."

"Men aren't very quick at detecting such things," said she. Then, to his infinite surprise she added. "Do you remember that nice French officer I liked so much three years ago?"

"Why, yes."

"Well, he wore a toupee."

"He did? How do you know?"

"I noticed it the first time I saw him."

"Um," he said, and sat reflective for a time, then: "Look here, dear," he went on. "Let's never speak of that French officer again. It was long ago, and anyway it really didn't amount to anything."

If he expected recognition of this magnanimity he was disappointed for she did not speak.

"Who was the other Columbine?" he asked in a casual tone as he was about to rise from table.

"Evidently someone who went to the same costumer I did," his wife replied.

"But—." He checked himself; then with some feeling, added: "I don't think they ought to send out duplicate costumes for the same party, do you?"

But she failed to reply.

Often in the eight years of their married life he had been disturbed by her trait of remaining silent when she disagreed with him. He had never known a woman with Eleanor's capacity for silence. It gave her a mysterious power.

Old Soldier's Humorous Explanation for Not Braving Displeasure of His Better Half.

"When our concern was publishing histories of Missouri counties, some years ago, one of our solicitors brought in a hard-luck story that seemed amusing to me, but meant the loss of $5 to him," said William H. Bingham, field man for a large Chicago publishing house. "The subject was an old farmer living near Bear creek, in one of the northern counties. Our man sat out on the porch and jotted down the history, which the farmer gave with eagerness. The farmer had been in the Union army, and showed an honorable discharge.

"Finally everything had been noted down by the solicitor, who briefly summarized the facts, and said they would be carefully written out in the office and printed in our forthcoming history of the county.

"The solicitor handed the farmer a blank to sign, but just as he reached for the pencil:

"'Don't sign that!'

"A large, aggressive woman appeared at the door, her ample hands resting on her hips.

"'This is only an order for one of our county histories, with your husband's biography in it,' explained the solicitor. 'He doesn't have to pay a cent till he gets the book.'

"'And what is the book going to cost?' she demanded.

"'Fifteen dollars.'

"'Fifteen dollars for just one book?' the wife cried. 'Why, I can get a whole shelf full of books for that. Don't you sign that, Zeb,' and she walked back to her task in the kitchen.

"'Here,' said the solicitor, again tendering the pencil; 'sign here.'

"But the veteran shook his head.

"'Guess I won't go in,' he said with finality.

"'What? You scared of a woman? A man who stormed the Vicksburg entrenchments and entered the captured citadel.'

"'Yes, yes, I did all that,' admitted the old soldier, 'but you see, I had some friends with me than.'"—Kansas City Star.

Then She Got the Cookies.

Alice came dashing in from her play.

"Oh, mamma! mamma!" she called.

"What is it, dearie?" mamma answered, from the kitchen.

"Mamma, I want some cookies," Alice begged.

"But I just gave you some a moment ago," mamma protested.

"I know," Alice admitted, "but I ate those, and now I need some more."

"But I don't think you need any more," mamma declared. "It isn't good for you to eat so many cookies. Why, when I was a little girl your size I wasn't always eating cookies and things between meals!"

Alice thought this over for a moment. Then:

"Well, maybe you didn't," she admitted, "but then you surely didn't have as good a mamma as I have!"—Kansas City Star.

The Cave Spring School.

Few springs were better known, or more used on this border of civilization, than was the "Cave Spring," that served the pioneers and their children to the second generation. It is scarcely necessary to mention its site on the present Graham boulevard near the crossing of Charlotte street. Here, according to family history recalled by Mrs. Nellie M. Harris, a school was taught by Mr. Piper. This school was in existence about 1840 and the pupils now remembered by Mrs. Harris as attending were her uncles, Washington H. and Joseph Smith Chick, and William Mulkey.—From the Missouri Historical Society Publication.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Shelbyville.—Two federal agents, accompanied by Sheriff Jesse J. Smith and Officer Charles Goebel of this city, conducted raids in the south part of Shelby county. Frank Drake and Robert Martin, both of Washington township, were arrested for violations of the prohibition law. Drake was charged with the possession of a still and the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. He was found guilty in police court, but appealed the case to Shelby Circuit court where the appeal of another case for unlawful possession against Drake is already pending for action. Martin pleaded guilty to a charge of unlawful possession of liquor and was fined $100 and costs and sentenced to 90 days imprisonment at the Indiana state farm.

Evansville.—The campaign to raise $1,000,000 for Evansville college probably will be postponed until January 1, 1924, in order to leave a clear field for the campaign of the Young Women's Christian association to raise money with which to build a new home. Although the college campaign has been under consideration for two years, the college trustees decided to withdraw in favor of the Young Women's Christian association as to the campaign in Evansville and Vanderburg county.

Decatur.—The Adams county commissioners awarded the contracts for the construction of three macadam roads. Meshberger Brothers received two contracts. They were the John Ludy road in Monroe and Blue Creek townships, bid $4,898, and the Babertscher and Braun road in Monroe township, bid $9,685. The third contract, that for the Zimmerman road in French and Hartford townships, was awarded to Arthur Zehr, on his bid of $13,980.

Jeffersonville.—Birt Tawney, age fifty-four, who was indicted by the Clark county grand jury on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, was arrested at his home at Port Fulton. It is alleged that Tawney formed a partnership with Louisville men for the sale of paints and obtained $250 from them by falsely representing that a Cleveland wholesale firm required a deposit of $500 to guarantee payment for shipments of paints.

Muncie.—The Muncie chapter of the Izaak Walton League of America is expected to have 400 local fishemen as members when the charter is closed at a dinner to be given in the Roberts hotel April 4. The club's officers are Dr. Karl T. Brown, president; Dr. Frank B. Garner; vice president; Oliver F. Raymond, secretary, and Dr. Burl R. Kirklin, treasurer.

Seymour.—Ray Armstrong of Bloomington has been appointed superintendent of maintenance of the state highway system in the Seymour district. He succeeds O. T. Stanfield, who was transferred here recently from the Aurora district. Considerable maintenance work will be done on the state roads in the next few weeks.

Seymour.—W. K. O'Neill, supervisor of the state highways in the Seymour district, has posted notices that bids will be received at the office of the Indiana state highway commission in Indianapolis for more than 20,000 yards of gravel for the repair of roads between Franklin and Scottsburg and near North Vernon.

Columbus.—The Columbus Chamber of Commerce took action to bring about the paving of the state highway from Columbus to Franklin. The Chamber of Commerce at Edinburg will be asked to appoint a committee to act with the local organization in a conference with the state highway commission.

Salem.—"The Charm School" has been selected by the senior class of the Salem high school for its class play. It will be presented April 18 and 19. The principal roles have been assigned to Lillian Boggs, Ona Brannaman, Nora Languell, Lloyd Porter, Lee Streaker and Roger Simpson.

Valparaiso.—The burned and blackened towers and walls of the old college building at Valparaiso university collopsed due to the thawing of ice which covered the structure. The students have volunteered to clear away the debris.

Portland.—The county board of education, in its monthly meeting, voted 7 to 5 to approve the recommendation of Purdue university for the election of H. S. Heckard of Cass county to the office of county agent.

Edinburg.—William Mason, fifty years old, was found guilty in Johnson Circuit court on a charge of selling liquor and fined $200 and 90 days on the penal farm.

Bloomington.—The Swartz Construction company of Bedford has been granted the contract for $[illegible] to erect an [illegible] at College avenue and [illegible].

Kokomo.—The farm home of Mrs. William [illegible] was [illegible] by fire with a loss of [illegible], partly covered by insurance.

[illegible]

Crawfordsville.—J. M. McClung physical director of the Anderson Y. M. C. A., was chosen general secretary of the Crawfordsville association. He succeeds Arthur Breaks, who temporarily accepted the secretaryship prior to the campaign in which more than $40,000 was raised to cancel the debt and bonds on the Y. M. C. A. Mr. McClung has been physical director at Anderson for the past five years and is now president of the state association of physical directors. He will come here to take up his work within a week or two and has already been released from duty by the Anderson "Y."

Paoli.—The story of the settlement of Northeast township from the date of the first land entry made by Frederick Phillips in 1811 to the days of the Civil war was the principal subject of papers and discussions before the members of the Orange County Historical society in an all-day meeting in the Presbyterian church. The history of the medical profession of Orange county was given. J. M. Trinkle, president of the organization, presided.

Marion.—Orville Wells, Republican, was declared the legally elected trustee of Fairmount township over David G. Lewis, Democrat, by a majority of 12, by J. Frank Charles, judge of the Grant Circuit court at Marion. Wells and Lewis opposed each other in the Fairmount township election last November 7. On the face of the returns Lewis won. Wells appealed to the commissioners' court, which found Wells was elected. The case was then appealed to the Grant Circuit court.

English.—The Crawford county live stock marketing committee, composed of Alva T. Roberson, English; Sam Lone, English; Henry Balding, Grantsburg, and Jesse Brown, Riddle, has been appointed by the Crawford county farm bureau at English. The committee will receive and ship all hogs and cattle that are to be sold by the farmer members of the bureau. The live stock will go direct to the Louisville (Ky.) market.

Marion.—Judge F. O. Switzer of Wabash has been chosen to preside at the trial of Leonard P. Hodgin, president of the Kokomo Stone company, who was indicted last fall by the grand jury on charges of forgery and filing false claims, the attorneys for Hodgin, having filed request for a change of judge. Pleas of abatement, filed by the attorneys for Mr. Hodgin, are pending in court.

Greensburg.—The largest baptismal service ever held in this city was witnessed at the Greensburg Christian church when 72 persons were baptized. Among them were men and women of middle age and several who were well advanced in years. Those baptized were converts of the Christian church at Newport, seven miles east of here, where revival meetings have just closed.

Marion.—The Illinois Glass company, which operates a large factory at Gas City, is preparing to continue its policy of expansion, and in order to further enlarge its plant, has filed a petition in the Circuit court asking for the vacation of the west end of South D street in that city. The company owns all the lots abutting on the street.

Delphi.—The mystery of the fire which destroyed a large barn on the William H. Myer farm, east of Bringhurst, was cleared, when Arthur Petty, age sixteen, a paroled prisoner of the Indiana reformatory, who had been making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Myer confessed to setting fire to the building.

Anderson.—E. B. Northcutt, formerly captain of police, and Ludie Cohen were arrested, when police and two federal agents searched Northcutt's barroom and seized four gallons of intoxicating liquor, which officers said was found under a bar. Northcutt provided bonds of $500 for himself and Cohen.

Evansville.—Official notice of the spring convocation of the Scottish Rite Masons, Valley of Evansville, has been given members. The dates are April 2, 3 and 4, and it is expected the event will bring several hundred Scottish Rite Masons from southern Indiana, southern Illinois and western and northern Kentucky to this city.

Greencastle.—Edward Coombs of Reelsville was fined $500 and sentenced to serve six months on the state farm by a jury in the Putman Circuit court, which found him guilty of assault and battery on Charles Reeves. Coombs was charged with assault with intent to kill.

Franklin.—$100,000 is the estimated amount of damage in Johnson county done by the high wind which prevailed the other night. At the Indiana Masonic home, near here, the arcade leading from the [illegible] building to the [illegible] Memorial building was [illegible] heavy damage.

Canada Offers "Last Chance" for Virgin Farms

THINK of what you could produce on a farm of virgin fertility, without the burden of high-acreage cost. Think of what 20-to-40 bushel wheat would mean to you under these conditions, and of dairying and stock raising on cheap pasture land. Land pays for itself in a few crops—no artificial fertilizer—no heavy investment. You have envied the farmer who got his start when land was cheap. Here's your chance, perhaps your last chance, for the same brand of prosperity.

Western Canada—Your Opportunity!

Western Canada is the farmer's land of opportunity. Thousands of settlers who started not many years ago with little or nothing, are today the owners of fine farms, with comfortable homes and barns, thoro'bred stock, dairy herds—all the marks of prosperity. Yet land is not dear—only $15 to $20 an acre for rich, virgin, prairie convenient to railways. Land is not dear in Western Canada—yet—because there is so much of it. But many settlers are expected in 1923, and now is your opportunity, before the best farms are taken. Get started. Taxes are reduced, not raised, on land brought under cultivation. On farm buildings, improvements, machinery, personal effects, automobile, etc., there is no tax at all. Canada wants workers—it wants its land farmed—and the farmers, through their municipal councils, have practical control of all local taxation.

Special Renter's Plan—Buy Out of Profits

To aid and encourage the honest worker with perhaps little capital, the Canadian Government has a "Renter's Plan", whereby one may work a new or improved farm—"Try it out" for several years if desired—and buy a farm of his own out of profits.

Thirty-Two Years to Pay

For the benefit of those wishing to buy land, a national non-profit sharing organization—the Canada Colonization Association—has been established, with head office at Winnipeg, and United States office at St. Paul. This Association offers selected land convenient to railways—much of it at $15 to $20 per acre—on very small cash payment; no further payment until third year; balance extended over thirty years, but purchaser may pay up and obtain title at any time, if desired. Interest six per cent.

Exports of pork and pork products from the United States were less in 1922 than in 1921.

The annual production of lumber and structural timbers for general building purposes reaches a value of nearly a billion dollars.

As a rule the average temperature for February differs only slightly from that of January according to records of the Weather Bureau.

The pasture area of Canada has been decreasing steadily during the last five years, according to reports. In 1922 it amounted to but 9,695,000 acres, compared with 11,333,000 acres in 1918.

New York State led in the total prodnction of apples in 1922, but was second to Washington in the commercial output. Either of these states produces more apples than any other two states.

The continued high price of leather makes it a wise precaution on the part of the farmer to put his leather equipment into good working condition before the spring rush starts. Properly selected leather more than repays in good service the care spent upon it and reduces materially the amount the farmer must expend on this one item.

A Yarn Without a Yawn in It!

The Joy of Living

By Sidney Gowing

If you want to see the age of romance re-created right here in the Twentieth Century, read this captivating tale.

Billy Spencer, from Colorado, steps into a thoroughly English picture and carries the occasion just like a knight of old. And the Honorable Aimee, daughter of Lord Scroope, acts right up to American ideals of enterprise and daring in furthering Billy's actions.

Romance does not suffer in the slightest degree, in fact is aided, by the delicious humor which enters the situations. Everyone in the story, excepting possibly a couple of burglars, is funny; and even they are interesting.

Save the papers, because you will want to read this tale a second time.

Freshmen	90.46
Senior	87.

Our School Exhibit will be held during next month. The exact date is not yet decided.

Attendance in the H. S. is back to normal after spell of sickness.

The school cleared eight ($8.00) dollars by the sale of seeds some time ago.

Two members of our H. S. go to Auburn next Friday night to compete with the winners of the regional contests for county honors: Dorthea Scholes, vocal solo and Louetta Daily, reading.

FRESHMEN:

Our English work is now partially devoted to work in public speaking. It has made us realise how easy it is to see the faults of others and how very difficult to correct the same faults in ourselves.

Because of Mr. Hart's illness the Grammar room pupils were cared for by the H. S. teachers. This may give them a sample of what is before them when they get out of the eighth grade. We know!

W. B.

SOPHOMORE:

In history our study of the different European countries has been rather disconnected, therefore Mr. Maxwell has allowed each of us to write a paper dealing with the country which we choose.

We are expecting to put forth our best efforts on this work.

The next English classic work will be Hawthorne's "Twice-told Tales." A few of the class have been unable to secure copies of the classic so if anyone has one which they would like to sell please notify some high school pupil, to that effect.

War Returns: General Caesar has accepted the surrender of the Bellovaci and the Ambiani, and he is now marching into the territories of the Nervii. Watch for further activities next week. L. E. K.

JUNIORS:

Although greatly handicapped by lack of laboratory supplies, the Junior and Senior Physics class find their work very fascinating. The work for last semester dealt mainly with the theories of Heat, Light, Sound (which includes the principles of musical instruments) and electricity. The work naturally involves frequent discussions of present day science which are equally interesting.

The English class has the pleasure of looking forward to a grammar test next Wednesday morning. Only you who have studied this "impossible" subject, can appreciate what that means. Your sympathy will be appreciated! R J.

SENIORS:

We are glad that Dorthea Scholes, a member of our class is to represent the high school at Auburn next Friday night at the county contest.

Mildred Scholes took part charge of the Grammar room during the absence of Mr. Hart.

The Grammar III and IV class has now completde the study of verbs and will start work on clauses and phrases. R. A. W.

There Maybe Nothing To It

An item in the police news of the Fort Wayne News-Sentinal for last Friday evening read something as follows:

"A light Ford car owned by H. G. Hursh, a grocer from St. Joe, was stolen sometime Thursday afternoon from its parking place in the 200 block on West Main street."

Harry says that he found the car near the place where it had been pushed ahead. However, he will partly admit that he had forgotten just where he had parked the car until after he had reported it taken.

Lutheran Notes

A series of sermons on "Creation" will be preached at the Lutheran church at the evening services. There will be a sermon on each day of Creation and one on the Rest day following. We believe that the Bible and science agree when understood. How long did it take to create the world? Did man come up from the monkey? Do you believe in evolution? Come and let us study these and many other questions regarding the beginning. The sermon on the first day of creation will be preached next Sunday evening at 7:00 o'clock. Some layman will read, another will pray, and the music will be good. Be sure and come.

LOOKING FORWARD

"Forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark.

The last chapter in 1922 is ended two months past and the new Year is well on its way, so once more we have entered upon the cycle of new and untried experiences which will mark another milestone in life's journey.

We can have a happy year in very truth when we know that we have played our part in the game of life well, when we have been fair, just and reasonable with our associates and have been sympathetic and progressive in home and community life.

We press toward the work of a better service and a greater business.

Four Reasons Why You Should Buy Your Ford Car This Month

I

The unprecedent demand for Ford Cars throughout the winter months has taken the entire output of the Ford plants working at capacity, indicating that the demand this Spring will be far in excess of the number of Ford Cars that can possibly be built.

II

January was the tenth consecutive month in which retail deliveries exceeded 100,000 Ford Cars and Trucks. Requirements for February, the month when preparations are already under way for Spring business, called for 148,407 Cars and Trucks--more than 24,000 in excess of the number we can possibly probuce.

III

Ford dealers in many parts of the country are already finding it necessary to specify future delivery dates on Ford Products because there are no reserve stocks to draw from.

IV

Your order placed now will protect you against delay or disappointment later on--It is the only way you can be assured of reasonably prompt delivery.

We consider it important to give you these facts, so that if you are planning to purchase a Ford Car, Truck or Fordson Tractor for use this Spring or Summer you can list your order at once and take advantage of our dealer's first opportunity to make delivery.

No Human Being Saw the Savior Leave the Tomb

It is strange to consider the fact that the most extraordinary event in the world's history was witnessed by no human being.

Jesus rose from the dead, but nobody beheld His resurrection.

The soldiers placed as guards at the sepulcher were first to discover that the body was gone. They saw the stone (which sealed the entrance) rolled away, and soon afterward, going in, they found the tomb empty.

Mary Magdalen was first to arrive at the tomb the next morning, which was Sunday. Finding it empty, save for the white linen cloths in which the body had been wrapped, she hastened in great distress to Peter and John, her supposition being that it had been stolen.

Peter and John could hardly believe what she told them, but, going to the sepulcher thereupon, they verified her statement.

John had been an eyewitness of the crucifixion. He knew that Jesus was dead, and to his mind that tremendous fact was final. To all the followers of the Master His death was a shock peculiarly dreadful because they had taken it for granted that He could never die. After His execution, they had no notion that He would return to them, and, as will presently be shown, even the apostles were at first wholly incredulous of His resurrection.

John tells how he saw the soldiers break the bones of the two thieves, as they hung on their crosses, to hasten their death; and, further, that they did not do this to Christ because He was dead already—a fact which was made sure by a spear which one of the soldiers thrust into Jesus' side.

Tomb Guarded by Soldiers.

Jesus had preached doctrines which the authorities in Jerusalem regarded as dangerously socialistic. In addition, His teachings had given offense to the Jewish priesthood, which stirred up popular feeling against Him. Arrested on trumped-up charges, He was condemned to death to satisfy the mob and appease the rancor of His high-placed enemies.

Pilate, though he weakly yielded to the demand for Jesus' condemnation, had himself no sympathy with the proceedings. It was therefore with entire willingness that he granted to Joseph of Arimathea permission to take down the body and see to its interment.

Joseph of Arimathea was a rich man. He had, a short time previously [illegible] of a burial vault, cut out of [illegible] rock—presumably for the use of his own family. Hither the body, wrapped in white linen, was taken and laid out to await embalming.

Thereupon it was that certain Jews went to Pilate and said to him: "Sir, we remember that the Deceiver said, while He was yet alive: 'After three days I will rise again.' Command, therefore, that His sepulcher be made sure, lest His disciples come by night and steal Him away, and say unto the people, 'He is risen from the dead.'"

Pilate granted the request, and sent a squad of soldiers to guard the tomb, against the opening of which they rolled a large bowlder, to close it. But in the night an earthquake came; the bowlder was rolled away, and, when the soldiers entered the sepulcher, a little later, the body had disappeared.

An Angel Appears.

We read: "One of the soldiers came and said, 'Know that Jesus is risen!' The Jews said, 'How?' And he replied, 'First there was an earthquake; then an angel of the Lord, bearing lightning, came down from Heaven and rolled away the stone, and sat upon it. And, through fear, all of us soldiers became as dead men, and could neither flee nor speak.'"

> And the angel answered and said unto the woman, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus that was crucified. He is not here, for He is risen as He said.—Matt. 28; 5-6.

The soldiers, worried lest the disappearance of the body bring punishment upon them, sought advice from the high priests, who gave them money, saying, "Say you His disciples came at night and stole Him away while we were asleep." The priests promised to square the matter with Pilate, and so the affair was adjusted.

"He Is Risen."

The same morning (Sunday), after Mary Magdalen, Peter and John had visited the tomb and gone away again, women came to embalm the body in accordance with the Jewish custom, bringing myrrh and aloes for the purpose. On entering the sepulcher they saw (according to St. Mark), an angel—"a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment." They were frightened. But the angel said: "Be not affrighted. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified. He is risen; He is not here."

The immediate followers of Jesus were not only overwhelmed with distress by His death, but felt a very natural alarm for their own safety. They could not fail to perceive that they were in great danger. At any moment they might be arrested as criminals, and meet the same [illegible] fate as that which had overtaken their Master.

Their best chance was to scatter and hide, and to remain hidden until the excitement was over. This, in fact, was what they did.

They do not seem to have paid serious attention to what Jesus told them about His approaching death, or to His promise that He would rise again. That this is true is proved by the incredulity with which they received the news of His resurrection. At first they refused to believe it at all.

Christ Appears to Mary.

Two women (Luke 24:11) told them that Jesus had appeared to them near the sepulcher, and that they had actually taken hold of His feet; but the Apostles thought it a foolish and incredible story.

Mary Magdalen (Mark 16:11) told them that she also had seen the Master, though He would not permit her to touch Him. They thought that she was either lying or a victim of delusion.

Two of the disciples of Jesus stated that they had seen the Savior; that He had talked with them, and had walked with them to Emmaus, a village eight miles from Jerusalem—whereupon He had suddenly vanished. Their story (Mark 16:13) received no credence.

All three of these appearances occurred on the very day of the resurrection; and it was in the evening of the same day that Jesus presented Himself before eleven of the apostles who had assembled (doubtless for consultation) in the "upper room," wherein the Last Supper had been held. Even the evidence of their own senses did not convince them of His corporal reality until they touched His wounded side and saw Him partake of food.

Thomas Doubted.

Thomas was not one of the company gathered on that occasion; and when they said to him afterward, "We have seen the Lord," he refused to believe, saying, "Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe."

When Jesus appeared to the apostles in the "upper room," they took Him for a ghost. Only by talking and eating with them was He able to satisfy them that He was not a disembodied spirit. The two women who saw Him near the sepulcher on the morning of that day had at first the same idea; and it is likely that the same is true of Mary Magdalen.

Nor did the apostles easily overcome this first impression. When, more than a week later, He appeared to seven of them at the Sea of Galilee, they failed at first to recognize Him, and their first emotion was that of fear. This, too, [illegible] the fact that all of [illegible]

BUGS AND WORMS GARDEN ENEMIES

Sprayers and Dusters in Demand From Time the Seed Goes Into Ground.

Insect immigrants from foreign countries added to the list of those that are natives of America have very materially increased the worries, both of the home gardeners and the commercial truck growers. When it comes to conducting the fight against the inroads of these pests, the home gardener is often at a decided disadvantage, because he does not have the sprayers, the dusters and the other equipment. There are the so-called biting and chewing insects which eat the plants, sucking insects that suck the sap of the plants, worms that work under the ground and bugs that work on the tops of the plants, moths that fly by night, and almost every conceivable form of trouble maker. Fortunately for the gardener, the entomologist has worked out the habits of these garden enemies and has been able to prescribe a poison or a repellent or some means of perfecting the crops from the pests.

Every home gardener should prepare to fight insects at the very beginning of the season.

CABBAGE FAMILY IN HOME GARDEN

Big, Juicy Leaves Supply Splendid Vegetable for Boiled Dinners, Salads.

Corned buffalo hump and cabbage probably served as many a cave man's Sunday dinner.

The cabbage has been esteemed as a vegetable for 1,848 years that we know of, a ripe old age. Buried somewhere in the centuries of its history is the head of the cabbage and the reason thereof.

We are indebted to Pliny the elder, the famous Roman scientist, who wrote the first "natural history," for the earliest accurate mention of the cabbage as a vegetable. He stopped writing in 79 A. D., when he lost his life in the destruction of Pompeii.

The cabbage, cauliflower, brussels sprout, the kales and kohlrabi probably are all descended from a wild plant native to the sea cliffs of western and southern Europe. Its Latin name is Brassica oleracea.

In its native state it has a loose rosette of large, thick leaves for the storage of surplus moisture it may collect when it rains, and these leaves [illegible]

[illegible] bage grew enormously, developed a stem and by the mere speed of its growth developed a head. The cauliflower probably tried to make leaves and flowers at the same time and compromised with the white "curd" which is a thickened, flattened overgrown flower cluster.

The history of the development of the cabbage gives the key to its culture. The richer the soil and the faster it is kept growing, the larger and solider the heads. It must be grown fast to head fast. If through lack of fertility or drought its growth is checked, there is either no real head or a loose, very inferior one, the whole strength of the plant going to develop such leaves as it had produced before the check. The Chinese cabbage is an entirely different species from the common cabbage and its brothers.

Cabbages and their relatives are known as Brassicas to the English gardening experts, that being their Latin name, as choux to the French and as kohls or kraut to the Germans.

SWEET PEAS FINE FOR THE BOUQUETS

No Annual Gives More Beautiful Flowers—Must Be Given an Early Start.

Everybody wants sweet peas. No annual gives more beautiful flowers for cutting, and this plant is particularly useful for cutting. It makes a beautiful display for a time, but its real value is to provide bouquets for the house.

No one can have sweet peas without giving them an extra start. They will not endure hot, dry weather and flourish. Consequently they must be planted early. If the ground is workable in March they should be put in, planting them deeply, say about two inches.

It is much surer and safer to plant them in pots or boxes or in a cold frame for an early start. The paper flower pots of small size which can be very cheaply purchased, or the paper drinking cups which can be had at a small outlay are ideal for starting the individual plants, pricking holes in the water cups for drainage. It is a good plan to have some light sticks seven or eight inches long if they must be kept indoors or under glass for some time upon which the tiny plants may start to climb. Otherwise they become hopelessly entangled.

Sweet pea growers are with great difficulty weaned from the habit of thick planting of the seed, much the same as with the garden pea. The idea of spacing the individual plants six inches apart is hard to convey to an old-fashioned gardener, yet one season's experiment with the plants so spaced, the soil being thoroughly [illegible]

WHY TAKE LAXATIVES?

Discovery by Science Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Doctors prescribe Nujol because it acts like this natural lubricant and thus secures regular bowel movements by Nature's own method—lubrication.

As Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, it cannot gripe and, like pure water, it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

THE AWFUL MESS OF AIMEE AND BILLY

Alexander's eyes became keener. He looked a little contemptuous.

"Are you afraid?" he said. "Do you not see that you must face the consequences of this foolish thing you have done? Once the truth is told, you have nothing to fear from the police."

"The police!" said Aimee scornfully. "I'm not afraid of the police. I'm not much afraid of Aunt Erythea. It isn't that at all. It's—the other thing."

"What other thing?"

Aimee looked at him with growing embarrassment.

"Oh!" she said at last, desperately, "have I got to put it in so many words? My staying at Ivy cottage! Didn't you understand what I told you? I was there—two nights."

Mr. Lambe, to her surprise, did not look forbidding or censorous. Instead, he looked a little puzzled. And in that moment Aimee conceived a liking for Alexander.

"Now that I have seen you, and heard your story," he said, "I attach no importance to that incident, whatever."

"Ah," said Aimee sadly, "but other people will, you see."

Alexander suddenly flushed crimson, and he avoided Aimee's eye. But his face grew peculiarly grim.

"I have only this to say. That man—that Spencer—who dared to expose you to such a situation, is the culprit I wish to see. He deserves—"

Aimee's heel smote the floor.

"Not a word against Billy! It's he who saved me, right from the beginning. He begged me to let him own up. But he has kept my secret, at his own risk, because I wanted it kept. He is a gentleman!"

* * * * * * *

"Billy," said Aimee, "this is my Cousin Alexander. And he's—he knows all about it. It seems this is our finish, Billy."

The two men turned and faced each other.

There you have it in a nutshell—the awful mess that Aimee and Billy have got into. For Aimee is a bishop's daughter and a nice girl—they don't make 'em nicer. And Cousin Alexander is a young churchman—and churchmen are obliged to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. And Aimee is masquerading as a servant maid, and is mixed up in a burglary and is gallivanting around with an unknown American, Billy Spencer, who has a new kind of motorcycle to sell. Incidentally, Billy is as nice as they make 'em, too.

It's an English story, but it's bright as a new American dollar. And entertaining! and thrilling!

Sidney Gowing is the author. He's a comparatively new man, but he's already made an international reputation. He certainly has written a good story here, which deserves its name—"The Joy of Living."

—1—

Sentenced.

"I can't go, dad," said Aimee desperately, "and I won't!"

"My answer, my dear Aimee," said Lord Scroope firmly yet benignantly, "is that you must go, and you shall!"

"A month of Aunt Erythea," said Aimee in stifled tones, "would kill me. Why are these things always piled on to me? I'm fed up!"

The Very Rev. Viscount Scroope, archdeacon and incumbent of the living of Scroope Magna, gazed dreamily over his daughter's head without appearing to hear her. A sunbeam filtered through the diamond panes, illumining his silver hair and finely cut features. It was as though the sunbeam said: "Behold a saint; here is one who hears and speaks no evil." A saint Lord Scroope undoubtedly was; calm, benign and immovable as granite.

"My dear child," he said gently, "let us admit the cold light of reason. You can have no genuine objection to your Aunt Erythea, for you have never set eyes on her since you were three years old. Jervaulx abbey is a well-appointed and strictly ordered house. It is an atmosphere which will correct, I hope, the influence of that deplorable school from which we have removed you. You must go. Aunt Erythea desires that you shall go. And that, as you will realize when you make her acquaintance, is final."

The Hon. Aimee Scroope's vividly lovely face became still more mutinous and desperate.

"And do not suppose that you will lack youthful society," added Lord Scroope, smiling. "Your cousin, Alexander Lambe, is at Jervaulx. A little older than yourself, doubtless, but an excellent companion for you. A young man wholly devoted to good work, and with unexceptionable connections, he will doubtless attain that eminence which his aunt would wish for him."

Aimee looked at her father with intense suspicion. Then she turned to the photograph of a young man in a clerical collar; the face was pleasant but somewhat serious, with large, frank, round eyes. The face that Aimee made at it was hideous.

"Go and tell your maid to pack, dear child," said Lord Scroope gently, patting her head. Aimee was twenty years of age, and stood five feet six, but her father continued to have the air of patting somebody about three feet high.

[illegible]

this awful visit!" She expounded with extreme rapidity and terror her views on Jervaulx, Lady Erythea Lambe, and Alexander.

Lady Scroope twinkled, and was so exasperating as to laugh. She put her hands affectionately on her daughter's shoulders.

"Sorry, Aimee," she said; "there is, as you would say, nothing doing. You will have to go. I can't have your dear father worried any more. I don't think," she added pensively, "there's any cause for real alarm about Alexander Lambe."

"It's all very well for you," mourned Aimee, "but—"

"I'm really sorry, dear. I am going to the Milne-Temples and elsewhere for a few weeks, but when I come back I will make it up to you. These are the little crosses you have to bear."

She kissed her daughter, and hurried down to the car.

The car whirled her away, and Lord Scroope followed it with dreamily adoring eyes. Aimee, who had watched the pair with a sort of exasperated affection, turned into the morning room.

"What on earth," she murmured, "is one to do with people like that?"

She encountered her guest and cousin, Georgina Berners, twenty-three, plump and placid, dressed in a style that suggested enforced economy. Miss Berners was looking wistful.

"Why, Georgie," said Aimee, encircling her ample waist, "have you the hump, too? Let's be miserable together."

"It has been lovely here at Scroope," sighed Georgina, "and you are such a dear. I've nothing to go back to but Uncle Joseph, who doesn't think about anything but biology, and scarcely remembers I exist—though he is quite kind, of course. It will be awful after this."

"I've never met your Uncle Joseph," said Aimee, "but I'm certain he's nothing to my Aunt Erythea and Jervaulx."

She broke into a frenzied and vivid word-picture of all that awaited her.

"A place something between a cathedral and a barrack, and a fearful sort of Roman matron with a nose like the duke of Wellington's— [illegible] young man. I've seen his photograph. His face—"

"It's the face," said Aimee fiercely, "of a cold boiled codfish! I've seen it—I've seen it! It made me feel as if my shoes were full of water!"

"Aimee!" said Georgina plaintively. "You appal me!"

"Good thing! Then you know how I feel!" retorted Aimee pertly. "The whole thing appals me. These curates! I'm fed up with them! Alexander is the limit!"

Aimee paused for breath.

"He's a frump!" she said, with extraordinary vehemence.

"He is good!" insisted Georgina. "That is a good man's face, if ever I saw one. And," added Georgina, with a rapt expression on her plump features, "he will fall in love with you, Aimee. I'm sure of it! And when that happens—"

"Oh, you make me sick!" said the frenzied Aimee. "It's a disease with you! Sentiment revolts me. This maundering about love—"

"Aimee," said Georgina almost tearfully, "your very name means 'Beloved'!"

"Oh, rats!" said Aimee furiously, and fled from the room.

CHAPTER II

Escape.

In the deepest depression, Aimee wandered down the park avenue towards the high road. She passed through the lodge gates and turned the corner of the road.

There Aimee halted, and considered the perversity of Fate. And close beside her barked a sharp explosion, with a flash of yellow flame and a whiff of pungent smoke. And a clear voice exclaimed:

"H—!"

"Just what I was thinking!" said Aimee.

A young man, who was tinkering a motorcycle, whence came the explosion, looked up startled, and removed his cap.

"Oh! I'm sorry!" he said. "I didn't know there was anyone around."

They looked at each other, and both laughed. It was impossible to look at the stranger and fail to laugh. Not in derision, but joyously, spontaneously, as one laughs when the breeze heels the boat, or when a puppy dog falls head over tail.

When the motorcyclist grinned, his teeth were so white that they gave the effect of a flash. His fair and rather tousled hair caught the sun. His head looked as if it might be rammed through a door, without damaging anything except the door-panel. He was big built, and about twenty-five, but his bright blue eyes might have belonged to a boy of sixteen. He wore dusty blue overalls.

"That's better!" he said approvingly, as Aimee laughed again. "You were looking as if you felt pretty low."

"I was. Everybody has been appalling! Talking sentiment till I feel sticky all over."

The stranger's face fell.

"Gee! That's too bad! Sentiment, eh?" He made a gesture as if ward- [illegible] ing a loving hand on the tank of the motorcycle—"to sell this."

"Weird-looking thing!" said Aimee, with interest, for the cycle's engine was of a remarkable shape. "Yours?"

"Mine!" said the stranger joyously. "Alone I did it. I hold the patent. It's a Sanakatowzer—the Flying Sphinx!"

"Ripping name. Can it fly?"

"Can it fly? It devours space like the sunbeams lick up the mists of the mornin'! And no more noise than a baby's whisper.

"Around the world in thirty winks
When once astride the Flying Sphinx!

"It's got Sinbad's Carpet an' the Seven-league Boots guessing." He threw a leg over the saddle. "Like a spin up the road? Jump up behind!"

Aimee immediately perched herself on the carrier. There was a whirlwind charm about the stranger that carried her away. The next moment the Flying Sphinx did the same. The wind whistled past Aimee's ears. To keep her seat she was obliged to grab Billy suddenly round the waist.

"Don't mind if I hold you?" she gasped.

"Shucks!" said Billy impatiently. "I don't care how you hold me, s'long's you don't hit the grit!"

They breasted the crest of the rise.

"Hang tight now!" he cried. "We'll let her out!"

The Sphinx went forward with the whirr of a shell. She peeled the roadway behind her like a running tape. Aimee felt the roar of the wind rise to a scream. Billy leaned lightly forward towards the handle-bars, cool, effortless, efficient.

Aimee was only conscious of being whirled gloriously through space, when the Sphinx, after a two-mile loop, slid back to the spot whence she had started. Aimee sprang from the carrier.

"Oh, thank you!" she gasped. "That was too good to be true!"

The cyclist, without dismounting, looked at her glowing face and frank eyes.

"I wish there were more like you," he said, laughing. "Tell 'em—whoever they are—to can the sentiment. S'long, an' good luck to you!"

He raised his cap, and next moment the Sphinx whirred him away in a cloud of golden dust. Aimee followed him with her eyes till he was round the bend, then she turned back into the park. It seemed to her that the sunlight had become less vivid and the sky paler.

Very slowly, Aimee made her way back to the portals of Scroope Towers, where the heavy family car, laden with luggage, stood waiting. Georgina was on the steps, abundantly wrapped up, and Lord Scroope stood beside her.

"Grundle," he said to the chauffeur, "you will drop Miss Berners at the station and take Miss Aimee on to Jervaulx, returning here direct."

The chauffeur, who was a middle-aged man with a singularly wooden expression, seemed to be making a mental effort. He saluted, staring straight before him.

"Goodby, Georgina! Bless you, my child; bless you! Drive on, Grundle. What are you waiting for?"

The car meandered out of Scroope park and turned northward along the main road. Georgina was in low spirits. Aimee throughout had been seething with an enormously increased sense of mutiny, and, as they neared the station, she exploded.

"I can't stand it, Georgie!"

"I wish I were you!" said Georgina mournfully.

"Eh?"

"I wish I were Aimee Scroope, and on my way to Jervaulx abbey. That's all."

Aimee started slightly. An extraordinary impish expression came into her eyes. Georgina, who knew the sign of old, looked at her nervously.

"You are!" said Aimee, in a voice of unlooked-for decision.

"What on earth do you mean?"

Aimee gripped her by the arm, and replied, in a low voice that bubbled with excitement.

"My dear, fat cousin, your full name, as I remember, is Georgina Amy Scroope Berners! Lop off the superfluous head and tail and there you are—Amy Scroope. Near enough for anyone. You are going to Jervaulx instead of me! Aunt Erythea has never seen me, nor has Alexander Lambe. And neither of them know you from Adam—I mean Eve! You'll suit them down to the ground!"

Georgina looked at her with dawning terror.

"It's a gorgeous arrangement!" ex- [illegible] and scattered them on the road. "You can take my things with you!"

"If you think for a moment I'd have anything to do with such a business—"

A fiendish expression came over Aimee's features. She gripped her cousin's arms again.

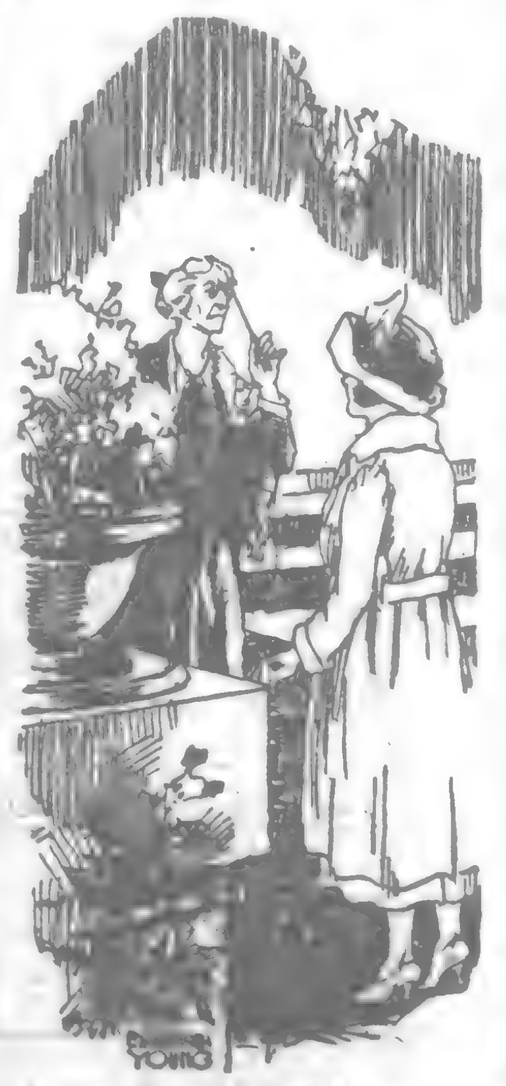
"If you don't," she hissed, "I'll tell everybody about you and Aloysius Blennerhasset getting lost at the ruridecanal picnic!"

At this monstrous accusation, Georgina blushed scarlet. The mildest peccadillo in a blameless life, the memory of the incident in question always filled her with alarm; Aimee had held it over her head before.

"I won't listen to another word!" she gasped.

"You needn't. It is the time for deeds!" Aimee seized a small square box from among the luggage and thumped the chauffeur on the back. "Grundle, stop here! I have only a bag, I'll walk up to the station approach. Take Miss Berners on to Jervaulx. And hurry—she is behind time already!"

A faintly bewildered expression passed over the chauffeur's face, as though he were trying to arrange his ideas. He rubbed his ear for a moment, then saluted and let in the clutch.



Georgina Faltered.

Georgina, who had risen with the intention of escaping from the car, lost her balance and collapsed in a slightly undignified manner on the seat.

She struggled up and turned a flushed face towards her cousin.

"Stop! Stop!" she cried, in an agonized voice. "Aimee—"

"Good-by, dear!" said Aimee, waving her handkerchief. "Don't get lost with Alexander!"

The car bore the speechless and gesticulating Georgina out of sight round the bend. Aimee sat down on her box, buried her face in her hands, and dissolved into such unfeeling laughter that a pair of thrushes and a chaffinch fled from the hedge in indignation and alarm.

* * * * * * *

Onward through the green lanes and over the county border the car carried a limp and nerveless Georgina. Consternation had given away to numb despair.

"What shall I do?" she thought. "What am I to say to Lady Erythea? There'll be a fearful row!"

Georgina racked her brains for a way out of the difficulty. There seemed to be none. She lay back exhausted. And so perverse is even the purest of human minds that a faint suggestion crept into Georgina's—a little whisper, as it were, in that blameless ear—that it would be peculiarly delightful if she could fill the role that Aimee had mapped out for her.

Georgina started, and thrust the idea from her with horrified self-reproach. Again she sought for an explanation—a true one—which would save Aimee's face. By the time she had considered and rejected half a dozen, [illegible]

the luggage. "There is—there is a mistake! May I—"

"The modern tendency of the young to enunciate indistinctly," said Lady Erythea, producing an ear-trumpet, "always annoys me. Say what you have to say clearly."

Georgina had not realized that Lady Erythea was extremely deaf.

"There is something I have to explain," she bawled hoarsely into the ear-trumpet. "P-please, can I see you alone?"

"Ah!" said Lady Erythea vaguely. "I am pleased that you look forward so much to your visit. No, you need not fear being alone. Here is your cousin," she added, as a young man in clerical collar came out upon the steps. "Alexander, your cousin, Aimee."

Georgina turned a pale and timid face to the stranger. The Rev. and Hon. Alexander Lambe bowed.

Alexander was large and well, though somewhat loosely, built. Aimee's epithet, "owl-faced," was hardly fair. Certainly his clean-shaven face was a little serious, and his eyes large and round, but very kindly.

"Welcome to Jervaulx, Cousin Aimee," he said.

A sudden interest and sympathy quickened in the large eyes as they rested on Georgina's face. And the panic-stricken girl's fear died within her. Mr. Alexander Lambe looked so cool and protective and dependable.

"Escort your cousin to the morning room, Alexander," said Lady Erythea authoritatively, "and offer her refreshment after her drive."

They walked in together. And as they walked their backs seemed to suggest, in some subtle manner, that an understanding, a mutual sympathy, had dawned between them. Backs can be very expressive sometimes.

Lady Erythea regarded them with a look of commanding approval. She followed them majestically up the steps.

"This," proclaimed Lady Erythea's erect and overwhelming back, "is as I ordained it from the beginning."

Re-Enter Billy.

Aimee tramped along the broad highway, whistling. At Scroope, much more at Jervaulx, one was not allowed to whistle. Ever and anon she stopped whistling to laugh.

Aimee had dropped the square box into a quarry pit an hour before and continued on her way unburdened. The idea of finding lodgings at Seabridge appealed to her. She had funds enough. A month's pocket money was in her purse, and Lady Scroope had been liberal on her departure.

"What a row there'll be," chuckled Aimee, "if Georgie doesn't play up! I don't care. I gave them my ultimatum. They can't hang me. I've been very patient with them all. One must make a stand sometime or other. Who does my life belong to," demanded Aimee, never a purist in grammar, "if not to me?"

A faint sound was borne upon the breeze, a noise that attuned itself curiously to Aimee's thoughts. It was like the buzz of a homing bee. She looked up, and saw a motorcycle speeding along the road with a smear of following dust behind it like the tail of a comet. Aimee recognized the Flying Sphinx, and became aware of a laughing face looking up at hers, and a set of very white teeth.

"Why, it's Billy!" she cried spontaneously.

"Hello, old chap!" cried the cyclist.

Billy was bare-headed, his fair hair sticking up at the crown in a little tuft that blew about in the wind.

"Where were you making for?" he said.

"The unemployment bureau!" retorted Aimee flippantly.

Billy's face expressed concern.

"I suppose you're guying me. You don't mean you've lost your job?"

"Job?" Aimee bubbled with amusement. "Well, I had a job all ready for me this morning. But it's washed out. I've lost it. And now I'm adrift."

Billy was perplexed. He had been wholly unable to place Aimee. He wondered if she were a governess. A question was on his lips, but he checked himself for fear of giving offense.

"Lost it?" he exclaimed. "I guess it's just as well! You look a heap happier! What job d'you think of [illegible]

Allen County Farmer Robbed Of $150

W. C. McNabb, who has resided on his farm eleven miles southeast of Auburn, during the past winter, was robbed Sunday morning of about $150 by a Pole by the name of Kutas, a 17-year-old youth who had been employed by Mr. McNabb to do chores about the farm.

Kutas was formerly in the employ of Elijah Saylor, a farmer living about two miles north of St. Joe. He had been working for Mr. McNabb but a short time previous to the robbery Sunday morning.

Mr. McNabb went to Ft. Wayne Saturday with some hogs which he sold and had the money in a pocket of his coat. Sunday morning Kutas informed his employer that he thought he would go over to Mr. Saylor's and Mr. McNabb told him that he might either drive or ride one of the horses over. Kutas said he would rather walk and started across the fields.

Mrs. William Gugerli, Mr. McNabb's daughter, residing on the farm regarded the departure of the Pole with some suspicion and informed her father, who searched the pockets of his coat, to find the money gone. He, immediately started in pursuit but was outdistanced by the thief and the last seen of him was when he cut across a ravine and into the woods adjacent.

Mr. McNabb immediately got in communication with Sheriff William Morr in Auburn and officers within a radius of 80 miles were notified to be on the lookout. The sheriff of Allen county, together with Sheriff Morr were soon on the scene and a thorough search was made of the territory surrounding the McNabb farm.

The officers have been unable to locate the thief.

A Legend of the Easter Children

By LESLIE PINCKNEY HILL

THE legends say children were first
To be abroad that Easter day
When morning out of darkness burst,
And angels rolled the stone away.
For children's hearts are quick to feel
The deadening pall of mortal pain,
And children's hearts are first to heal
When light and comfort come again.
And they had loved the Lord Christ's face,
And on His knees had laughed and cried,
And heard Him say the heavenly place
Is where all child-like souls abide;
And they had often heard Him tell
Strong men by pride and greed defiled
That they could never please Him well
Till they were humble as a child.
And they had heard the tale that grieves
All little hearts: how One so dear
Was nailed upon a cross with thieves,
And tortured with a poisoned spear;
And how the temple's wondrous veil
Was riven by the lightning stroke,
While, mingled with the women's wail,
The earthquake and the thunder broke;
And how black night came down at noon,
And ghosts from graves that opened wide
Skulked out beneath a blood-red moon,
When He that loved the children died.

For two long days no girl or boy
In Galilee or Jordan plain
Could laugh or sing, for hope and joy
In every little heart was slain.
But when the earth that third day morn
Was flooded with such golden light
As never since the world was born
Had come to dazzle human sight,
Then every child, the legends say,
Knew that the time was at an end,
Knew that the stone was rolled away,
And flew to meet the risen Friend.
And long before the Magdalene
Had reached the empty sepulchre,
Or Peter heard what she had seen,
Or fleet John hastened after her,
The children had gone forth and found
The Master in the garden walk,
And scattered lilies on the ground,
And seen His smile, and heard Him talk.
No child was puny, halt, or lame,
Or hungry, or in tatters clad,
But clothed as if in light they came,
And all were whole, and strong, and glad.

They throng along the Kedron rill,
They thread the city through the gates,
Straight up to Joseph's garden hill,
Where He that loves the children waits.
They dance, they sing, they climb the trees,
They circle round in ring and file;
They know they cannot fail to please,
And win the guerdon of His smile.
He lifts His hand: "I bore the pain
Of death for men by sin defiled;
I rise henceforth to live and reign
Lord of the Kingdom of the Child."
They vanish, and He stands alone;
And when the women come to weep,
The garden flames with flowers new-blown—
The children are at home asleep.

"What makes that garden spot so bright?"
The learned rabbis stroked their chins;
They know not yet that love is light,
That knowledge fails where love begins.
But somehow still on Easter morn
The world is beautiful again,
And in each child-like heart is born
Some yearning of good will to men—
Some haunting sense, some happy dream
Of singing birds, of daffodils,
Of olive branches, or the gleam
Of dew-shine on the Syrian hills.

Auburn High Wins First In Contest

Auburn high school won out in the county discussion, musical and literary meet, held in the M. E Church in Auburn last Friday night, by taking first place in three of the five events. The remaining two events were coped by Garrett.

Spencerville sent entries for the discussion, the piano solo and the double mixed quartette events, and St. Joe sent entries for the reading and the vocal solo, none of whom came out first. Miss Ellen Lake of Spencerville took second place to Philip Harding of Auburn in the discussion; Spencerville took second place to Garrett in the double mixed quartette and Miss Anna Beerbower also of Spencerville took second in the piano solo. John King of Garrett won out in the piano solo event. Eloise Harris of Auburn won first place in the reading and Miss Louetta Daily of St. Joe took second.

In the vocal solo Dorothea Scholes of St. Joe took third place. Carol Kutzner of Auburn was first and Harriet Bowman of Waterloo was second in this event.

Ashley and Butler were not represented in this meet having been eliminated in the contest the previous Friday evening.

The district contest will be held at Angola next Friday night instead of Fort Wayne as here-to-fore.

No Rain In Nebraska

The following was clipped from a Nebraska paper dated March 9, and shows how other sections of the country are hit.

"The first thunderstorm of the season prevailed in this section of the state Saturday morning and a number of thunder claps followed by showers. The rain continued falling at intervals during the day, and it is the first moisture of any consequence visiting this locality since last October. It will prove a boon to the winter wheat which had begun to suffer from lack of moisture.

Birthday Surprise By Lutherans

The Phi Alpha class of the Lutheran Sunday School surprised two members of the class, Dr. C. R. Price and Wm. Henley on their birthday anniversaries which fell on the same date, Monday evening at the latter's home.

In a bean guessing contest Mrs. Ray Reasoner won first prize and Frank Curie booby prize, as being best and poorest guessers. Games and music and a splendid lunch were also features of the evening.

Twenty-eight were present and are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. M. T. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. George Simanton, Mr. and Mrs. Ed Pflaumer and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Shull, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Reasoner, Mr. and Mrs. F R. Bowman and danghter, Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Curie, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Paint-Up

Painting your house after a thorough cleaning up is like putting on clean clothes after an invigorating bath. Cleanliness makes you feel so good you just naturally want to "doll up." A new dress of paint on your house makes you feel proud to own the place. To clean up and then neglect to paint up makes you feel like any decent man feels with a clean shave and a dirty collar.

Now is the time to paint, and our prices are right.

Just Why Hare Is a Figure in Easter Legends

Every Easter we are accustomed to see in the shop windows the hare with his little basket of eggs or standing with some gift or reminedr of the season in his paws.

But our grandmothers would tell us that when they were young they did not have the hare in any form at Easter.

Now, why should any one suppose that it is the hare and not the hen who is responsible for these particular eggs, and what has he got to do with Easter? asks Klyda R. Steege in the New York Times. There is a good deal to be said on this subject and it leads one into somewhat curious paths of research.

Easter is a feast governed by a lunar period, and the hare, in many religions and countries, is the symbol of the moon. There are several reasons for this. The hare (not the rabbit, one must understand) is a nocturnal animal, and comes out at night to feed. Hence there is a connection in the mind with something that watches as does the moon. It was formerly a popular belief that the hare never slept. It is a fact that it is born with the eyes open, unlike the rabbit, which is born blind, and it was supposed never to close them. For this, by a homeopathic system of reasoning, the brains and eyes of the hare were used as a cure for sleeplessness.

Influence of the Moon.

In all old superstitions the moon was thought to be sometimes masculine and sometimes feminine, the former when it was increasing and growing stronger, and the latter, as its light and power waned. The hare was supposed to have the power of changing its sex also like the moon.

If we go back to Egypt we shall find, so Mr. Andrew Lang tells us, that the Egyptians frequently represented the god Osiris as a young hare. Many Indian races worshiped the dawn as a hare, and a leaping hare was the symbol of the dawn, or of the opening year, when all life is renewed. The Egyptian word for hare was "un," which means to open. As in the spring feasts eggs were broken to symbolize the opening of the year, so the association of the hare with them may easily be explained.

In our Easter representations of the hare, his cousin, Br'er Rabbit, is generally his substitute. It is true that though the latter has his own stories and associations, they have no particular connection with Easter, but he looks [illegible] to please the [illegible].

[illegible]

To the early [illegible] the use of eggs was not prohibited during Lent, but after the Fourth century they were not allowed in the [illegible] from Ash Wednesday until Easter. The hens, however, were no less industrious in Lenten days than at other times, so they kept on laying. The good hens, of course, could not know about cold-storage warehouses or they might have laid up riches for themselves. But their thrifty owners saved as many of the eggs as they could and dyed them for their children to amuse themselves with at Easter.

It was the custom in England in the early time for rulers to give presents of eggs to their courtiers at Easter, and in Russia as many of the people as could went to kiss the hand of the empress and to receive the gift of a decorated porcelain egg. In the same country on the morning of Easter the servants brought baskets of eggs to the churches to be blessed. These were afterward eaten, kept as amulets or given away. In Italy almost every one brings eggs to be blessed, and presents are made of other eggs to the priest who comes at that season to sprinkle the houses with holy water and to give his blessing.

In former times in France eggs were tribute to the king at Easter, and the largest and finest were reserved for him. During the reigns of Louis XIV and XV after mass on Easter Sunday the courtiers received gifts of gilded eggs.

Bells' Travels to Rome.

There was an old tradition that the church bells went to Rome to be blessed at Easter, and that they brought back with them eggs dyed like a cardinal's cloak to prove that they had really been there. Though how the bells managed if no one seemed to know.

There was also the idea that angels came down at Easter bringing baskets of eggs for the faithful, and occasionally great trouble was caused by some one of the angelic baskets containing an egg of doubtful character. This naturally was most disturbing and what was done in such cases is difficult to surmise.

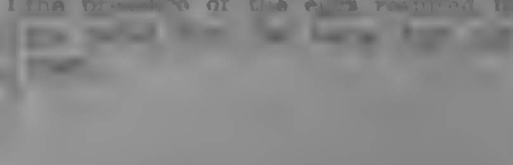
There were many Easter games and customs, such as the English country custom of the women lifting the men and the men the women on Easter Monday and Tuesday to receive a piece of silver money and a kiss for pay.

We must not forget Paris in our mention of Easter celebrations. All the week of Easter women used to go about the streets, and perhaps they still do, with barrows piled high with colored eggs, generally red and white, and the people of the city used to call it the week of the eggs.

Years ago there was a curious game played at Bresse, when among the spectators on one Easter were Marguerite of Austria, then gouvernante of Flanders, and Philibert the Fair of Savoy. It was the custom to scatter on a level, sandy place 100 eggs. Then a lass and a lad would take each other by the hand and dance the national dance in and out among the eggs. If they succeeded in executing it properly without breaking a single egg they were considered betrothed, even if their parents should object. On this occasion, when royalty was present, three couples one after the other failed in their attempt, but Austria and Savoy succeeded, whereupon the story goes that Philibert said, "Let us adopt the custom of Bresse." The princess let her hand remain in his, and so they were married.

But now this egg hunt leads us to the fact that Washington is not the first nor only place in he world where they roll eggs on Easter Monday. It is an old, old custom. Boys and girls used to do it in many an English village and town. There was an old song which they sang as they played and it bore the refrain:

"Garland, parland, haste egg day."



Story of the Easter Bunny.

The story of the Easter bunny is told by Christoph von Schmid in Schuffler's book on Easter. A German lady living among the poor in a small mountain village, where eggs were unknown, wished to introduce these delicacies to the [illegible]. She had a coop of fowls brought into the village and taught the people to use the eggs. [illegible] and roots, to give them a variety of brilliant colors, "as the earth has just [illegible] herself with many colors." [illegible] the presence of the eggs resulted in the belief that the hare [illegible]

The Cottage Gardener

Training Tomato Vines to Stakes Is One Very Important and Satisfactory Form of Intensive Gardening. More and Better Fruit Can Be Had and Cultivation Is Easier.

KEEP WEEDS OUT OF GARDEN, LAWN

Growth of Foreign Soil Sappers Must Be Kept Down if Success Is Attained.

The weed problem is by far the greatest one the cottage gardener and home owner has to contend with. While in some sections of the country there are weeds that are not found in other sections, there are some kinds, such as the friendly dandelion, burdock, and a few others, that abound everywhere.

Weed seeds are produced in larger quantities than vegetable or flower seeds, in proportion to the size of the plants. It is more natural for the weed seed to be carried by the winds from one lot to the other, thus making it an almost difficult task to determine where the weeds come from, after the painstaking gardener or lawnman has during the previous season cleaned his garden and lawn many times of every weed in sight.

Getting Weed Roots.

Weed seeds can be carried for miles by the wind. These seeds live through the winter, despite the severe freezing. The small plant makes its appearance when the young grass first takes on life. If the small weeds are not allowed to develop they can be disposed of with little difficulty, but it takes time to so inspect the lawn that such objectionable weeds may be pulled or dug out. In the garden the young weeds may be clipped off with the hoe.

Rear alleys and adjoining vacant lots are the favorite producing places of the most annoying weeds. It would be well worth the gardener's time, if necessary, to clean out the weeds in the alleys and vacant lots adjoining him before he rids his own grounds of the weeds. Otherwise he can safely count on a fresh crop about as soon as he has disposed of a previous one.

A regular weekly inspection and slaughter of weeds, preferably by pulling by the roots, is good advice to the cottage gardener and homeowner who wishes to be free from weeds, as they require more attention than the garden plants.

WHAT TO PLANT EARLY

[illegible]

[illegible] cannot give it too much spading. [illegible] it is a good plan to spade it under as [illegible]

THE TOMATO MUST HAVE MUCH CARE

Large or Small, Early or Late Varieties Require Almost Daily Attention.

Almost any garden would be incomplete without tomatoes. There are varieties sufficient to satisfy almost any taste as to season and size. There are varieties that have been known to weigh as much as five pounds to the single tomato. Others of the plum type are as small as the small plums.

Colors are of several tints, including deep and light red, flesh and yellow.

The majority of small, smooth tomatoes belong to the family that affords the earliest fruit. The Ponderosa and the famous, though not so well known, Beefsteak are larger, wrinklier and later. The Beefsteak takes its name from the round steak because it is solid in the center, and the few seeds in the fruit are to be found at the outer edges in small seed cells.

A difficulty frequently encountered in growing tomatoes is that during certain seasons of the year the blossoms fall off rather than set fruit. From observations this is due to unfavorable weather conditions.

While we cannot overcome the difficulty entirely, at the same time it can be remedied to a limited extent by means of the following factors:

First, setting out of stocky coldframe plants, preferably of early varieties.

Second, proper selection of place.

Third, select a fertile soil or manure the soil.

Fourth, set the plants deeply and properly spaced.

The advantage of a stocky coldframe plant of an early variety is that it will set on a large amount of fruit before the unfavorable weather conditions set in.

Two factors to be considered in the selection of a place to set the plants are:

In the first place, under no conditions should plants be set in a soil where tomato wilt or leaf spot occurred the last few seasons. If plants are set in such soil they will be diseased similarly.

Second, where possible, set the plants where they will be protected from the southwest winds. Such protection may be afforded by means of buildings, trees, hills or plantings of tall plants, planted thickly in a row, such as corn. Do not set the plants too close up to the protection so that the shade will affect the growing of them too much.

Set tomato plants deeper than they originally stood. In case of large plants they may be set three or four inches deeper than they originally stood and a second set of roots will be produced and, on account of the original roots, which would be set deep in the soil, the plants will be better able to withstand dry weather.

Staking or trellising and pruning are factors worthy of consideration in growing tomatoes, and where you expect to stake and prune the plants, if the plants are set in rows four and one-half feet apart, about two feet to thirty inches apart in the row, cultivation can be kept up throughout the entire season.

CARE OF CUCUMBERS

Fine long and crispy cucumbers may be easily raised in the back-yard garden if given attention. They require rich soil and, if given plenty of water, in most cases will produce abundantly.

AN INTIMATE PORTRAIT OF EDITH BARNARD DELANO

It is difficult to know quite where to begin in writing of Edith Barnard Delano. She has done and is so many things. She began writing when she was little more than a girl, and sold immediately her first ten stories. She adds, "and then the good old grind. Meanest job there is—writing—but I would not take any other."

More stories sold, a great many more, to all the leading magazines, and then she wrote for the screen. But Mrs. Delano is an artist, and the call to return to the "legitimate" writing of fiction was too great. She abandoned the motion-picture field, except vicariously, for her place as a novelist.

She was the first author to whom I talked of the Star Author Series of Matrimonial Adventures. Her grasp of the idea was instantaneous. Though one of the biggest magazines in the country is monopolizing her work, she agreed to join. "For Value Received" is short in length, but large in scope. One to whom it was read in manuscript remarked, "Every wife should run away just once."

MARY STEWART CUTTING, JR.

On the way back from the post office Anita Prescott stopped at the turn of the road, where the old apple tree was shedding its rosy petals, and looked down at Miriam's house. Just so had she first seen it on that day four years before, when she and Michael were on their honeymoon wandering; yet it was not that moment of companioned ecstasy that had brought her back, but the remembered peace of it. Peace—that was what she had wanted; when she determined to escape from all that was not peace, all that was disillusion, a sudden vision had come to her of the little white house under the elm, the red roof and the smoke wavering up from its chimney, and the strong, smiling woman who had given them milk to drink. Peace—a refuge during the long year that she must wait for freedom; peace that she must have, and that, she told herself, she should find here. Determination, vision, flight; then a visit to a lawyer who "took" cases like hers—as if there could be any other like hers!—and, finally, speech with Miriam at the door of the white house.

"You don't want to board here," Miriam had told her. "I have a room, yes. And I'd just love to have you. But this isn't the place for you. You don't know anything about me."

"As much as you know about me."

The other shook her head. "I guess it's different," said she. "Folks around here don't have anything to do with me. You'd be lonely."

"I want a place where I can be—alone."

The woman gave her a steady look; then she said, calmly, as though offering an explanation that did not touch herself at all, "My name's Miriam. Around here they seem to thing it ought to be Hagar."

Anita flushed a little under the baldness of it; but she said, "Well—there's a wilderness for must of us. I am—in flight, too."

"Come in," Miriam had said; and so far that remained the fullness of explanation between them. Anita was thinking of it today, because of the letter she had brought from the village, the letter postmarked Cleveland and forwarded by the man who took cases like hers. "You will remember that you were warned," her mother had written. "Your hiding yourself away now is nothing more than a pose. It doesn't help things. You can get a divorce here as well as wherever you are, and you will come home at once, where you belong. The sooner it is all over, and we can forget the unfortunate affair—"

Anita's lips twisted in a bitter little smile; her eyes hardened. She crossed the road to the grassy bank under the apple tree, and leaned her elbows on the fence, looking off across the mellowing fields. Beyond, a tremulous breath of green along the river; early-plowed furrows gleaming where the setting sun touched them; purpled shadows under the hill, appleblow in her hair, bluets and violets under her feet, a world pulsing to new life—this quietude, this peace, peace but for her thoughts—her being here a pose! Oh, yes, they had warned her! Heavens, how they had warned! She had been won by the glamour of a uniform; they didn't know anything about his people; he wasn't their "sort." He was poor; worse, he was visionary, with those talked-of inventions of his; did she suppose she could be happy as a poor man's wife, even though she did have a wee bit of money of her own! And look at the day his lips set, and that hard look that came into his eyes when he [illegible] had warned her. And their warnings had but added to her feeling of release, her joyous sense of conquest, when she had gone to her man.

Four years ago—and now it was all over! Her mother had no better word for it than to call it an unfortunate affair, that marriage and the divorce she was waiting for. No better word for those four brimming years of life. Only that, for the first glad confidence of having found her mate; for the happy making of the little home; for her pride in her Michael. That, for the daily growing loneliness, the feeling of being cut off from her own world; for the slowly creeping reserves between them that had been swept away, at lessening intervals, by the re-blossoming of their love; that—for quarrels and kisses, for bitter words and repentant cheek to cheek, for the hours that he was away from her and his increasing absorption in his work and her unreasonable jealousy of it; for the crowning moments of their repledged love—oh, for all of it, everything! Not great things; not even great things, but little things that totaled so disastrously high; and, at last, for her conviction that their marriage had been a mistake, that they were not meant for each other, that the only thing to do was to end it, to end it. Then, her flight; her communicating with him through the man who took cases like hers; and, at last, Miriam's.

Now for a month she had been here, where she had thought peace must dwell; been here watching spring come, watching Miriam, thinking. Sap rising, birds on the wing; Miriam, working; Anita—thinking. Miriam plowing, Miriam at work in the garden, sowing early peas, digging parsnips and taking a share to the house next door and leaving them on the doorstep; Anita—watching, thinking. Miriam and her father, that old man who gave her no pleasant word, nor helped in her tasks; the old man with a snarl, a bitter name for her sometimes; the old man sitting in the sun, or in the window with a Bible on his knees; Miriam serene in the kitchen, humming, tramping from stove to table; Anita—idle, thinking. The cow lowing for her calf; Miriam carrying a brimming pail of milk across the grass to the house next door, the girl there who went in when she saw her coming with the gift; Anita—remembering Michael, his obliviousness, thinking, thinking. Blue birds nesting; Miriam running to a child who had stumbled on the road, wiping the tears from its face; Anita—thinking, of the children Michael had wanted, and she had not. The clod of a youth next door, and the stone he threw at Miriam, and the way she smiled when she put hot water on the cut; Anita—thinking, thinking of the wounds of the spirit that she had kept to herself and resented, thinking, thinking.

"You aren't much like other women," Miriam said to her one day, when she had come back from leaving another thankless gift at the house next door. "You never ask any questions."

"Well—you aren't much like other women, yourself," Anita answered.

But Miriam laughed, tossed back a stray lock of hair and said, "Oh, yes I am! That's just exactly what I am!"

The old man muttered an ugly name; Anita watched Miriam, watched the swelling apple buds, thought. Thoughts that were bruises, memories that flamed and seared; questionings that would not be answered; no help from the nights or days, no bread of understanding, no water of comfort. So had the weeks passed.

The day the letter came she went out after supper and sat on the doorstep. A young moon had left the night to the radiance of gleaming stars; the tender sweetness of the air was pierced by the song of the little frogs caroling their return to life, and the sadness of past summers, and the joy of the summer to come; the fragrance of the drying fields was like an incense. A world drowsing, yet stirring to resurrection . . . Michael . . . at work, of course . . . later, the opening of a door and the night's air coming in; his step on the stairs and the way—the way—Oh! No—no!

Miriam's skirt was brushing Anita's shoulder. "What a night!" she said. There was a basket in her hand. "Don't you want to walk down the road? I have an errand. A man who does work for me sometimes is in trouble."

They went side by side through the song and the incense and the starlight, Miriam intent upon her errand, Anita—remembering, thinking. They went through the village, and those they met passed them by as though they were shadows; they came to a house on a hillside beyond, a low, poor house, where a lamp shone from within. A man came to the door; his eyes in his unshaven face looked as though some fire of pain had burned in them and died, leaving them scorched. He looked at Miriam.

"I can't come to work in the morning," he said.

"I know," she told him. "I'll be there with you, tomorrow. Here's something I've brought for her to eat. You must take some, too. You'll need your strength."

"She ain't eat anything yet," the man said, "She's awful sick—grievin'."

Before they had gone far on their homeward way the man overtook them. "I wanted to ask you—would it be showing respect if I [illegible]

[illegible] ness, all the dregs of her accumulated thinking, lay in the word.

"Yes, it is. Struggle is not beautiful, nor shirking; but just living is."

"There was death back there, wasn't there. Pain first, and death, and sorrow. Is that beautiful? And your days—the way you have to work, the way people—that stone . . . How can you call it beautiful?"

"I know," said Miriam. "I used to feel that way, too. I hadn't weighed things. I used to think more about what I had to pay than about what I had. Of course you have to pay for whatever you have! Everybody has to pay, one way or another. But that's only fair. Life's worth it."

"Never! Nothing could be worth—what you have to pay sometimes."

"Ah—" The word was a murmur of protest; then Miriam said, "Look up at that sky! It was a night like this that I went away, with—him. Oh, I knew what I was doing. I knew what they'd—think of me. Rightly, too. I knew I'd have to pay, but I'd made up my mind that what I would have would be worth it. It's the greatest thing there is; I guess everybody pays for it one way or another. We had always loved each other; I threw him over; and after mother died, and I came back here to teach the school and look after father, he was married to someone else. They lived next door. Yes, those are his children. He always worked hard, but he never got on. His wife—she wasn't easy to live with; at last they had to take her to the asylum—hopeless. Her mother came to look after the children. Then—he got tuberculosis. There on the porch, night and day; not a chance for him here, but the West—so we went. He lived eight years. And I lived them. Now—I'm paying, that's all. It was worth it."

Oh, those thoughts that sobbed and sang, those thoughts that stung and throbbed and flamed! "Worth it! Then what you had was different, somehow greater—?"

"It was just what other women have. Good and bad. The better and the worse. Marriage is like that. Neither of us was an angel. You don't live with any man eight years on honey. His wife died soon; and we were married before the law; but sometimes I remembered what I'd done, and something in me shrank away from myself; sometimes he was lonely, fretful, impatient. We said things; we wanted things. But we had each other. We belonged. Yes, it was worth it."

They walked on through a shadowy place, came out into the starlight again. "You are so strong," whispered Anita.

"Because I came back here to look after them all? I'd have had to pay, anyway. It's life that's strong. You don't get away from life. Life makes you pay, even when you think you're dodging payment. Honest—life is. It gives—but it makes you pay for value received. One way or another."

They were passing the house next door, where the surly girl and the cruel lad lived. "One thing you escaped," Anita said. "You must be thankful that you had no children."

Miriam stood still, looked at her. "I would give all the rest of my life," she said, "if I might have put a child of mine into the arms of the man I loved. I would go into any bondage if I might only serve a living child of my own, and it would be freedom, blessed freedom."

Anita shuddered. "Ah—you're not like any other woman! No one else would say that, honestly! Children are care and anxiety and mostly sorrow—do you think anybody deliberately chooses that, today?"

"I know they do! It's a small price to pay for the joy of it, child."

"Never! It's not worth it! I don't believe anyone honestly thinks it is!"

Miriam walked on. "Come with me tomorrow," she said, "I think perhaps you'll understand, then."

So, in the morning, they walked the road together again; this time Miriam had a great sheaf of blossoms in her arms. They came to a quiet place on a hill, and there they met the man of the night before. There was a small box at his feet, carefully wrapped, and in his hand a spade. He began to dig, and as the yellow earth became a mound Anita drew back, shuddering . . .

"One was a boy and one was a girl," the man said. "Twins. The others is all girls."

"Yes," said Miriam, softly. "Two to love. Two to remember."

"We'll do that," said the man. "Both of us will do that."

Anita's hand went to her throat. They waited until the mound was higher, until the man stood waist-deep in the earth.

"I guess it's enough," he said, looking up at Miriam. "They're so little."

She gave him the boughs of bloom. "Make them a soft bed," she told him. He took them—blossoms that would never be fruit—and lined the grave with them. Anita watched his [illegible]

"Would you want to see it?" he asked.

[illegible]

"It isn't everybody has twins," Miriam said. "You've had them."

"That's what my wife said. 'I'm glad we had them, anyway, Ben,' she said." He laid the little box down upon the soft bed of flowers.

Anita, feeling as though the wings of her spirit were beating against her heart, stumbled away into the woods. Last year's leaves underfoot; a dead thrush in the path; fern unfolding, and—and the earth falling from the spade, back there . . . Life, that was life, everywhere . . . honest life, that gave and gave, and made you pay . . . Bread of understanding . . . Water of comfort . . . Michael. . . .

* * * * * * * *

She found their little house locked and unlighted; she guessed that he had not used it since her flight. She found him on the old couch in his office, an arm thrown over his eyes in the gesture of sleep that she remembered. Her picture was still on his desk; but the littered untidiness of his papers, his crumpled clothes the weary relaxation of him, all impressed her as never before with the pitiable helplessness of the male, his unconscious dependence on woman-made comfort.

"Michael—Michael—" Oh, on her knees—just to touch . . . him. . .

The eyes that met hers were like that other man's who had lost and suffered, blackened from a fire that burned too hot and too long. "Nita!" he whispered. Then, sitting up, "Nita! It's—Nita."

"Not a sob—speech first, and her hands upon him. "Michael! I've come back. I'm sorry, Michael, I didn't understand!"

"Understand—"

"It's you I want, Michael—and life—to be together. I'm willing to pay—"

His grasp on her arms hurt her, but the hurt made her glad. "Nita! What are you talking about! Pay?"

"Pay—yes! I've found out, Michael—I've thought, oh, thought! I was wrong—I wanted happiness, and I wasn't willing to pay for it. I thought you could have, without paying. I know better now. You have to pay for everything—life makes you do that, whether you want to or not. But it's worth it, Michael, it's worth it."

His face close to hers, his eyes smoldered with a gleam of fire in them deep. "Worth it!"

"Ah—yes! You, and me, together! That's the great thing. Nothing else counts. Life—I want all of it, good days and bad; all our joy and even—even sorrow. And children—I want children; and work, and—and wanting and hoping—Oh, I want you! You, Michael! I'm willing to pay whatever I must . . ."

Now it was his arms that hurt, and his heart on hers that made the singing. "Oh, my darling! Life can't be long enough to pay for all that! I need you so . . ."

"Oh, spring and blossoming summer, and the fall of leaves. Oh, life and its song and its battles! Oh, the dear weight of his head on her breast, her hand on his heart! Oh, promise—fulfillment!

"Yes, dear—yes! I'm here with you. . . ."

EARLY FORM OF CIGARETTE

Columbus' Historian Tells of Methods of Using Tobacco as Practiced by the Indians.

Of all things American, nothing is more so than the cigarette. When for the first time a European set foot in the western hemisphere, those Indian natives of San Salvador, who so startled the brave Genoese by blowing smoke from their mouths and nostrils, were really smoking crude and primitive cigarettes—tobacco wrapped in the leaves of Indian corn. Bartholomio de Las Casas, the apostle of the Indies, who edited the journal of Columbus, in his "Historia de las Indias," tells of two men of Columbus' party who returned from an expedition inland with an account of how the aborigines were accustomed to the solace of tobacco. Their manner of smoking, as narrated by Las Casas, plainly suggests the cigarette, and this is accounted the earliest reference to the use of tobacco in that form.

The natives of the New world, said the Spaniard, "wrap the tobacco in a certain leaf, in the manner of a musket formed of paper," and, "having lighted one end of it, by the other they suck, absorb or receive that smoke inside with their breath."

An Old Acquaintance.

He was the typical masher, and when he boarded the street car he looked carefully down the aisle before he sat down, and chose a seat beside a pretty young girl. The passengers were immediately interested, although inclined to resent the young man's forwardness.

As the man sat down he looked carefully at the girl, smiled at her and tipped his hat.

"I beg your pardon, but haven't we met somewhere before?" he asked.

The girl gave him her best icy stare.

Almost a Monopoly.

"In the United States," remarked the man who can remember figures, "there are 12,357,000 motorcars, according to the automotive division of the federal Department of Commerce. Do you realize what that means? I've done a little figuring and I ascertained that it means that out of every six motorcars operated in the world five of them are to be found within the United States of America. The world's motorcars total 14,622,000. About 2,000,000 of this number are trucks. In Europe, according to the same authority, motorcycles, without side cars, are taking the place of the low-priced car. Over there are more than 680,000 motorcycles, about three times as many as are registered in this country.

The output of zinc in the United States in 1922 gained 76 per cent. over that of 1921.

The first newspaper in the United States was the Pittsburgh Gazette, its first issue having been printed July 29, 1786.

The value of new aluminum produced in the United States in 1922 was $13,622,000, an increase of about 25 per cent. over the value in 1921.

The highest point in the state of Florida is only 325 feet above sea level. An area of it of about 15,000 square miles lies less than 50 feet above sea level, and a part of this area, about 750 square miles, lies less than 20 feet above sea level.

The value of milk consumed on farms in 1922 was nearly equal to the value of the milk sold, according to estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture. The farm value of milk sold is estimated at $722,000,000 and of milk consumed on farms at $636,000,000.

Wool is produced in every State in the Union. In 1922 production totaled 219,095,000 pounds (not including pulled wool) compared with 225,546,000 pounds in 1921. Wyoming and Texas led in production in 1922, having produced 22,500,000 pounds and 19,300,000 pounds, respectively.

Strawberries are so easily handled and require so little room that if only one of the small fruits can be grown in the home garden they should have the preference. New plants for setting out this spring can be purchased at small cost from a nurseryman, or perhaps may be obtained free from a neighbor. In either case, says the United States Department of Agriculture, the bed should contain some plants known as a perfect-blossom variety, otherwise the plants of the imperfect-blossom variety in the bed will not be pollinated and consequently will not bear fruit.

More than 9,500 farmers since the last census have placed their breeding operations on a strictly pure-bred-sire basis and are following methods leading to further improvement, records of the United States Department of Agriculture show. This has been a development of approximately three years. At the present rate of enrollment the number will pass the 10,000 mark within the next three months. This number of live-stock owners represents the ownership of more than one million head of stock, all of which is improving by the use of pure-bred sires. An additional requirement for enrollment in the campaign is that sires must be of good quality in addition to being pure bred. The department issues an attractive emblem of recognition to live-stock owners who co-operate in this activity.

Saturday, April 14, has been decided upon as the date for the annual school exhibit.

In a recent teacher's meeting it was decided that First Aid equipment should be purchased with the money which resulted from the sale of seeds.

FRESHMEN:

The teachers are now giving us plenty of work to do in preparation for the exhibit. With it always comes the same advice, "Put your spirit into it and work hard."

Our English work now deals with letter writing. We find this difficult but interesting.

After a Civics test last week we exchanged our papers and graded them. Our ability to recognize errors was considered.

Our class seems to lack patriotism, as only one of our members has displayed the class motto and flower. W. B

SOPHOMORE:

One of the most interesting phases of our Rhetoric work has been that of letter writing. In the personal letters, which were written in class, some startling facts have been unearthed.

We are doing our share of the preparation for the annual exhibit. No time for play now.

From Caesar: From spies, the Nervii learn Caesar's custom of march and plan to surprise him. As the legions are separated from each other they intend to attack the first legion while they are fortifying camp. They do so and the battle on the Sabis begins. L. E. K

JUNIORS:

At our weekly class meeting last Wednesday, committees were appointed to start preparations for the Junior-Senior banquet. This is always looked forward to as the most pleasant event of the year. The date has not been definitely decided.

The Domestic Science girls are busily engaged in making articles which would be suitable additions to their hope-chests. Perhaps thats why they are working with so much interest. Some of these articles are as follows: Sheets, pillow cases, fancy powder boxes, dresses, etc. R. J.

SENIOR:

The Physics class is now studying the unknown substance—electricity. Owing to the fact that we have a very small laboratory, we are studying it from text books of many authors. Me surely hope that the coming generation will have fully equipped scientific laboratory. R. A. W.

EASTER LILIES

The lily rests for many a month
Within the bulb entombed,
In dust and darkness, where it once
So radiantly bloomed.

And from the altar Easter day
In all its pure perfection,
It proves anew the miracle
Of death and resurrection

"PARTNER!"

SYNOPSIS.—Disliking the prospect of a month's visit to her austere aunt, Lady Erythea Lambe, at Jervaulx abbey, and her cousin, Alexander Lambe, Aimee, vivacious daughter of the Very Reverend Viscount Scroope, wanders into the park, there encountering a strange youth. He laughingly introduces himself as "Billy," American. The two ride on his motorcycle, the "Flying Sphinx," and part. With Georgina Berners, her cousin, Aimee sets out for Jervaulx. She decides that Georgina shall impersonate her at Jervaulx, while she goes on a holiday. Georgina's horrified protest is unavailing. Aimee again meets "Billy." He tells her his name is Spencer, and she gives hers as Amy Snooks, at present "out of a job." Billy gives her a spin on the Sphinx and she finds it a glorious experience.

"Say! Let me find you one! I've a brain-wave!"

"What do you mean?"

"Go shares with me!"

"Shares?" echoed Aimee. She was conscious of a curious little thrill. "Share what?"

"See here!" said Billy, eyeing her keenly. "When we were doing fifty-five on the Sphinx, you never wilted—never turned a hair!"

"Of course not. It was gorgeous."

He came nearer, intensely earnest.

"Know anything about motor engines?" he said quickly.

"I've often taken down the old 'bus at home, on a wet day, and reassembled it."

"Where was that?"

"At the place where I had a job," said Aimee.

"Great!" he cried. "You're the thing I've been looking for all these months. Now, listen to the brain-wave. I'm over here to sell the Sphinx. There's a big deal on in London. But what I want's a quiet spot where I can develop some of the gadgets with no crooks around to steal 'em. Get me?"

"Yes, go on," said Aimee, catching his enthusiasm.

"I'm heading now for a little town called Stanhoe, thirty miles south of here. Stanhoe's quiet as the tomb. I've struck it before. There's an old mill I b'lieve I can get hold of, and fit up as a garage and workshop—"

"Yes, I see!" said Aimee eagerly.

"Come on into it with me—come to Stanhoe!" said Billy explosively. "You'll catch on to the Flying Sphinx in a minute, an' then popularize her as a lady's mount! The finest mount for a girl ever put on the market. There isn't one yet. You can do it! You've got the nerve—an' the grit! I'll teach you to tend an' drive her. Will you come?"

"Will a duck swim!" cried Aimee. "Of course I'll come!"

"Fine!—partner!" cried Billy, flinging out a big brown hand.

Aimee took it, and received a shake that bruised her fingers.

"Take your perch, old chap!" said Billy, straddling the Sphinx. "Off for Stanhoe!"

They whirred down the long slope with the westering sun broad on their right above the fir-trees. It was a roughish ride on the carrier. There was no pillion-seat; Billy was evidently not accustomed to carry passengers.

"Say," said Billy, over his shoulder, "I didn't catch your name, did I?"

"Aimee—Snooks," replied the passenger on the spur of the moment, as well as she could for the wind whistling in her teeth.

"Snooks!"

Aimee laughed. It was very like Scroope, and quiet as musical.

"Near enough!" she gasped. "But 'old chap' will do. Is that American?"

"American? Gee, no! It's the only English I know. Let it go at that—Amy is too feminine for a partnership. And now we'll let her out. This," said Billy joyously, as he opened the throttle wide, "is what the doctor ordered!"

The Flying Sphinx, freighted with the partners, roared down the hill and devoured the miles to Stanhoe.

* * * * * * *

On the outskirts of the little market town of Stanhoe was a cyclist's rest-house. Here the two travelers had tea under a laburnum tree on the lawn. Billy locked the amazing motorcycle in a shed, by the proprietor's leave, and the pair walked into the town on foot.

Two more utterly insouciant and care free young people never entered an English village on an April day. No [illegible]

"Mrs. Sunning, 2 Ivy cottage, lets lodgings," announced Aimee triumphantly. "You don't mind lodgings, do you? Better than a hotel—more freedom."

"Freedom for mine!" said Billy. "Let's try it!"

Ivy cottage proved to be a pretty little Jacobean building fronting on a green lane just outside Stanhoe. An apple-cheeked woman, who was picking weeds out of the path, announced herself as Mrs. Sunning, and Billy at once stated his needs, offering to pay in advance.

"Why, yes, sir," she said, smiling, with a civil bob to Aimee. "I've a nice sitting room and a li'l bedroom; Mrs. Dale, next door, has another, if you can do with that?" Mrs. Dale appeared, and confirmed the offer. Both of them looked at the pair with smiling interest and wonder.

"Great!" said Billy. "You take the room here, old chap, and I'll take the other. We'll share the parlor."

Aimee accompanied Mrs. Sunning indoors; the little parlor was clean and cozy, the bedroom, upstairs at the back, tiny but clean.

Aimee made her toilet, descended to the parlor and ordered a meal. Mrs. Sunning acquiesced in everything.

"He's a wunnerful pleasant gentleman, Mr. Spencer," she remarked, and then, hesitating and reddening, she looked at Aimee. "I—I suppose, miss," she said with much embarrassment, "it's all right?"

Aimee stared.

"All right? How?" she said. "Everything's all right. Very much so!"

The woman's eyes betokened belief—and relief.

"Bless your pretty face, who'd think anything else?" she said. "You'll excuse my askin', miss. You see, Lady Erythea is my landlord, and she owns all Stanhoe."

Aimee felt a galvanic shock.

"Whom did you say?" she asked dazedly.

"Lady Erythea Lambe of Jervaulx abbey, the big place half a mile south the cross roads. She fare wunnerful strict, she do. It's as much as my tenancy's worth to have any goings-on here. That's all."

The woman left the room. Aimee stared round her blankly, then collapsed into a chair. She flung her arms across the table, buried her head in them, and broke into paroxysms of impish laughter.

"Oh, my Christian aunt!" she sobbed. "My Georgie! My Alexander!"

Her shoulders were still shaking wildly when Billy came in.

"Say, what's wrong?" he exclaimed in alarm, as Aimee raised a tear-stained face. "Crying—eh? No, laughing! That's good! That's the cure for sentiment! But what's the joke?"

"Just something I thought of, that's all," said Aimee, wiping her eyes.

"That's all right," said Billy imperturbably. "Guess I ain't inquisitive. But folks mostly tell me their troubles sooner or later."

"I suppose they do," said Aimee, regarding him thoughtfully.

Mrs. Sunning brought an abundant meal; chiefly eggs and tea. Aimee found it the merriest feast she had ever eat down to. Finally, she accompanied Billy to Mrs. Dale's door, [illegible]

She laughed gently.

"He isn't a frump, anyhow!"

The reverie took shape. Then, with a little sigh, she slipped off her shoes, and, carrying them with her, stole very softly down the staircase to the front door. On trying the door cautiously, she found it bolted, and the latch immovable. Also no key was visible. She realized she was locked in the house.

A feeling of intense annoyance seized Aimee. Where was the freedom she had sought? She returned to her bedroom, put on her shoes, leaned out of the window, and inspected the wall critically. It was covered with ivy and trellis-work.

She swung herself cautiously out onto the sill, and began very quietly to descend the trellis. Aimee, active and long-limbed, could climb like a cat. And as noiselessly as any member of that great feline tribe, she dropped upon the soft soil of the garden plot.

CHAPTER IV

In Deep.

Georgina Berners paced the floor of her bedroom at Jervaulx abbey, and wondered why the universe had not crashed in ruins about her head.

"It's like a dream," she said dazedly, "I can't believe in it at all."

To Georgina it came as an incredible climax that she had, after five hours at Jervaulx, been dismissed to bed with an august but approving kiss from Lady Erythea, and a protective, cousinly hand-shake from the sedate Alexander Lambe. She had not been denounced as an impostor, flung out with ignominy, or handed over to the police. All these things had seemed to Georgina not only possible but likely.

"What on earth will happen when they find out?" she said, shivering.

She commenced to disrobe, but had not proceeded very far when a hustle and a click were heard. Georgina turned with a gasp of fright. Someone was trying to force a way in at her window. She caught sight of a flushed face.

With a shriek of terror Georgina retreated to the bed, and prepared to dive under it.

"Don't make such a row, you fool!" hissed a voice.

The casements swung inwards, and Aimee, rather breathless, dropped onto the floor.

"Handy things, these verandas," panted Aimee. "How are you, Georgina, old thing?"

Georgina stared at her in paralysed amazement.

Aimee sat down beside Georgina on the bed, and put an arm around her waist.

"Well, what's happened here?" she said cheerfully.

"Oh, I am so glad to see you!" exclaimed Georgina with infinite thankfulness. "Now we can clear everything up. It's been awful!"

"Why? Have you given me away?" said Aimee quickly.

"I haven't! You know I wouldn't!" cried Georgina hotly. "Though you ought to be whipped. I never said a word about you, and that's why I'm in this awful mess!"

"Dear old Georgina! You're a brick!" said Aimee, hugging her. "I was only pulling your leg—I knew you wouldn't sneak. But why is it awful? Have they found out?"

"When I got here," said Georgina feebly, "I thought I could explain somehow. But Lady Erythea met me on the steps and took me for you, and everything went right out of my head—"

"Good! I see. You hesitated and were saved."

"Saved?" ejaculated Georgina angrily.

"Well, I was saved. That's more important. You haven't done anything wrong, my snow-white lamb. What then?"

"And then Mr. Lambe came out and she [illegible] Alexander. And—[illegible] to death all [illegible] I haven't had a chance to put [illegible]" how are we going to clear things up and make it all right for you?"

[illegible]

"Stop it? I wouldn't stop it for a kingdom. It's perfectly splendid!"

Georgina stood up.

"You are out of your senses," she said dazedly; "I won't listen to another word! Think how fearful it would be if Alex—if Mr. Lambe knew. He—"

"Aha—Alexander! Yes. Is he as owlish as his photograph? What did you say to him, Georgina?"

"I—I—hardly anything. He told me all about his missionary work in Manchuria. He—"

"Where was that?"

"In the rose garden—" Georgina broke off suddenly.

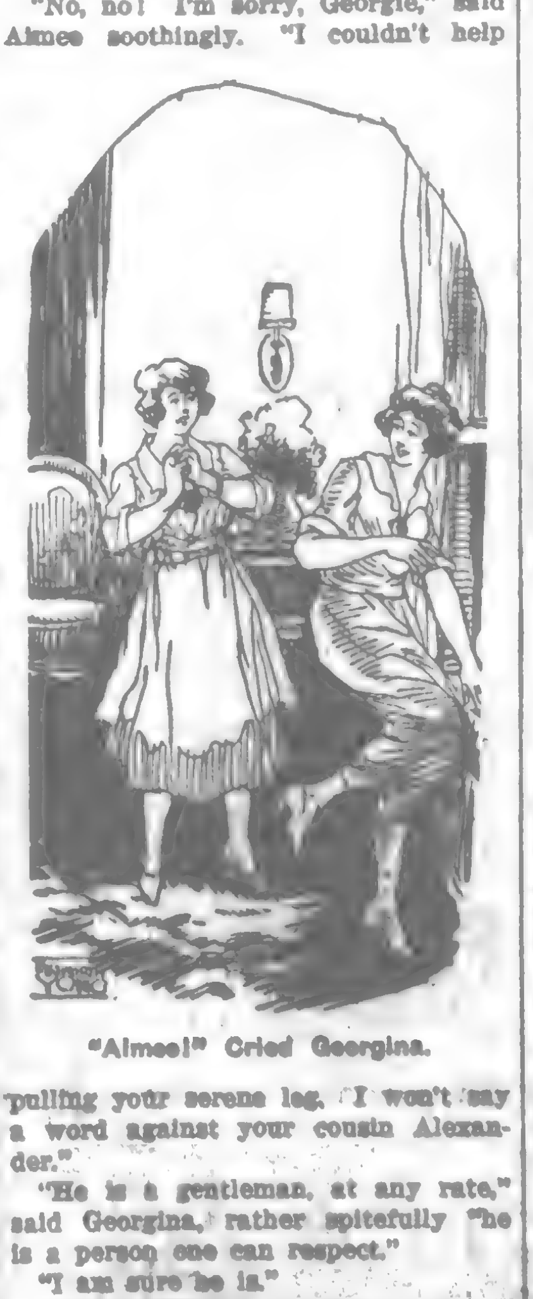
"Did he squeeze your hand?"

Georgina was speechless with indignation.

"You were thinking about him when you stood at the window!" said Aimee, with the air of a prosecuting counsel. "You were being sentimental. I saw your face. It had that gooey look."

"Aimee," said Georgina, fairly roused at last, "how dare you! I am going straight to Lady Erythea, and you can talk to her! I have done—"

"No, no! I'm sorry, Georgie," said Aimee soothingly. "I couldn't help



"Aimee!" Cried Georgina.

pulling your serene leg. I won't say a word against your cousin Alexander."

"He is a gentleman, at any rate," said Georgina, rather spitefully "he is a person one can respect."

"I am sure he is."

"Well, what are we going to do?"

"The thing for you to do," said Aimee, "is to go on respecting Alexander. And for him to go on respecting you. Think how awful it would be if it came out now. Alexander," said Aimee, with a pathetic little break in her voice, "is good. He doesn't get into scrapes. He isn't in horrible trouble like me—and nobody to help me. I didn't think," she added with a gulp, "that you'd go back on me, Georgie!"

"I won't and I can't," said Georgina mournfully, "and you know it." But she softened visibly. "You haven't told me where you've come from, and what you've been doing! I've been frightfully worried about you."

Aimee regarded her thoughtfully. It was clear that Georgina already had all she could bear. This was no time to tell her about Billy.

"You needn't worry about me. I'm staying at a little place nearby. I'm quite all right, and I've got some money. We simply must keep it up for a few days—father is leaving Scroope Towers soon, and then I'll show you how we can smooth it all over."

"But don't you see how impossible it is! Your father will come here to see you before he goes. And he—he'll expect you to write to him!"

"How bright you are tonight, Georgie. You think of everything," said Aimee briskly. She sat down at the writing table by the wall, selected a sheet of the Jervaulx note-paper with the Lambe arms—three fleeces argent on a field [illegible]—and with an immensely serious face began to write rapidly, pausing occasionally for thought. Georgina watched in fascinated horror.

"Listen!" said Aimee, [illegible] the sheet and reading it aloud with much satisfaction.

[illegible]

"A very proper letter," said Aimee, affixing a stamp to the envelope, with a determined thump. "One should always consider one's parents, and spare them pain. And that postscript is a touch of genius; the only thing in the universe Dad is afraid of is mumps. He hasn't had them, and he says they are a formidable affliction to the aged, and very undignified. And it's quite true; I saw five children at Stanhoe with mumps this afternoon. I should hate to tell a fib. Unless," she added, wrinkling her smooth brow, "it became absolutely necessary."

She moved toward the window.

"Aimee!" cried Georgina, starting up panic-stricken. "You're not going! Are you serious about this?"

"Not a bit. And don't you be, either," said Aimee, as she clicked off the switch of the electric. "See you tomorrow—if I can. Good night, old thing."

The room was plunged in darkness, and there was a scraping sound at the window.

"Aimee!" gasped Georgina wildly, fumbling round the wall for the switch. It was some time before she found it, and when she turned it on the room was empty.

"Aimee!" cried Georgina, leaning out of the window.

There came a sudden thumping on the bedroom door.

"Aimee!" said the stern voice of Lady Erythea. "Why is your light on at this hour? What are you moving about for? Is anything wrong?"

"No-no — aunt!" said Georgina, choking, "n-n-nothing much."

"Extinguish your light instantly, and go to sleep!"

With shaking fingers Georgina turned off the switch, and undressed pathetically in the dark. She crept into bed and thought of Alexander—the one touch of untroubled calm on the waters of Jervaulx.

CHAPTER V

On the Job.

Morning and the song of birds.

The sunshine streamed into the room, bringing with it the God-given fragrance of an April morning; the scent of rain-sprinkled earth, wall-flowers and greening thorn-hedge. Aimee stood and drank it in thankfully, till she realised with a shock that it was past ten.

The only bath available at Ivy cottage was a tub of spring water. Aimee made the most of this, and, dressing hurriedly, came downstairs glowing like a picotee. Billy was in the parlor.

"Morning!" he cried.

"Have you been down long?" exclaimed Aimee.

"'Bout three hours!" he chuckled. "I've covered sixty miles since then. Just a little breather."

"Why—you haven't waited breakfast for me, have you?" she cried.

"Oh, that's all right. Rang a' baker up an' got a roll an' milk at Syderford. Nothing done yet—couldn't breakfast without my partner."

Mrs. Sunning, with bare, dimpled arms and her face wreathed in smiles, brought in the breakfast. There were brown ducks' eggs, cream, watercresses and a brace of brook trout.

Billy glanced at his companion from time to time, with a quiet watchfulness.

"Sleep all right, old chap?" he asked presently.

"Rather. Didn't wake up till just now," said Aimee, taking a large spoonful of comb honey. "Did you?"

Billy paused.

"Middling," he said slowly. "Say, partner, what'd you like to do now? Rest a bit?"

"Rest!" said Aimee scornfully. "I want to live, not rest!"

"Ready to get busy on the Sphinx, an' cleave the ether?"

"Yes, right away."

"Good! I'll get her fixed."

Twenty minutes later they met by the shed where the Sphinx was stored. As Billy wheeled the machine out, he looked keenly into Aimee's eyes.

"Partner," he asked, "you haven't anything on your mind, have you?"

Aimee laughed aloud. Her eyes sparkled.

"Do I look as if I had?"

"No, by the Great Horn Spoon, you don't!" said Billy, eyeing her with a flash of admiration. "You look as if you'd face the world and laugh at everything it handed you—from a bunch of roses to sudden death. You're IT! Come on."

They went out through the little gate. Billy did not offer to mount the [illegible] of the lane. [illegible] soft wind of the morning caressed them as they rode. Not that it had any pacifying effect on Aimee's spirit. The sense of adventure mounted to her head like wine.

"Here we are!" said Billy, turning onto a long, deserted stretch of high road, running delightfully level and straight. He let the Sphinx out. For eighty seconds the hedges flashed by like long green streamers. At the end of a mile and a half Billy stopped and dismounted.

"Now," he said, "we're not going to talk about how to sell the Sphinx yet awhile; the first thing is to put you wise to her. You've got to know her inside out and backwards—and she's the sweetest thing that ever burned gas. Now, look here!"

Aimee kneeled eagerly on the grass, and Billy fluently explained, dismantling the parts as he talked.

For twenty minutes she followed him, testing for herself.

"Why," said Billy with delight, stopping and looking at her, "it's like teaching a duck to swim! You catch on quicker than I can show you—you were born to it!"

"I'm an infant to you," said Aimee admiringly. "What a head you've got. It's everything a motor engine ought to be but never is. Let's take down the cylinder."

They busied themselves dismantling and re-assembling the engine.

"I'll show you how to drive her now," said Billy. "Stationary, till you get the hang of her."

Aimee mounted the saddle, while the machine remained on its stand, and Billy showed her how to control the engine running free with the clutch out. She took longer to grasp this. The controls, though simple, were of an unusual type. In ten minutes, however, she mastered them pretty efficiently.

"Fine!" said Billy enthusiastically. "Partner, the Sphinx is your big sister! Now we'll run her on the road—I'll ride the pillion an' coach you. But for the land's sake go easy with the throttle. She'll rush you clean off the British isles if you give her any gas."

Aimee started dead slow. The ease and resiliency of the drive, once the Sphinx was running, astonished her. Gradually Aimee increased speed to fifteen and twenty miles. She was intoxicated by the sense of power, answering to the least touch of her fingers.

"Glorious!" she gasped.

"You're doing fine," said Billy, watching keenly. He made her practice stopping and starting, including emergency halts. "Say, isn't she the last word in lady's mounts?"

"Rather!" said Aimee, in spite of a sense of difficulty with her dress and the Sphinx's tank, low though it was. "Except—I feel as if I were all stockings."

"Shucks! what of it?" he answered impatiently. "There's nobody here to see. Try her on the high gear now."

Aimee changed gear deftly enough, and for awhile drove steadily. But the intoxication of speed confused her senses. She made the one mistake she had been warned against. The Sphinx dashed forward like a whippet, and, in trying to rectify the error she made it worse.

"Throttle down!" said Billy sharply.

Intending to obey, Aimee blundered again, and closed down the extra air inlet. The Sphinx roared in protest, and shot ahead like a bullet from a gun. The pace was awful. How the machine kept on the road was a miracle. Every moment promised a dev-

Appetizing?

Cutting through the alley the late worker figured that he could just about reach the front door of the cafe before they closed. And, as he passed, he noticed a waiter coming to the alley door with a platter of remnant toast. He made the front door. They were not overglad to see him, but took his order. He asked for a club sandwich.

The waiter plodded to the rear, and pretty soon the customer heard the cook growling: "Say, where did you throw that toast?"

Straight Silica Glass.

A deposit of silica mineral of volcanic origin has been found in Czechoslovakia, which can be used directly in the manufacture of glass without the need of adding any of the other common ingredients used in making up the glass batch. This silica mineral is said to resemble lava and it is understood that the deposits are very large and that steps are being taken to utilize them commercially.—Chemical Trade Journal.

Sunday School Lesson

LESSON FOR APRIL 1

THE WALK TO EMMAUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 24:13-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen.—Luke 24:5-6.

REFERENCE MATERIAL—Matthew 28:1-10; Acts 2:22-36; I Corinthians 15:3-20; Colossians 3:1-4.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Walk With Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus as a Companion.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Life With the Risen Lord.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Christ's Resurrection Means.

I. The Walk of Two Discouraged Disciples (vv. 13-15).

Emmaus was seven and one-half miles northwest of Jerusalem. Just why they were walking this way we do not surely know. Perhaps their home was there, or they were merely walking to seek relief from their stunning sorrow. If they had believed what Jesus told them about His death and resurrection they would have escaped this great disappointment. Unbelief causes many heartaches and disappointments. One of these disciples was Cleopas, but the other is unknown. The topic of conversation was the tragedy of the cross and the resurrection rumors. So little had His teaching about His resurrection impressed them that the reports which the women brought were as idle tales to them. If they had believed what He said about coming forth from the grave they would have been expecting to hear just such reports as were being circulated.

II. The Unrecognized Companion (vv. 16-24).

1. Who He Was. Jesus. While they reasoned together on the wonderful events of the last few days on this journey, Jesus joined them. Even when He questioned them concerning their sadness they did not recognize Him. Many times we are so taken up with our sorrows and disappointments that we do not recognize Jesus though walking by our side. How grieved He must be to be unrecognized as He walks by us in our sorrows and trials.

2. His Question (v. 17). Perceiving their sadness and perplexity He sought to help them by calling forth a statement of their grief. This question surprised them and caused them to infer that He was a stranger in Jerusalem. The condemnation and crucifixion of the great prophet of Nazareth were so recent and notorious that no one they thought, who had lived in Jerusalem, could be ignorant of them. One valuable aspect of the unbelief of the disciples was that it revealed the fact that they were not credulous enthusiasts but hard to convince. Out of this incredulity developed the unshaken faith in the word of the resurrection.

III. The Scriptures Opened (vv. 25-35).

1. His Rebuke (v. 25). He did not rebuke them for not believing the strange stories they had heard, but for ignorance and lack of confidence in the Old Testament Scriptures. They had accepted only such parts of the Old Testament as suited their notions. Men and women who do not believe all that the Scriptures say, especially about the work of the blessed Savior, are entirely blameworthy. The very center and heart of the Old Testament Scriptures is the death and resurrection of Christ. It is ignorance of the Scriptures and unbelief of the wonderful and complete redemption wrought by Christ that robs us of many joys, and power and efficiency as workers for Christ. Christ will be the teacher of all who will open their hearts unto Him.

2. Jesus Recognized (v. 31). While sitting at meat with the disciples their eyes were opened as they saw Him bless the bread and distribute it to them. We, too, can see the Lord on such common occasions as eating a meal if we have open eyes. Indeed we ought to see Him when eating, selling, buying and in our recreations for He has promised us His presence.

IV. The Effect Upon the Disciples (vv. 32-35). They were so filled with joy over this revelation of the Savior that they hastened back to Jerusalem to tell the other disciples of the word of His resurrection. Those who have had the Scriptures opened to them touching the death and resurrection of Christ cannot help but hasten to make it known to others.

Conciseness in Speaking.

Every man should study conciseness in speaking; it is a sign of ignorance not to know that long speeches, though they may please the speaker, are the torture of the hearer.—Feltham.

Like Old Watches.

Persons extremely reserved are like old enameled watches, which had painted covers that hindered your seeing what o'clock it was.—Walpole.

The Secret.

What is mine, even to my life, is hers I love; but the secret of my friend is not mine.—Sir P. Sidney.

The Quarrel.

Beware of entrance to a quarrel but, being in, bear it that the opposer may beware of thee.—Shakespeare.

IMPROVED ROADS

COUNTRY OF GOOD HIGHWAYS

New Federal Act Will Give United States Best System of Improved Roads in World.

The new federal highway act will give the United States the best highway system in the world. This means greater comforts for sightseers as they motor over the country, and it means direct public benefits in better transportation of farm products to shipping points. Money expended for improved highways is money wisely invested providing the program is kept within the ability of taxpayers to pay the bill without burdening themselves unduly.

About 180,000 miles of road are included in the system being mapped out by federal and state engineers. The federal highway act requires that all federal aid be spent on a connected system consisting of not more than 7 per cent of the road mileage in each state, and that this whole scheme shall consist of interstate and primary roads and intercounty and secondary roads.

Several states have adjusted somewhat difficult problems from neighboring states. For example, the Nebraska system showed a big gap in an important highway along the northern boundary. South Dakota has agreed to follow with a road plan which will fit like pictures on toy blocks. Under the federal act, only roads certain to be on the general system have been approved for construction.

The days of highway building by the farmers in their spare time is becoming a thing of the past. The job is being done on a big scale now.

HIGHWAY NEEDS OF FORESTS

To Complete Necessary System 13,560 Miles of Roads Must Be Constructed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A comprehensive study is now being made of the road needs of the national forests, according to the annual report of the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture. The figures available indicate that to complete the necessary system of forest development roads and trails, 13,560 miles of roads and 37,114 miles of trails must be constructed at an estimated expenditure of $64,698,000. For the system of forest highways of primary importance to the states, counties and communities the rough survey indicates that $107,658,000 must be expended for construction or improvement. If the present current appropriations are continued, it appears possible to complete the development of an adequate road system within the national forests covering all requirements in from 20 to 26 years.

REPUBLIC'S FUTURE IN ROADS

Together With Railroads and Water Routes Highways Are of Tremendous Importance.

Development of the Far Eastern Republic through more highways is predicted in the booklet "Trade and Industries," published by the special delegation of that country to the United States of America. "Together with the railroads and water routes," says the report, "highways are of tremendous importance. The purpose of highways, among others, is on the one hand to carry through the territory of the country commodities for export, and to direct these commodities into the principal routes, and on the other hand, to distribute among the population the imported goods received from the principal routes. By these highways it will be possible to reach the known vast mineral deposits. In the near future it will be possible to organize, either through the government or by private means, automobile and tractor transportation of freight on the same commercial basis existing at the present time on the railroads and water routes."

Common Sense With Roads.

Common sense knows it is better to put a good, but inexpensive covering on a road and maintain it than to lay the best, but most expensive surface and allow it to deteriorate through lack of maintenance.

Surfacing Saves Fuel.

Coming off dirt roads onto gravel you unconsciously loosen up on the throttle, the car goes faster, less gasoline is consumed, and there is less wear and tear on the car, with greater comfort to the users.

Portland Lady Fell Off 40 Pounds, but Declares Tanlac Restored Her Fully.

"For nine years," declared Mrs. Ella Wagenaar, 268 Graham St., Portland, Ore., recently, "I was almost a nervous wreck and never knew what it was to feel well.

"I was suffering from a general breakdown and, oh, it's just impossible to describe the pain and misery I endured. My stomach was so disordered I could scarcely retain a morsel of solid food. I lost forty pounds and was so weak I tottered like an infant when I walked. Many nights I never slept a wink, and I had weak spells, when I fainted dead away.

"After spending over a thousand dollars trying to get well, my husband finally persuaded me to take the Tanlac treatment. Well, that was the turning point, for all my troubles are gone now, I have almost regained my lost weight, and I've never enjoyed finer health. I will always believe Tanlac saved my life, and I'm so happy and grateful that I just can't help praising it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

NAME TOO MUCH FOR THEM

Hawaiian Natives Found It Practically Impossible to Translate "Roosevelt" Into Their Language.

The village of Roosevelt has changed its name back to Pukoo. Not many persons, probably, know where this village is. It is situated in an obscure corner of one of the Hawaiian islands, and some years ago it had as one of its residents a Dr. E. S. Goodhue, who was anxious that the name of the famous president should never die out of this section of American territory. So he got up a petition to the postmaster general at Washington, asking that the original name of the village should be altered, as far as the mail was concerned, to Roosevelt.

The request was granted, but the new name bothered the natives terribly. They have no "r" or "s" or "t" in their alphabet, and the nearest Hawaiian equivalent to Roosevelt turns out to be Lukiweki. So they sent a second petition, in which they stated that they were deceived into signing the first, and asked that the native name of the village be restored. The petition has been granted.

Little Paul had been sitting still by the window for so long that mother began to get suspicious.

"What are you doing, Paul?" she asked.

"Paul, answer me!" mother ordered.

"Nothing," was Paul's enlightening reply.

"Mother said nothing more for a few minutes. Then:

"Paul, you must be doing something! What are you so interested in out there?"

Paul turned to reply this time, his dignity highly offended.

"Gee, mamma!" he exclaimed. "Can't a fellow sit here without being bothered, and watch the cars pass pro and con?"—Kansas City Star.

Scotch Herring Out of Business.

It looks as if the old-time Scotch herring had gone out of business entirely. The old fishing grounds of the North sea in the vicinity of the Scotch coast, which were once reeking with these fish, which were caught in great quantities by the fishermen of that country, have been entirely depleted recently, and the fishermen are without any livelihood. Thousands of them were dependent upon the herring fishing industry. The departure of the fish has been attributed to a recent change in the currents of the sea, which has probably driven the fish to some other point, and just where it has not yet been discovered.

MIXUP THAT WAS AMUSING

Humorous Nova Scotian Unintentionally Very Gravely Misled Serious-Minded Glasgow Newspaper.

R. M. MacGregor told the following story at a luncheon of the Scottish curlers in New Glasgow: A New Glasgow shipping firm was, having built a steamship on the Clyde and gave it the name of Micmac. The oddity of the name aroused considerable curiosity. The Nova Scotian captain was asked the derivation of the name. Good-naturedly the captain replied that "Mic" was for the Irish and "Mac" for the Scottish. Next day the captain was astonished to find this explanation of the name featured in the Herald. He sent for the reporter and explained that "Micmac" was the name of a tribe of Indians in Nova Scotia. To his further astonishment the following day the Herald carried a correction, reading as follows:

"We were slightly incorrect in giving the derivation of the name 'Micmac' in yesterday's issue. We now learn that the ship is called Micmac after a tribe of wild Indians in Nova Scotia, who are half Irish and half Scotch."

The Rural Housewives club met with Mrs. H. O. Walts Thursday afternoon, March 29. After a short time spent with needlework the meeting was called to order by the president. Humorous responses were given at roll call. After a brief business session the hostess conducted an apple contest, Mrs. Dora Wilder winning the prize, an asbestos mat. A delicious lunch of beef and egg sandwiches, egg salad, pineapple fluff with a tiny chick perched on top, layer cake with nut filling and coffee, reminded the nine members and two children present that Easter was near. A very pleasant afternoon was spent. Meeting adjourned to meet in two weeks with Mrs. Margaret Cannon.

Facts About Widows

The American Bankers Association tells this about widows:

18% of American widows live on their income.

47% supplement income by working.

35% are dependent.

And a table for daughter's and sons who have been heirs would show about the same percentage.

Fire Destroyed Fine Farm Home

The fine home of Willis Baker, two miles north of St. Joe burned to the ground last Friday afternoon in less than an hour's time. The strong northwest wind aided the blaze so in its course that only the furnishings of three rooms were saved, and the local fire department were unable to do any good at all except protect near-by buildings.

Mr. Baker discovered the fire breaking through the kitchen roof in a small patch and he hurriedly climbed up and tried to extinguish it with water. But as he did so fire began to break out in other places and he then called for help. The origin is not known but it is thought to be from a spark from the chimney falling on the roof.

Mrs. Baker, who has just recovered from a sick spell and was yet in a nervous state was taken to the home of their son, Ora Baker, a half mile away. The early comers made great haste to remove everything possible from the house, knowing that it was useless to fight the blaze against such a wind.

It was impossible to gain passage way to the basement in which were stored fruit, vegetables, vinegar, lard, meat, and the Delco light plant. Neither was it possible to take anything from the second floor, which consisted of bedrooms and clothes rooms full of furnishings and clothes.

However the best of the furniture on the main floor was removed, but the kitchen ware and cooking utensils were destroyed.

Mr. Baker just remodled his home about five years ago, and it was as fine and as modern a farm home as there was in the country. His loss he feels greatly. Just two years ago he had installed a Delco lightening system which cost him complete, $920.

The house and contents were insured but of course the insurance will not cover the total loss.

Mr. Baker says he is planning to move to town to live and since he is a St Joe man he will come to St. Joe. So he is not decided on building a home on the farm soon.

The fire department made a very hasty start and arrived at the scene in a short time, but could not do much good. This was the first call the company has had since the burning of the Widney Block on August 12, last summer.

Spencer Twp. Federation of Women, 1923

First Program

The Spencer Township Federation of Women is an organization of women interested in community welfare. The success of the organization depends largely on the attitude of the individual members composing it. Therefore each member should assume a certain amount of responsibility such as paying club dues promptly, attending the meetings regularly, responding to program and committee assignments and inviting friends to the meetings, especially those women who who are not members of other clubs.

The program is assigned for 1923 which begins at the close of the class in Home Nursing now in progress. The projects for the year are exceptionally good. Plan to do your part. Above all come to the meetings. Bring your rugs or lace to crochet, or other work, but come.

Cut in Arm

Little James Brown, five year old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Brown, cut his wrist badly Sunday afternoon while at play near the railroad, and the wound was dressed by Dr. Minnick. His older playmates said he stumbled and fell on barb wire, but he says he fell on a broken cup. The wound was not deep but was about three inches long. The cut didn't seem to frighten the father much at first, but you should have seen him keel over when it was being dressed.

"MY PEARLS!"

SYNOPSIS.—Disliking the prospect of a month's visit to her austere aunt, Lady Erythea Lambe, at Jervaulx abbey, and her cousin, Alexander Lambe, Aimee, vivacious daughter of the Very Reverend Viscount Scroope, wanders into the park, there encountering a strange youth. He laughingly introduces himself as "Billy," American. The two ride on his motorcycle, the "Flying Sphinx," and part. With Georgina Berners, her cousin, Aimee sets out for Jervaulx. She decides that Georgina shall impersonate her at Jervaulx, while she goes on a holiday. Georgina's horrified protest is unavailing. Aimee again meets "Billy." He tells her his name is Spencer, and she gives hers as Amy Snooks, at present "out of a job." Billy offers to take her into partnership in selling the Sphinx. In a spirit of madcap adventure, she accepts. The two proceed to the town of Stanhoe, taking separate lodgings in Ivy cottage. That night Aimee visits Georgina and learns that the deception has not been discovered. She compels Georgina to continue the subterfuge. On a trial spin, with Billy, Aimee nearly kills them both by going too fast, but her nerve awakens Billy's admiration.

There was an astonished shout and a cry of warning ahead. A large carriage, with two fat horses and a fat coachman, seemed to be right on top of Aimee's handlebars. She swerved and braked violently, while the horses were reined back on their haunches; the Sphinx toppled sideways, shooting Billy clean through the screen of brambles that covered the ditch.

Aimee performed a sort of semi-somersault, and landed on her feet with an intoxicated stagger. For one awful moment she found herself facing the amazed occupants of the carriage.

She was conscious of the face of Georgina, very white, staring at her open-mouthed, with eyes as big as saucers. Beside Georgina sat a tremendous, elderly lady, gripping a lorgnette, and speechless with anger. A large young man in black, his eyes matching Georgina's for size, had started up and was grasping the side of the carriage.

In a fraction of a second the truth telegraphed itself to Aimee's flustered brain. Aunt Erythea!

Aimee leaped the ditch like a chamois, right over the top of Billy; plunged through the tall hedge as a circus rider goes through a hoop, and vanished.

"Is anybody hurt, there!" gasped Mr. Alexander Lambe. "Is—"

"Nope. Not here," said Billy's voice feebly from the ditch. A pair of booted legs waved among the brambles.

"I never saw anything so disgraceful in my life!" cried Mr. Lambe. "Your number! I want your number. I—!"

Lady Erythea, whose face was crimson, leaned forward and smote the coachman twice violently in the back with the handle of her parasol.

"Drive on—fool!" she said explosively.

The coachman started and whipped up the fat horses. Mr. Lambe staggered as the carriage went forward.

"Aunt," he said, "that—that woman, who was driving, ought to be apprehended! If I had my way—"

"If I had my way," retorted Lady Erythea, "she'd be whipped! She and all her tribe. But the idiot Gervase, of course, was on the wrong side; we've no case. I hope their wretched machine is wrecked. Sit down, Alexander, do you hear!"

Mr. Lambe obeyed, protesting faintly. Georgina, with one hand pressed to her bosom, felt as though she were on the point of heart-failure.

"Hussies," said Lady Erythea, quivering, "and louts! Country's overrun with them. Decency is dead!"

The carriage jingled round the corner and disappeared.

Billy Spencer collected himself from among the brambles and regained the road, with the air of a sailor cast away on an inhospitable coast. Aimee thrust an inquiring face through the hedge, and emerged.

"Billy!" she cried. "Are you damaged?"

"Not a bit. Only scratched."

"And the Sphinx?"

"Brake lever bent, that's all. Nothing serious."

Aimee suddenly sat down on the edge of the ditch and began to laugh. She laughed till the very road threw back the echo; scandalous laughter.

"That's good!" said [illegible]. "That's the stuff! I was afraid it might have shaken you. Go on—laugh!"

"You'll never let me drive her again," gasped Aimee, [illegible]

[illegible]

after this. All the same," he added, "that tank-bar is a bit awkward for your dress."

"I don't care—I can manage."

"No—it's got to be fixed." His face cleared. "It's dead easy! I'll get you a pair of breeches in Syderford."

Aimee, dumfounded, turned and stared at him.

"What do you think you are!" she exclaimed. "The Universal Provider?"

Billy's chin stuck out sternly.

"I'm your partner! Get me?"

Aimee looked at him thoughtfully, and smiled.

"All right, Billy," she said softly. There was a pause. "Let's go back to Ivy cottage. You can drive."

Billy mounted the saddle joyously, stuffing his cap into his pocket. Aimee took her seat behind. The Sphinx meandered homeward at an easy fifty miles an hour.

"Thou Shalt Not Lie."

Georgina Berners began the day well; though she came within an ace of beginning it very badly indeed—she was nearly late for prayers.

After the service the servants dispersed to their duties, and Lady Erythea led the way to the morning room. She kissed Georgina with the air of one conferring a benefit, and bestowed a word of approval on Alexander, who was looking at Georgina with some concern in his large eyes.

"You look a little tired, cousin," he said, "did you rest well?"

"Oh, y-yes," said Georgina, "the—the journey yesterday was a little tiring."

"Perfect health," said Lady Erythea, "is not only desirable, it is a duty, in the young."

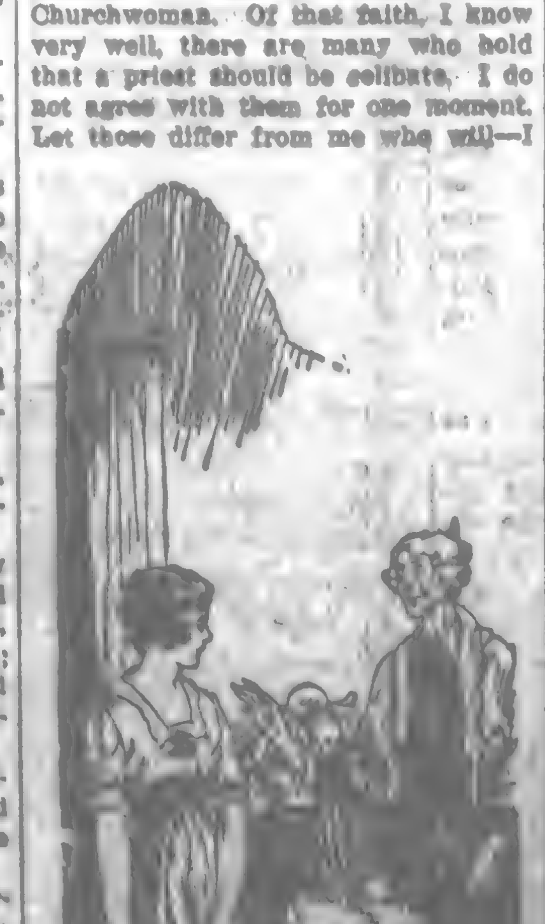
Breakfast proceeded in silence, till Lady Erythea made her announcement.

"The carriage will be ready for us all at ten," she said. "Remember that one does not keep horses waiting. We shall drive to Syderford."

"In that case," said Mr. Lambe, "I must be excused now. I have many things to do before ten."

Lady Erythea watched his exit with some anxiety.

"For a man of Alexander's physical development," she said, "I feel sure he does not eat enough. A mouthful of whiting and half a cup of tea! He would rather die than indulge in meat on a Friday." Lady Erythea was making excellent practice with a grilled sole. "That, of course, is quite right. But he carries some things to extremes. I am not wholly sure that Alexander is sound on the subject of marriage," continued Lady Erythea, with her customary directness. "I am, of course, a High Churchwoman. Of that faith, I know very well, there are many who hold that a priest should be celibate. I do not agree with them for one moment. Let those differ from me who will—I say that even a clergyman is essentially imperfect until he has a wife."



"My Judgment Is Never Mistaken."

Georgina flushed slowly scarlet. Lady Erythea turned the ear-trumpet to her [illegible], and waited.

"I am quite sure of his [illegible]," roared Georgina into the ear-trumpet, with almost a touch of [illegible]. "That Al-Alexander will [illegible] were of naughtiness—is not wholly unattractive in a young man."

[illegible]

Georgina stared at her in amazement, wondering if she had heard aright. And Georgina was guiltily conscious that a similar thought had crept, unbidden, into her own mind. Lady Erythea's eyes, meeting her gaze, became stony.

"I was referring, of course," she said, with some sternness, "to the duty good women owe themselves in reforming young men of that type. In a girl, flightiness is abhorrent to me—absolutely abhorrent. Hussies are my especial aversion." She smiled, and laid a hand on Georgina's shoulder. "I don't know why I speak of them. Nor can I understand, my dear, how such a mistaken impression of you could have reached us, before we knew you.

"For," she added, rising, "I have formed my opinion of you, Aimee, and my judgment is never mistaken. The woman does not live who could deceive me. Aimee, my dear, you are free to follow any occupation you choose—until ten o'clock."

Georgina made her way upstairs and sank into the most luxurious armchair in her bedroom.

"How perfectly lovely it would be here," she sighed, "if only things were proper and regular. But they aren't!"

Georgina, gazing before her, fell into a day-dream. Presently, the sound of the carriage passing beneath her window roused her with a start, and hastily donning a wrap she ran downstairs.

"Sit next me, Aimee," said Lady Erythea, settling herself comfortably in the carriage. "Alexander, you will take the other seat. I dislike having anyone immediately opposite me."

For two hours, at least, all troubles were to be left behind. As the carriage bowled through the sunlit park Georgina, lying back against the cushions, under the benign gaze of Alexander, felt inexpressibly soothed.

* * * * * * * *

When the carriage returned to Jervaulx, Georgina fell rather than descended from it. Almost in a state of collapse, she preserved some sort of outward composure and retreated to her bedroom as a hunted fox goes to earth.

The collision with the motorcycle on the Syderford road opened new horizons of terror for Georgina. It seemed to her like the climax of a nightmare. What in the world was Aimee doing? Who was the man—it was evidently a man, though Georgina had seen little of him except his boots—that was with her. What was happening to the wretched girl?

"It's too awful!" said Georgina hysterically, "and I'm responsible. I think I shall go mad!"

Later in the afternoon, in the natural course of things, she found herself alone with Alexander in the gardens. She looked at him with timid, yet hopeful eyes. Here, at least, was righteousness, kindliness, wisdom. Georgina felt she could keep things to herself no longer.

"I am afraid that narrow escape this morning has upset you, Aimee," he said sympathetically.

"Yes—I was rather upset. But I am better now. Don't let us talk of it. C-Cousin Alexander, there is something I want to ask you," she said suddenly. "I should like your—your guidance. Imagine that somebody who was dear to me—somebody one loved very much—had got into difficulties, and was in danger of exposure. And punishment. That it was in one's power to save them. Supposing that it would help, would it be very wrong to tell a—a fib?"

Alexander regarded her wonderingly.

"Let us give things their proper names," he said. "You mean a lie. You know the answer. A lie is in all cases not only inadmissible, but unthinkable."

"N-not even a little one?" said Georgina faintly. "I don't mean for one's own benefit, of course, but to shield the other."

"There is only one answer," he said sternly. "That other must make a clean breast of it, and bear his own punishment—or hers. No matter how bitter it may be. Whoever indulges in such shielding is equally guilty."

Georgina felt utterly crushed.

"Is not that a little hard?" she said.

"The hard way is the way of the transgressor," said Alexander, with [illegible]

[illegible]

what bony chest. As usual at dinner she was in a good temper.

There was a late delivery at Jervaulx, and a letter was brought into the drawing room afterward, addressed to Aimee Scroope.

"Surely, that is your father's handwriting, Aimee," said Lady Erythea. "My letter will have crossed his. Let us hear what he says."

Georgina would as soon have thought of picking a pocket as of opening another person's letter. But there was no help for it. The letter was dated Scroope Towers, Thursday. At the word of command, Georgina read it aloud, somewhat falteringly.

My Dearest Aimee:

I am writing to your aunt, to whom my love, but find myself with only time before the post goes to tell you I am obliged to leave Scroope earlier than I expected. As I wish to see you before I go I will come over for an hour on Saturday. I'm sorry it is impossible for me to stay the night. I have news of importance for you.

Your loving,
FATHER.

"It will be the first time," said Lady Erythea, a trifle acidly, "that anybody ever saw your father in a hurry."

The letter put the finishing touch to such a day as Georgina had never dreamed of. She went to bed half an hour later. Before she fell asleep, her pillow was wet.

The Way of the Transgressor.

Georgina awoke with a start. The light from a tiny electric torch dazzled her eyes; somebody was shaking her violently.

"Wake up, old thing," whispered Aimee's voice; "it's like trying to rouse the dead. I'm anxious about you. What did they say about that little stunt on the Syderford road?"

Georgina sat up with a gasp, and clutched Aimee with both hands as a drowning person clutches a life-buoy.

"It's you, is it!" she said fiercely. "I've got you, Aimee—make up your mind to it! This dreadful business is finished. We're done for—especially you!"

"Eh!" exclaimed Aimee, a little startled. "What have you got the breeze up about now?"

"You'll know very soon! Who," said Georgina sternly, still holding her, "was that Man that was with you? Who was he?"

"Man?" said Aimee. "Oh, you mean Billy. One of the best that ever stepped! A clinking good sort."

"B-Billy?" echoed Georgina in a shaking voice. "Tell me. Tell me all!" she said, tightening her grip.

"Well, why not?" said Aimee, and forthwith she related the Saga of Billy. The tale, as it proceeded, seemed to affect Georgina with creeping palsy. When it ended, she was trembling violently. She made two unsuccessful efforts to speak. She reminded Aimee of a hen with something stuck in its throat.

"You are staying with this Man?" gasped Georgina. "This Spencer—in Stanhoe? And he let you do it? The man's a cad!"

Aimee sprang up, tearing herself loose from her cousin's hands.

"How dare you say that! Cad? If there's only one gentleman on this earth, it's Billy!"

She glared at Georgina.

"There's no beastly sentiment in Billy, thank heaven. That's why we became pals; because we want to get away from it all. I see nothing wrong in it—nor does he."

"Then he's a fool!" said Georgina bitterly. "Oh, what can one say?" she groaned. "I know there's nothing wrong. That you are incapable of—of—" she choked. "And this man. From what you tell me, he is just such another as you. He is not a man—he is a child! Or he is from some place where things are—very different from what they are with us. But you are living in Eastshire—not in the desert. You know what Eastshire is. If ever this comes out—as come out it must—your reputation and your good name are gone—finished!

"That, I suppose, you do not care for," she said bitterly, rising and facing Aimee, "but one thing I can tell you and you may believe me. This thing will kill your father!"

Aimee stared at her blankly.

"I know your father, better, perhaps, than you do, Aimee. To Lord Scroope, black is black and white white. He [illegible] more proud, more [illegible]

[illegible]

"We must keep it from him," said Georgina trembling, "at any cost. We must find a way, for his sake and yours. This muddle at Jervaulx cannot be hidden; we must face it. But your father must never hear of—the other thing. What are we to do? He is coming here tomorrow afternoon!"

Tearfully she gave her cousin the news in Lord Scroope's letter. Aimee stared in blank dismay.

"We have till five o'clock tomorrow," faltered Georgina. "I don't care what happens to me—there's nothing I won't do to save you, Aimee." Her face brightened suddenly. "I've thought of a way—"

"And so have I!" said Aimee eagerly. "There's just a chance—go on—let's hear your plan!"

"If we can keep the whole thing quiet till five tomorrow we shall pull through—with luck. Should anything turn up before then, to show that you're not here where you ought to be—we're done for," said Georgina, tragically. "My plan is this: You must go at once—"

A loud clanging interrupted her, as of a vibrating hammer striking a gong. It jarred horribly on the silence of the dark abbey. Followed the crash and tinkle of breaking glass, and the sound of a fall. A second gong spoke with a brazen tongue.

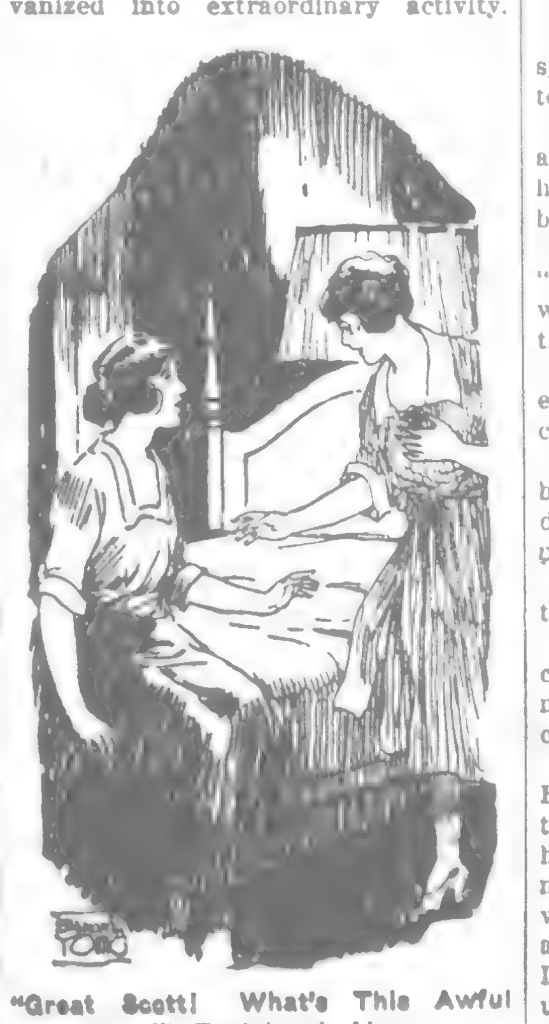
Georgina went very white.

"Great Scott! what's this awful row?" exclaimed Aimee.

Georgina pressed a hand to her bosom.

"It's—it's one of Lady Erythea's burglar alarms," she said faintly. "The house is full of them!"

In half a minute the abbey was galvanized into extraordinary activity.



"Great Scott! What's This Awful Row?" Exclaimed Aimee.

Swift running feet padded along the corridors. The squeak of a maidservant broke shrilly through the chorus.

Aimee and Georgina stared at each other open-mouthed.

There was a violent pounding on the door. "Are you awake, miss?" said an excited voice. "There's thieves in the house—her ladyship's jewels stolen! Keep your door locked till she comes to you!"

The speaker was heard retreating swiftly down the passage.

"That's torn it!" gasped Aimee, running to the door. "If aunt finds me here—!"

She unlocked the door swiftly and opened it.

"Aimee!" breathed the trembling Georgina, "don't—"

"I've got to get out, I tell you! I can't stay here!"

Aimee looked rapidly up and down the passage. It was all clear. She fled at an amazing pace, and, reaching the landing, was aware of a figure of wrath, very like Britannia, but holding a fire-shovel, striding toward her. It was Lady Erythea.

Aimee doubled like a hare.

"Stop that woman!" cried Lady Erythea. "Stop her!"

Aimee reached the head of the stairs just as Mr. Alexander Lambe, with a jacket over his pajamas, flew to intercept her.

"Stop!" he shouted commandingly.

Aimee, in full career, gave him a desperate two-handed push. Mr. Lambe's heels flew from under him, and he came down on the slippery oak flooring with a hearty thump.

Down the broad stairs, three at a time, sped the fugitive; in the lower hall the butler, his bald head shining like a comet in the gloom, rushed across the line of communications. Aimee dodged too late; the pursuer made an active plunge, and caught her by the skirt.

"I've got her!" shouted the butler triumphantly. His voice rose to a yelp as Aimee kicked his shins, but he held on inexorably. "I've got her!"

The Plot Thickens.

By sheer force of arrested impetus, Aimee and the butler spun round each other at arm's length like soldiers on a rank; something ripped loudly, the butler, shooting off at a tangent, collided with a suit of armor [illegible] the wall. The ensuing crash suggested an insurrection in a hardware [illegible].

Aimee [illegible] against the wall and [illegible]

[illegible]

ment she had vanished into the night.

Alexander rushed to the open doors and stared out into the darkness. He heard the sound of the hunt somewhere beyond the fir-trees. For a moment he thought of joining it. But the starlit gloom gave faint encouragement—pursuit seemed very useless. With a sudden impulse Alexander ran back through the hall, turned on the light, and pulled open the door of the telephone call room. He snatched the receiver from the hook.

"Stanhoe police station—put me through quick!" cried Alexander.

Lady Erythea descended the stairs, a superb model for Boadicea among the wreck of the Roman legions. Her eyes flashed fire, her lips were compressed in a thin, tight line, her hand gripped the brass shovel. She glared at the disgruntled butler.

"Tarbeaux!" she cried sharply. "Tarbeaux!"

Mr. Tarbeaux came forward, limping. One hand pressed a crimsoned handkerchief to his nose, which had impacted rather violently upon the good knight's breastplate. His other hand grasped a yard of torn blue cloth, which he waved before him.

"Did you stop that woman?" cried Lady Erythea.

Mr. Tarbeaux' inarticulate answer was in the negative.

"Why not, idiot!" said his mistress. "A houseful of useless incumbrances unable to stop a single—" The empurpled handkerchief caught her eye. "Why, what is the matter, man? Are you wounded?"

"Proud—shed m' blood—ladyship's service!" snuffled Mr. Tarbeaux. "Couldn't help skirt tearin', m' lady."

"What!"

Mr. Tarbeaux, with a silent but splendid gesture, laid the piece of torn skirt upon the hall bench.

"Clue, m' lady," he said, with the air of a bankrupt making the most of his assets. "With this it should not be difficult to trace the thief."

"Trace her!" snorted Lady Erythea. "If you had held on to her there would would have been no need to trace anything!"

Mr. Lambe joined them; his mild eye at once apprehended the significance of the piece of serge.

"I cannot see that Tarbeaux is to blame," he said in his aunt's ear; "he did his best, and after all it is unimportant."

"Unimportant! The infamous creature has got clear away!"

"My dear aunt! That stupid girl cannot have been the thief. You do not really suppose this burglary was committed by a woman!"

"Most certainly I do!" cried Lady Erythea. "I can believe anything of the modern woman—anything! She hid when the alarm sounded, and made a desperate dash for escape when I discovered her. It is as clear as daylight to anybody but a fool! It is certain she had my emeralds upon her at the time, and it is lucky none of you are killed—though it would be very little loss. Tarbeaux, did you recognize the creature whom you allowed so egregiously to escape?"

"No, my lady. It was too dark. And the incident was somewhat sudden," said Mr. Tarbeaux apologetically. "It was a young person—I am unable to say more. But I am sure she was not one of our household."

"I have telephoned the police at Stanhoe," said Mr. Lambe; "they are coming immediately by car."

"A gleam of intelligence at last! Thank you, Alexander—and forgive me—I am overwrought. My censure does not apply to you. The whole affair is appalling!" said Lady Erythea, clenching her hands. "My pearls, the diamond chaplet—these comparatively are trifles—but the emeralds are gone. The Lambe emeralds!"

The audience shrank before her wrath.

"It is incredible! Twelve years ago the abbey was broken into—this is the second case. I had taken every possible precaution, under skilled advice. My safe is modern; I considered I had made the house itself impregnable at night. So it would have been, had I been adequately served. What measures did you take, Tarbeaux? I was absurd enough to think I could rely upon you, in an emergency like this!"

"I retired at the usual hour, my lady, to my room in the passage," said Mr. Tarbeaux unhappily, "as I have done for years, by your instructions, in view of—er—er—an emergency like this. One of the alarms roused me; I rose immediately, only waiting long enough to don a garment—"

"Go on, man, go on!"

"While putting them—while putting it on, my lady, I sounded my bell, which connects with the other menservants' rooms, and ran into the hall. At that moment I thought I heard feet on the gravel outside, and unbolting the front door I rushed out—"

"Leaving an exit for any thief in the house to escape by!" snorted Lady Erythea. "Continue your brilliant narrative."

"I was in a house—and it was burgled. They thought it was me—and I scooted—they're chasing me."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

INDIANA BREVITIES

English.—A new Eastern Star chapter was organized at Marengo, to be known as Marengo chapter until the meeting of Indiana grand chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, in April, 1924. The chapter has 30 charter members. Its officers are: Mrs. Kate Waynick, worthy matron; Eldo Davis, worthy patron; Mrs. Cecil Byerly, associate matron; Mrs. Chloe Trunkle, conductress; Mrs. Sophie Miller, associate conductress; Mrs. Edna Waynick, secretary; Mrs. Nellie Turner, treasurer; Mrs. Nettie Eddleman, chaplain; Mrs. Rue Stewart, marshal; Mrs. Bessie Luckett, warden; Everett Hutslar, sentinel; Mrs. Eschol Miller, Adah; Mrs. Maude Walters, Ruth; Mrs. Edith Robinson, Esther; Mrs. Mayme Poe, Martha; Mrs. Lula Bird, Electra; Mrs. Vada Batman, organist.

Liberty.—Mrs. Emma Pouder, sheriff of Union county, raided the home of Hector Fields and arrested Fields on charges of manufacturing and unlawful possession of whisky when she found a still in operation. In addition to the still, Mrs. Pouder confiscated as evidence sixty gallons of mash, a half-gallon of whisky and other materials used in making liquor. Fields, who is an Austrian, has lived here 17 years. He is held in jail in default of $2,000 bond.

Shelbyville.—Twenty-two hundred boys and girls, pupils in the Shelbyville public schools, took part in the school music festival at the high school gymnasium. The chorus of children sang several selections together, the children of each building sang numbers, and those in each grade also were combined for numbers on the program. Selections were played by the band of the high school and the Boys' Glee club and the Girls' Glee club sang.

Valparaiso.—A number of owners of heavy trucks who have been arrested by Joseph Crowe, county highway superintendent, for driving overloaded trucks over soft roads have appealed their cases to the Porter Circuit court from justice of the peace courts of the county. Approximately 75 cases have been filed against truck drivers and in some instances the men have paid fines.

Terre Haute.—Richard Sachs, age thirty-three, who gave Indianapolis as his home, pleaded guilty to charges of burglary and grand larceny before Judge John P. Jeffries in the Vigo Circuit court. He was sentenced to serve from one to fourteen years in the Indiana reformatory. Sachs was arrested some time ago, when he broke into a physician's office in search of morphine.

Sullivan.—Charges against Harry O'Haver, Jr., arrested for taking from the mails and converting to his own use checks that were made payable to another man, were dropped when relatives paid off the checks that had been cashed. The checks had been made out by the Vandalia Coal company to Harry Ohm. O'Haver said that they had been left in his mail box and that the company owed him money.

Brownstown.—A post of the Spanish-American War Veterans has been organized, to be known as Camp Ralph Applewhite, in honor of Ralph B. Applewhite, who was captain of Company G of the Indiana state militia, which was mustered into service at the beginning of the Spanish-American war. John C. Branaman has been elected commander of the post.

Columbus.—F. L. Dusenburg, county boy scout executive, resigned at a meeting of the scout council. It has been decided to close the scout headquarters until means can be found for obtaining sufficient money to support the activities. Scout troops in the county, of which there are nine, will continue their work individually under their scoutmasters.

Greensburg.—E. J. Harbison, veteran of the Spanish-American war, has received notice that he has been appointed as marshal for the department of Indiana, Spanish-American War Veterans. The appointment was made by W. M. Louden, commandant of the department.

Terre Haute.—Two safes in the office of the Temple Laundry company were cracked by robbers and the contents, amounting to approximately $400, stolen. An unmasked negro bandit also entered the laundry of Moy Lee, drew a knife on Moy and robbed the cash drawer of $3.

Warsaw.—Dora Leifer has filed action in the Kosciusko Circuit court to break the will of William McMillin, who died September 16, 1921. She asserts that McMillin was of unsound mind and that the will was not properly executed.

Anderson.—Margaret Roberts, twenty-two [illegible] old, of Alexandria, was [illegible] divorce from Henry Roberts, who [illegible] alleged, had purchased [illegible] suit of underwear and an [illegible].

[illegible]—The city of [illegible] gave [illegible]

Marion.—Thieves continue their operations in Marion. Places entered were the Marion Lumber company, Barley & Spencer Lumber company, Clover Leaf creamery and the Chicago Glass Novelty plant. The thieves broke into the safe of the Clover Leaf creamery. A small safe in the Chicago Glass Novelty company offices was carried to a back room and opened. At the Marion Lumber company the thieves, after breaking the combination off the safe, failed to open it. At the Barley & Spencer Lumber company office the robbers worked the combination of the safe and broke the lock. Small sums of money and stamps were removed from each of the three safes opened.

Princeton.—The Verling heirs, on whose land two years ago the Central and Coast Oil company brought in one of the largest oil wells of the Princeton field, have filed suit in the Gibson Circuit court against the Vi-Car Oil and Refining company in an effort to keep the company from occupying or operating another lease of more than 100 acres, also owned by the plaintiffs. They ask a judgment for $11,000, alleging the holders of the lease have failed to produce oil and have damaged the land.

Shelbyville.—William Bass, former secretary of the Citizens' Natural Gas Oil and Water company, was appointed receiver for the company by Harry C. Morrison, judge of the Shelby Circuit court. The appointment was made on petition of J. Harvey Snider of Fountaintown, a stockholder. Stockholders of the company, at a meeting several months ago, voted to discontinue the business, dispose of all property and to make a distribution of the assets.

Shelbyville.—Rev. Samuel Caldemeyer, pastor of the First Evangelical church of Shelbyville and of Zion's Evangelical church in Union township, has been presented by the members of the latter church with a purse of $200 in appreciation of his work in Union township. Rev. Mr. Caldemeyer recently resigned the pastorate of the two churches and will leave April 10 to accept a call to the Evangelical church at Mount Vernon.

Logansport.—Jesse Apt, formerly an employee of the South Bend division of the Pennsylvania here, has brought suit for $12,000 damages against the railway company, alleging the partial loss of sight of one eye and the complete loss of the other. The plaintiff alleges that he was compelled to bale paper received from all sources and points on the system. He avers that while engaged in this work the poisonous fumes injured his sight.

Anderson.—At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Indiana reformatory held at the new reformatory site, near Pendleton, it was definitely decided to abandon the old reformatory at Jeffersonville on or before September 12, in order that the state may receive a $50,000 bonus from the Colgate company of New York, which has bought the old buildings and the grounds and wishes possession by that time.

Evansville.—Michael Helfrich, president of the National Sanitary Pottery company here, and H. Weaver, secretary, have gone to New York to testify at a federal hearing into alleged price-fixing by some of the large potteries of the country. Subpoenas were served on the men by J. H. Stickelman, deputy United States marshal. The men took with them considerable data on the industry. It is expected the hearing will continue for two or three weeks.

Noblesville.—Mrs. Mary E. Denny, who says she is the eleventh wife of Richard Denny, filed a petition in Hamilton Circuit court here against her husband for support. They were married 18 months ago, but lived together less than one-third of that time. The wife charges that Denny drove her away from home and threatened to kill her. Mr. Denny is a Civil war veteran.

Peru.—At a special meeting plans were laid for a campaign for money for the erection of two large additions to the Dukes Memorial hospital, which is operated by the Miami County Hospital association. The present building, which was the gift of Capt. Aaron N. Dukes, who is now dead, and was opened in 1913, is inadequate. It is planned to raise $150,000 by popular subscription.

Elwood.—The Elwood Masonic lodge, which proposes to spend $20,000 in remodeling its home, has engaged W. L. Nichols of Lafayette to make two sets of plans which will be submitted to the members at a meeting April 19.

Logansport.—The night school, conducted under the auspices of the Cass County American Legion, has closed. Five hundred were enrolled, of which number 390 completed the courses offered.

New Albany.—The Floyd county council has appropriated $4,900 for the repair of bridges over small streams on public highways in the county.

Winchester.—The People's Loan and Trust company has [illegible] it will finance a [illegible] club this year. Seven [illegible] will be offered in the contest.

MRS. J. MILLER TELLS OF GAIN

Declares Tanlac Overcame Stomach Trouble, Restoring Health, Strength and Weight.

"I am now strong and happy and go about my housework singing, so I think it is only natural that I should praise Tanlac, since that is what has given me such splendid health," declared Mrs. J. Miller, 119 Johnston Ave., Kearney, N. J.

"For a year before I started taking Tanlac I was simply in wretched health from stomach trouble and a run-down condition. My appetite left me, I was eating scarcely enough to keep going, and was often so weak I could hardly do any housework. My food often disagreed with me, and I would have suffocating spells and heart palpitation that nearly drove me frantic.

"My mother had been helped wonderfully by the Tanlac treatment, and when she advised me to take it I started right in. It has built me up five pounds, my digestion is perfect, my appetite splendid, and I am always talking Tanlac now. It is simply grand."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Not Entirely Artificial.

"I was deceived in you," complained the husband. "Your teeth are handmade, your complexion is artificial and your hair is another's. Are you wholly false?"

"No, not wholly," she replied. "I have a mind of my own, as you very well know."

And he was forced to admit the bitter truth of her statement.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Oyster 80 Years Old.

An oyster eighty years old has been taken from Delaware bay, it is reported. Scientific investigators agree and assert that the age of an oyster is indicated by the ridges or waterlines on its shell, just as the age of a tree is indicated by the annual rings that form on its trunk.

A ridge appears on an oyster every year, according to these savants, up to the fortieth year. After that the shell takes on one only every ten years. This venerable Delaware oyster had 44 ridges; hence it was eighty years old.

A FEELING OF SECURITY

You naturally feel secure when you know that the medicine you are about to take is absolutely pure and contains no harmful or habit producing drugs.

Such a medicine is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

The same standard of purity, strength and excellence is maintained in every bottle of Swamp-Root.

It is scientifically compounded from vegetable herbs.

It is not a stimulant and is taken in teaspoonful doses.

It is not recommended for everything.

It is nature's great helper in relieving and overcoming kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

A sworn statement of purity is with every bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

If you need a medicine, you should have the best. On sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to try this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Magnetic Indicator Used.

It is a well-known fact, referred to in Popular Mechanics Magazine, that drill steel, in order to be tempered for the greatest possible toughness and resistance to wear, should be quenched at the lowest possible temperature above the critical point, which is the point at which the structure of the steel changes. This point coincides with that at which the steel loses its magnetism, and advantage has been taken of this coincidence in the production of a magnetic indicator to assist the blacksmith in quenching his steel at the proper point.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

Of St. Joe News, published weekly at St. Joe, Indiana, for April 1st, 1923.
State of Indiana, County of DeKalb, ss:
Before me, a Notary Public in and for the state and county aforesaid, personally appeared Fred B. Leighty, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the Owner of the St. Joe News, and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business manager are:
Publisher, William S. Quance, St. Joe, Ind.
Editor, William S. Quance, St. Joe, Ind.
Managing Editor, William S. Quance, St. Joe, Ind.

Commission expires Jan. 7, 1927.

The party not in power certainly delights in running on the one in the lead. From a sheet sent to our desk by the publicity department of Democratic State committee intimates that the Republicans have the state of Indiana in debt now $4,000,000 and over, and that it is running behind $10,000 each day. If that is so and the Democrats lead in the next administration they will have a chance to show their metal in clearing things up.

The Board of Directors of the DeKalb County Farm Bureau met at Auburn in one of the most interesting sessions yet held. There were but few absentees and these were excusable. The program for discussion comprised about twelve different subjects, several of which had to be laid over until the next meeting.

GRAIN AND MONEY NEEDED TO KEEP THE NEAR EAST CHILDREN FROM STARVATION

Hundreds of thousands of helpless orphans and refugees in the Bible Lands have been saved, in the past few years, from starvation inflicted by the Turk. The greater part of these will die, unless America continues to feed them.

Prof. G. T. Christie of Purdue University, as chairman of the Indiana branch of the Near East Relief, appeals to DeKalb county to raise her quota of grain and money. Last year this country gave more than her full quota, and the state chairman feels that we can do so again.

Every bushel of corn, and every dollar in money, will be sent to its destination without one cent of overhead. Free rail and ocean transportation is assured, this with free elevator service, place a great life saving power in the hands of our farmers and others. One bushel of corn will save the life of a child for two and one-half months. What would one bushel be worth if fed into hogs?

The DeKalb county committee is composed of Rev. A. P. Bourns, chairman; County Agent B. H. Repp, County Superintendent of Schools Clarence Green, and George E. Beugnot.

Appeals will be made in the schools and Sunday schools the first week in April. Each pupil in the rural schools will be asked to give one bushel of corn, or its value in money. Heads of families are asked to give a bushel for each member of their family.

You are asked to take your grain to your nearest elevator, and to send your money to A. P. Bourns, Auburn, Ind. Announcements were planned for the Sunday schools and churches for Easter Sunday, and for the day schools for April 6th. This is the time for our American people to do something worth while.

No one has so far objected to husbands giving their wives all the "soul kisses" that they want to.

The only point in the discussion which the Germans seem to understand is the point of a gun.

The movement to banish unnecessary noises should have gained adherents since jazz music came in.

Present indications are that the American people are drinking in something besides the air of freedom.

The women are urged to be well groomed, but many are more anxious to be well bridegroomed.

The country has all the sex novels it needs, but it could stand a lot more cook books.

The girls are laying in their sport suits, but some of them have neglected to buy any working aprons.

The school pupils hope there will not be another war, as it would make another history lesson to learn.

When you see the young crowd doing the modern dances, you feel thankful that police halls are built to stand very heavy strains.

Some of the girls who got their hair bobbed last year, are now spending it on tonic to make it grow faster.

It frequently happens that the more a girl has on outside her face, the less she has inside her head.

Now if folks would pay their income tax with the same enthusiasm that they show in hollering for the flag, perhaps the government can avoid a deficit.

The kids have observed about all the special occasions, but Mother would like to have them celebrate Be a Good Boy Week.

The people may not pay much attention to the laws, but anyway they live up strictly to the baseball rules.

Public swimming pools do not necessarily teach everybody to swim, but they help dispel the idea that it is dangerous to take baths.

It is getting about time for the annual observance, with proper forms and ceremonies, of Beat the Rugs Week.

No strong popular objection is expressed when an automobile speeder is smashed by running into a telephone pole.

Although funds are said to be lacking for the proper beautification of Washington, the office seekers are all reported as willing to accept jobs there.

The farmers are said to have $3,000,000,000 more than last year, but how much they will have left after the Get Rich Quick salesmen get around is not clear.

Claimed the college students should acquire better penmanship, but as long as their letters home for money bring the cash, they feel they are getting all necessary results.

If a man can't find his Sunday trousers in these times, he may learn that his wife has carried them down to the hall to rehearse for the play.

Some people find fault because opportunity never knocked at their door. Perhaps they were so busy knocking the home town that they couldn't hear her.

That Saving Habit

Saving is a matter of habit. And the habit grows, just like the savings.

To acquire the habit when young with small sums is to practice the habit when older with larger sums.

So encourage the little fellows to start a savings account with us at once and watch the habit grow.

State Medical Head Praises Irene Byron

Considerable credit for the fight being made against tuberculosis in Indiana, was given to the Irene Byron Tuberculosis Sanatorium by Dr. C. H. Good, president of the Indiana State Medical association, in an address before members of the Indiana Tuberculosis association. Dr. Good said: "Up in Huntington county we are having most of our patients treated at the Irene Byron sanatorium at Fort Wayne, and believe that it is much better than building a hospital of our own, not only in the matter of economy, but in having our patients under the care of experienced men and specialists at this institution. All tell the same story, good food, good care, and in those sent early great improvement. This is a wonderful, marvelous work."

Dr. Good said that the Indiana State Medical association indorses the work of the tuberculosis association.

Dr. Good commented on the work of the association as follows: "In 1922 the deaths in Indiana were 2,583, 1-20th those that were killed in the World War, and yet when your organization was formed in 1904 the deaths were between 4,000 and 5,000. A wonderful achievement. You have cut the death rate in the nation from 200 per 100,000 to less than 100, and as was once said in battle, 'We have only begun to fight.' It is no longer the leader in Indiana, but is now third, most of which has been due to the work of the Indiana Tuberculosis association carrying on this great fight. And along with you I am proud to say the medical profession has united. This cooperation between the medical men and the laymen means much for the suppression of all diseases along the same line as tuberculosis. Both are doing their part and I am sure that we all feel like Schley said after winning the battle of Santiago, 'There is glory enough for all.' With the sanatorium and up-to-date methods of treatment, we are all glad that Indiana is just as good a state to cure tuberculosis in as any other. That the state and counties are all striving to obtain the care and treatment possible is an honor to both, for this is the hour of preventive medicine and that is the great achievement for modern methods, not only for tuberculosis, but all infectious and contagious disease."

Free Clinic

The DeKalb County Anti-Tuberculosis Society, will give another free clinic Tuesday afternoon, April 10, from 1 to 4 P. M., in the Court House in Auburn. Physicians are urged to send suspects or advanced cases. The public in general is entitled to the advantage of expert examination. If you are feeling badly, and do not know the cause, come. Dr. Jas. A. Stygall, of Indianapolis, will be in charge of clinic work. Examinations are private.

Find What CANADA has to offer YOU!

If your dream of success seems like a hopeless ambition, if you are discouraged trying to get ahead on high priced land, if your present location fails to give you opportunity, there is a new deal for you, a new chance in the fertile, virgin farms of Western Canada, where wheat produces 20 to 40 bushels to the acre, where the 1922 crop was biggest in history, where oats, barley and hay and fodder crops are the basis of a great dairy industry, and a man's work brings him success and prosperity.

Low Priced Land—the Last Great West

In Western Canada you still can buy virgin prairie land at $15 to $20 per acre, on long terms if desired, near to town, railroads, etc.—land such as has for many years produced the world's prize winning wheat, oats, barley, flax, rye, alfalfa. Canada had no "war time" land boom; prices are not inflated — you get in on the ground floor.

Taxes Favor the Farmer as Values Increase

The tax laws of Western Canada encourage the producing farmer. The tax on land is reduced when it is brought under cultivation—while on your buildings, machinery, improvements, personal property, automobile, there is no tax at all. A single crop is often worth more, acre for acre, than the cost of the land.

Rent Now—Buy Later Pay Out of Profits

Canada welcomes the industrious settler. What you have now isn't so important. If your capital is small, or you cannot sell your present holdings to advantage, rent a fertile Canadian farm and "try it out" for a season or two. Make a good living, increase your capital, and buy later. Farms may be rented from successful settlers on easy terms; in some cases with option of purchase.

Buy on Exceptional Terms—32 Years to Pay

For the benefit of those wishing to buy land a national non-profit sharing organization—the Canada Colonization Association—has been established with head office at Winnipeg, and United States office at St. Paul. This Association offers selected land convenient to railways—much of it at $15 to $20 per acre — on very small cash payment; no further payment until third year; balance extended over thirty years, but purchaser may pay up and obtain title at any time if desired. Interest six percent per annum on deferred payments.

WHEN NOBILITY BREWED BEER

English "Upper Classes" Proved Not to Have Been Dependent on Commercial Product.

Relics of "ye olden days" show that beer was brewed on their own estates by the nobility in very ancient days. On the site at present occupied by Hay Hill once stood a farmhouse belonging to the Berkley estate, which comprised the land upon which Devonshire house stands. Recent clearing away of debris in the fine old gardens has brought to light the old vaults belonging to the original farmhouse, which dated back from the late Tudor period. When Berkley street was cut through in 1600 the old farmhouse was pulled down, but only to the street level, so that the original vaults have been found preserved below the street. The brewing house has been cleared of debris. Brickwork believed to go back beyond 1600 has been found, and it is believed that the two mash tubs bearing the lettering "D.D.," now on view in the vaults of Devonshire house, were brought from the original brewery.—London Mail.

SCORE ONE FOR PERFORMER

Small Boy Must Have Retired From That Particular Encounter in Some Confusion.

At a point during the course of an address before members of the Caravan club the other day, Representative William D. Upshaw of Georgia had occasion to be "reminded" of a certain vaudeville performer whose imitation of dogs comprised the chief feature of his act.

"On his way to the theater in the small town where he was appearing," said the congressman, "the actor was accosted by a youth who wanted to know if 'he wasn't the man down to the Palace theater who barked like a dog.'

"'Yes,' replied the imitator, rather complimented on being recognized.

"'Gee,' laughed the boy, 'I got ya beat when it comes to makin' noises like a dog.'

"'That may be true,' snapped back the performer, 'but, then, you must remember I had to learn it.'"—Exchange.

What to Eat and Why
A Natural Supply of Vitamin

The word "Vitamin" is new, but the thing itself is as old as the human race. It is the energizing, vitalizing, growth-producing element in the right food. Its absence is a serious fault of the wrong food. When the food is right, there is no need to go to the drug store for Vitamin.

Grape-Nuts, the famous ready-to-eat cereal, supplies the natural Vitamin from the wheat, and a further supply is included in the cream or milk with which Grape-Nuts is eaten.

Grape-Nuts is delightfully crisp and [illegible], with a flavor which [illegible] suggests the wholesome, body-building goodness which the food contains. Phosphorus and iron, as well as Vitamin, with a bran content to stimulate intestinal action, are supplied by Grape-Nuts. Many of our modern, "refined" foods lack these vitally necessary elements.

Grape-Nuts digests easily and is assimilated quickly, and is splendidly nourishing and energizing. You'll find better health and fitness, in the natural way, with Grape-Nuts as a regular part of your diet.

There's genuine economy in Grape-Nuts—many servings of this exceptionally nourishing food to the package. At your grocer's—ready to serve. Grape-Nuts—the Body Builder. "There's a Reason." Made by Postum Cereal Co., Inc., Battle Creek, Michigan.

VINES ADD BEAUTY TO SURROUNDINGS

Climbers Make the Home Attractive—Do Not Injure Walls—May Use Trellis.

The impression that vines are injurious to the walls of a house, making them damp or causing woodwork to rot, is erroneous, says the United States Department of Agriculture. On brick and stone buildings some of the clinging vines are most appropriate and attractive in completing the charm of the home surroundings. On a wooden house the vines should not be permitted to become so thick that they prevent proper ventilation and timely painting, but hot sunshine is very destructive to paint, and the shade of vines helps to preserve it.

Vines Beautify Porch.

There are several devices for growing vines so as to permit removing them from the woodwork when it is necessary to paint the house. A trellis can be made with hinges near the ground, or a chicken wire placed over hooks at the highest point, so that it may be taken down, vines and all. Another type of trellis can be made of chicken wire on a pipe frame, which will keep vines entirely away from woodwork. Vines are also appropriate on fences, arbors, pergolas or summer houses.

CHOICE FLOWERS TO PLANT

Splendid Assortment of Posies That Are Easy to Grow Under Ordinary Conditions.

Easiest to cultivate under ordinary garden conditions are the following flowers, says the United States Department of Agriculture. In choosing any of these for a bed or a border, it is well to note the usual growing heights: Sunflower, where a plant over four feet is wanted; Joseph's coat, love-lies-bleeding, heliopsis, and prince's feather, for a three-foot effect; cornflower, strawflower and zinnia, growing about thirty inches high; about twenty-four inches, calliopsis, summer chrysanthemum, coneflower, gaillardia, marigold, poppy, and snow-on-the-mountain; about eighteen inches, mignonette; about twelve inches, Cape marigold, calendula, California poppy, balsam, candytuft, petunia, Drummond phlox, pink, dwarf nasturtium, portulaca, and sweet alyssum.

LOCATION OF THE GARDEN

The garden should be located in full sun wherever possible and this factor should receive first consideration when the location of the plot is being selected.

USE THE TRENCH FOR IRRIGATION

Scheme Conserves Water and Labor—Best Way to Reach Roots of Plants.

The proper amount of moisture is about as essential as enough warm sunshine, to produce a good garden crop. Too much moisture is worse than too much sunshine, for in the latter case the soil can be loosened, conserving what moisture the ground holds.

When the season is long and hot, with very little rainfall, the cottage gardener, if thoroughly interested, takes advantage of almost every opportunity to play the hose on his growing crops, thinking, of course, that he is doing just the right thing.

Perhaps more young plants are destroyed by shooting a cold spray of water on them than are killed or stunted by drought, or other reason.

One splendid method of watering a garden, when sufficient water is available, and its metered cost is not to be considered, is the trench irrigation plan. Small ditches, three or four inches deep, along the plants, with a steady stream of water slowly running into the ditch, will be highly beneficial, and at the same time conserve the water supply, by not sending it where it is not needed. The roots, especially in the dry weather, search for moisture and continue their downward growth. Long roots are advantageous to many plants, while others do not need them.

The ditch irrigation plan will be found most beneficial and interesting, if used as it is in sections where it is the only way—a series of ditches along each row or a small group of rows, then when the watering is being done, train the stream through one ditch to the other, until the entire garden is given a good soaking.

During a long drought, once a week will suffice when the ditch watering plan is used. The ditch may be closed each time after irrigating, or it may be left open. By closing, the water is practically sealed in and naturally the ground will hold the moisture longer and the top will not crust, necessitating immediate cultivation, such as is necessary following a heavy rain.

Turning Hose Into Ditches.

TIME TO APPLY LIME

The time to apply lime is in the spring after the ground has been plowed or spaded. The lime can then be thrown broadcast over the surface thickly enough to give a decided white coating on the ground. It is then harrowed or raked into the top three inches of soil. The lime should not be plowed under as its tendency is to work downward and by applying it on the surface the greatest benefit from it is secured.

Why, last Thursday night a passel of friends in human form turpentined my dog and turned him loose with yells of glee. The tormented animal tore down the street and right into the stone church where prayer meeting was going on, and as he went sliding up and down the aisle and howling in an unknown tongue his cries of agony were mighty high-drowned by the rye-bald laughter of the assembled hypocrites, led by the pastor. BANKER IS MANAGER OF COTTON GROWERS

Allen Northington to Direct the Alabama Farm Bureau Association.

"We are tired of spellbinders and hopefuls; the man who is to direct our organization must have made a success of his own affairs and the affairs he has handled for others. He must be a two-fisted, bull-necked he-go-getter." So said the Alabama growers of cotton when they formed the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton association.

Their next step was to reach over into the First National Bank of Prattville, Ala., and take its farmer president, Allen Northington, as their general manager.

Allen Northington, General Manager of Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton Association.

Mr. Northington has been general manager of the Alabama Farm Bureau Cotton association since it was organized, July 1, 1922. He has secured at interest rates of five and six per centum near $4,000,000 to finance the organization and make advances to its farm members, and has an untouched credit account of $3,000,000 with the War Finance corporation, and $2,000,000 with other financial institutions.

First the farmers were advanced 12 cents a pound on their cotton, then 3 cents more, and now preparations are being made for an additional 5 cents, bringing the total to 20 cents a pound, which will be represented in more than $5,000,000, and more advances are to be made.

The organization has sold more than 15,000 bales of cotton so far and the average price is above 25 cents a pound.

ANNUAL BUSINESS OF MARKET ASSOCIATION

Amount Placed at $58,500,000 by Secretary of New York Farm Bureau Federation.

An annual business of $58,500,000 was done by the co-operative marketing associations of New York State last year, according to figures received at the office of E. V. Underwood, secretary of the New York State Farm Bureau Federation. This amount does not include the co-operative purchasing done by the Grange League Federation Exchange, Syracuse, N. Y.

Three co-operatives of the state exceeded a total annual business of two million dollars. They were the Dairymen's League Co-operative Association, Utica, N. Y., the Eastern States Milk Producers, Syracuse, N. Y., and the Western New York Fruit Growers Co-operative Packing Association, Inc., Rochester, N. Y., showing respectively an annual business of $48,700,000; $5,000,000; and $2,500,000.

Forty per cent of the farmers of New York State are members of co-operative associations, of which there are twelve in the state of state-wide scope. They market milk and dairy products, potatoes and cabbage, seed potatoes, wool, maple syrup, fruits, and cattle. Over 100,000 individual farmers sell their products collectively through the co-operative associations

SUCCESSFUL HEALTH CAMPAIGN BY BUREAU

Much Good Accomplished in Increasing Amount of Milk Consumed by Children.

Greene County, Iowa, has attracted considerable attention with a successful health campaign recently put on through the co-operation of the extension service, Ames, and the local farm bureau organization.

County Agent, C. W. Davis, in speaking of the work, says:

"We are receiving many encouraging reports since the campaign of the good which it has done in increasing the consumption of milk on the part of school children. It has also done a great deal of good in bringing the matter of care of milk to the attention of people, especially in regard to testing of cows which are producing the milk. This is one of the most important results of such a campaign, for after all the protection of the children against the use of infected milk is of greatest importance.

"A summary of the work shows that members of the committees and workers traveled 715 miles, that 78 talks were given and that 2,556 people were reached. The number of pieces of literature distributed is 6,[illegible]. Plays were put on in several communities and others are planning on putting on such plays sometime during the winter months."

GOOD ROADS

ROADS PAY FOR THEMSELVES

Hard-Surfaced Highways Effect Big Saving in Maintenance and Gasoline Costs.

Tests made in many states to determine the actual cost of paved roads have shown that hard-surfaced highways effect such big savings in maintenance and gasoline costs that they pay for themselves in from 10 to 15 years.

The estimates were reached only after careful checking of first cost as against traffic, comparative maintenance on other type roads and exact experiments on the resistance on different road surfaces to motor vehicles from which the saving in gasoline is evolved.

Improved Roads Save Gasoline Bills.

Fred R. White, chief engineer of the Iowa state highway commission, in a statement issued recently said: "Highway traffic has outgrown the road. This is not the fault of the county engineer, supervisor or highway commission. It will do no good to fire the engineer, supervisors or highway commission. New men will be just as ignorant and still have the same problems to solve.

"Iowa, in highway matters, is in the position of the boy who has outgrown his clothes. It isn't his fault. It will do no good to scold or abuse him. The remedy is to get him a new and larger suit and also make allowance for his continued growth."

GOOD ROADS LENGTHEN LIFE

Prior to Construction of Improved Highways Farmers Led Comparatively Isolated Lives.

Anything which contributes to the physical or mental well-being of the individual helps to prevent disease to reduce disability and to lengthen life. Prior to the development of the automobile, and the building of our good roads, most of the inhabitants of our rural districts led comparatively isolated lives. The difficulty met in getting about the country, and the strenuousness of farm work, kept most of the farmers, their families, and their employees, tied down to the farm the greater part of the year. As a result of the monotony and constant toil, men and women exhausted their strength and energy early, became prematurely old, and were often incapacitated through lack of proper recreation and relaxation.

ROADS IN NATIONAL FORESTS

Government Has Appropriated $34,542,062 for Building Highways and Trails.

A total of $34,542,062 has been appropriated by the government to the states for roads and trails within or adjacent to the national forests. Total expenditures of federal and co-operative funds amounting to $22,216,724 have already been disbursed. To date, 4,786 miles of roads and 0,711 miles of trail have been constructed and 8,744 miles of road and trail have been repaired and improved, says the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture.

Machine Chucks.

A six-spindle chucking machine that is equivalent to an automatic screw machine for short pieces, for it handles five pieces of work with twenty-one cutting tools in operation at one time, is particularly useful for work that requires a number of separate and distinct operations. The machine, according to an illustrated article in Popular Mechanics, has six spindles, five of which are in an operating position, while the sixth is in an unloading and loading position. At the end of one cycle of operations, when a finished piece reaches this position, the machine automatically stops for replacing the finished with the unfinished piece.

Bird Well Named.

We are told that Pliny named the ptarmigan Lagopus owing, it is thought, to the close resemblance of the bird's feet to the feet of the hare; the legs being thickly covered with short feathers right to the very claws. This thick, warm clothing of the legs, increased in winter, is in direct adaptation to the need of a bird, most of whose life is spent on mountain snowfield or cold plains.

Doctors Plan "Black List."

Doctors in London are suggesting a "black list" of patients who go from one medical man to another instead of paying their bills.

Theory and Condition.

Blossoming forth from poverty to riches, Mr. Smith bought a motor car.

It wasn't much of a car, but he talked about it a lot. He always called it "my automobile." He tried many experiments with it, and was often seen reclining underneath it. This happened so frequently that Smith and his automobile became the joke of the neighborhood.

One day Smith was mowing his lawn when something went wrong with the mower. He sat down beside it to have a look at the machinery.

A wag, chancing to pass that way, paused.

"Good morning, Smith," he said; "is that your automobile again?"

"No," growled Smith. "It's my oughtermograss—but it won't!"

An Up-to-Date Young Feller.

Two high-school girls, short-skirted, bob-haired, bright-eyed and talkative, sat in a downtown motion picture theater while on the screen before them a story of love was unfolded. The central figure was a man whose chief distinction, outside his motion picture success, is that of a certain brand of trousers which once were named for him.

One girl sighed. She turned to her companion and whispered:

"Oh, Nell, wouldn't you just love to have a man like that?"—Indianapolis News.

Bible Thoughts for the Week

Sunday.
TEACHING TRANSGRESSORS.—Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.—Psalm 51:12, 13.

Monday.
VALUE OF A GOOD NAME.—A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold.—Proverbs 22:1.

Tuesday.
REAL PEACE.—Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.—Proverbs 3:17.

Wednesday.
PRAYER ANSWERED.—I sought the Lord, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.—Psalm 34:4, 6.

Thursday.
PRIDE A PITFALL.—Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.—Proverbs 16:18.

Friday.
LIKE PRODUCES LIKE.—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6:7.

Saturday.
CAN'T SERVE TWO MASTERS.—No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.—Matthew 6:24.

Missing Girl Located Here

Missed From Home Near Sherwood, Ohio, Since March 31.

Miss Alice Shumaker, 16-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Shumaker of near Sherwood, Ohio, was detained here at St. Joe last Thursday and held for Defiance county authorities, who took her back to her parents.

The girl left home on Sunday, March 31, on account of cruel treatment, she declared, and had evaded authorities until she was detained by Charles Koch and Marshal Harter. She had come to St. Joe on Wednesday night and stayed for the night at the home of Alfred Reasoner. At 10 o'clock A. M. she purchased a ticket to go to Garrett at 10:28, but it was here that she was taken into custody.

When questioned of her identity and where she belonged she told various stories, but finally admitted that she was the girl the authorities were after.

Marshal Driver, of Hicksville, remarked before he started back to Ohio with Miss Shumaker, that he would go the limit to see that the girl was better treated at home if that was the true reason she had run away.

The Shumaker family formerly resided on a farm on the state line near the Spencerville Road and neighbors declare that the child was mistreated there.
